Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Secretary Garrison's plan for the increase of the army provides for the formation of a first line defense of not fewer than 540,000 men, exclusive of the National Guard of the various States, at the expiration of three years, or by July 1, 1919.

The plan, which has been approved in its entirety by President Wilson, calls for a total of 140,000 men in the regular army, and the creation of a citizen force of 400,000 additional men, to be designated as the Continental Army. In addition, there will be available for the first fighting line in the event of war, 129,000 trained members of the National Guard, making a total of 669,000 men as the initial force available for service in the event of war.

Secretary Daniels and the General Board decided tonight that in the first of the five years comprised in the new naval program there shall be constructed two dreadnoughts, two battle cruisers, twenty-five coast submarines, five seagoing submarines, twelve destroyers, and that there shall be an increase of 8,000 men in the navy, and an addition of 2,500 Naval Academy students.

Under the Garrison plan the regular army will increase its fighting line 120,000 men, exclusive of non-combatants—the medical corps and other auxiliary forces—numbering about 20,000 men. The plan calls for ten new regiments of infantry, four new regiments of field artillery, fifty-two companies of coast artillery, fifteen new companies of engineers, and four new aero squadrons. Seven of the ten new regiments of infantry will be organized on a peace strength basis of 820 men to the regiment, but in the event of war would be increased to 1,865 men to the regiment. The other three new regiments of infantry will be recruited to war strength as soon as organized, because they will be utilized in overseas duty.

Under the Garrison plan all overseas regiments will be recruited to full war strength, while the units on duty in the United States will be maintained at peace strength. There will be three full divisions of infantry on duty in the United States, one entire division of cavalry plus two extra regiments of cavalry, and a division of field artillery. The remainder of the mobile army will be on duty in Hawaii, Panama, and the Philippines.

The feature of the Garrison plan is the recommendation that Congress authorize the creation of an army of citizen soldiers numbering 400,000, to be known as the Continental Army. These men will sign contracts binding them to serve the Government for six years. During that time they will be required to serve two months each year with the colors. During this two months the Continentals will go into camp just as if they were regulars for training and drills. While serving with the colors they will receive the same pay as officers and men of the regular army.

During the fourth, fifth, and sixth years of their enlistment these Continentals will be subject to call to the colors in the event of war or of threatened war.

The entire 400,000 Continentals will not be enlisted during the first year. One-third of them, or 133,000, will be enlisted the first year, 135,000 the second year, and 135,000 the third year. After the third year the force will be maintained at 400,000 men. At the beginning of the fourth year the 133,000 men who enlisted the first year will pass into the Continental reserve force and be placed on furlough for three years. The ages of enlistment will be from 18 to 28 years.

Secretary Garrison and experts of the army believe that it will be possible to enlist these Continentals at the rate of 133,000 a year without interfering with the industries or economics of the country. During the two months a year, in each of the first three years of their service, the proposed new Continental soldiers would be placed in camps for intensive army training. Abandoned and unused army posts and stations will be used for the training of the Continentals, and camps will be held two months each year during the Summer months.

It will require about 20,000 officers for the Continental Army of 400,000 men. Commissions will be issued to some of these officers and warrants to the others. It is the plan to obtain the officers from among those who have served in the National Guard, or who have served in the regular army, and also from civil life as well as from military schools and colleges throughout the country.

The army has military instructors on duty in most of the leading military schools, and while it is impossible for the Government to require the schools to

SCHWAB GETS CONTROL OF STEELTON PLANT

Pennsylvania Company's Big Works Pass to the Bethlehem Owner.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—Directors of the Pennsylvania Company met today and approved the action of Directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in disposing of its holdings of Pennsylvania Steel stock—the Steelton plant—to Charles M. Schwab. The greatest obstacle out of the way, nothing remains to complete the deal but similar action by Directors of the Reading Company, which owns stock to the par value of $7,092,200.

Announcement that the Reading Company has closed its part of the transaction is expected at any moment. The sale of this company's holdings to Mr. Schwab was arranged in connection with those of the Pennsylvania at a conference between Schwab, Henry Tatnall, Vice President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in charge of finance, and E. T. Stotesbury, President of the Reading Company, as well as a Director of the Pennsylvania Steel Company.

As a man close to the negotiations expressed it today:

"The only thing necessary to clinch the deal is the 'rubber stamp' of the Reading Company." This was taken to mean a virtual settlement.

The terms of settlement, however, are somewhat different from those said to have been proposed by the Pennsylvania Railroad, which offered its holdings on the basis of $100 a share for the preferred stock and $50 for the common. Mr. Schwab had until today to accept or reject the proposal. Difficulty in closing the deal resulted in a compromise, by which the preferred stock passed at $100, while the common was scaled down to $35.

The transaction was put through by Henry Tatnall, who went to New York last Wednesday and signed the necessary papers at Mr. Schwab's home.

It developed today that the deal had been planned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Directors. Mr. Schwab, it was said, did not appear as a buyer. The long negotiations, coupled with the fact that the common stock passed at $35 instead of $50, bore out, it was said, the report that the railroad took the lead in bringing about the sale.

Payment for the stock, it is reported, without confirmation, may be arranged through bonds bearing interest at 5 per cent. and guaranteed by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation. Each ten shares, or $1,000, of preferred stock of the Pennsylvania Steel Company may be exchanged for bonds of this denomination, while the same number of shares of common stock may be taken at $350 in bonds, the latter, however, not to bear interest for a period of five years.

Of the Pennsylvania Steel Company stocks controlled by the Pennsylvania-Reading interests, the Pennsylvania Company owned $9,058,300 preferred, and the Reading approximately $4,000,000, a total of more than $13,000,000 out of the entire issue of $20,500,000.

The common stock list shows the Pennsylvania to have held $7,388,900, and the Reading approximately $3,000,000, out of the entire issue of $10,750,000.

The stock of the Reading Company is owned through the Reading Iron Company, which operates blast furnaces, rolling mills, forges, foundries and tube mills at Reading, Danville and Emaus, Penn., and large bituminous coal properties in Somerset County, Penn. This company is capitalized at $1,000,000, virtually being owned by the Reading Company.

E. T. Stotesbury, it is understood, has made final plans for the transfer of this company's stock interests to the Schwab group. He was not in the city today. On his return a quick settlement of the deal is expected.

SUES MALONE AND LINE FOR LUSITANIA LOSS

Chicago Woman Who Lost Relatives on Steamship Says It Secretly Carried Explosives.

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—Charging that as a result of a conspiracy between Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port of New York, and Captain W. T. Turner, master of the Lusitania, there was a large cargo of explosives illegally in the hold of that vessel, Mrs. Sarah Lund of Chicago, whose husband and father were drowned by its sinking, today sued the Cunard Steamship Company, Limited, owners of the liner, for $40,000 damages for injuries suffered by herself in that catastrophe.

Her attorney, Frank S. Monnett, ex-Attorney General of Ohio, alleges in the bill of complaint filed in the Federal Court that Mrs. Lund was deceived into taking passage on the ship by statements made on behalf of the company that it was fully provided with safety devices, including lifeboats and rafts.

Mrs. Lund's mother was lost in the sinking of the Empress of Ireland. It was to investigate a rumor that she survived and, with her mind a blank, was known as "Mrs. Fitzgerald," at an English asylum, that Mrs. Lund, her husband, and her father sailed on the Lusitania.

SOCIETY WOMEN PICKET FOR CHICAGO STRIKERS

Mrs. Medill McCormick and Mrs. Ellen Gates Starr Defy Police While Aiding Garment Workers.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—Arm in arm, with girl strikers who were detailed to picket duty in front of the building occupied by the Royal Tailors, at Fifth Avenue and Polk Street, several Chicago society women, including Mrs. Medill McCormick and Mrs. Ellen Gates Starr, paraded up and down Fifth Avenue today while policemen and special officers hurried employes of the firm into waiting automobiles.

Mrs. Starr had an argument with a policeman when he attempted to force one of the girl pickets to leave the block which she was patrolling. The policeman tried to justify his action, but Mrs. Starr would not listen to him.

At the meeting of the Provincial Synod of the Protestant Episcopal Church resolutions were adopted urging the Social Service Commission of the Diocese of Chicago to investigate the strike and take action to hasten its termination.

For the third time during the strike gun-play was introduced today, when policemen fired several shots at an automobile which fled from the front of a tailoring shop following a disturbance. Five men in the automobile were arrested. They are accused of having attempted to intimidate a tailor, in an effort to make him leave his position.

The men arrested were H. F. Kessler, a department manager of the clothing firm of Rosenwald & Well, 508 South Franklin Street; Fred Berger, an employe of the same firm, and three men who said they were private detectives assigned by the O'Brien Agency to "protect" Kessler and Berger, but they could not elaborate as to the reasons for the protection.

TO TRY ADMIRAL FOR K-2 DEFECTS

WAS STATIONED AT QUINCY

Daniels Says Unusual Court-Martial Order Is Evidence of His Care for the Navy.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Rear Admiral William Nelson Little, a retired officer of the navy, is to be tried by court-martial on charges growing out of the alleged discovery that the construction of the submarine K-2 was faulty. Admiral Little was the Inspector of machinery for naval vessels under construction at the plant of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company at Quincy, Mass., one of which was the K-2. At the time of the alleged carelessness on Admiral Little's part he was on the active list. It was pointed out at the Navy Department today that an officer on the retired list is as much an officer of the navy as an officer on the active list, and as amenable to discipline.

The trial of Admiral Little was ordered today. In a statement on the subject the Navy Department said that the charges involved neglect and careless methods in the conduct of his duties while Inspector of Machinery at the Fore River plant, in connection with the construction of the K-2. The court will meet at the Boston Navy Yard on Oct. 18. It will be composed of Rear Admirals Bradley A. Fiske, James M. Helm, Wythe M. Parks, Walter F. Worthington, Albert Gleaves, and Herbert O. Dunn, and Paymaster General Thomas J. Cowie, with Lieut. Commander Alfred W. Johnson as Judge Advocate.

Admiral Little lives at 547 Riverside Drive, New York. He is in Washington tonight. He said he had not seen the specifications of the charges against him and declined to discuss the matter.

The statement issued by the Navy Department said:

The charges against Admiral Little have resulted from trouble which has recently been experienced with storage batteries of submarines of the K class—in this instance the K-2. The source of trouble in vessels of this class has been the subject of close investigation by the Navy Department. As a result of this investigation the department has been led to believe that the inspection of the K-2, while building at the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, was not conducted with sufficient care and thoroughness, and accordingly has directed that Admiral Little, who was responsible for the proper inspection of this vessel, be tried by court-martial.

Admiral Little's last active duty was as inspector of machinery at the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, in which duty he continued until his retirement for age on Dec. 31, 1914. The action of the department in this case of ordering the trial by general court-martial of an officer who has been retired after attaining the highest naval rank, on charges relating to duties performed prior to retirement, is somewhat radical and arrests attention. It can be accounted for only as an evidence of the department's determination that the inspection of ships under construction for the navy shall be conducted with the greatest care and thoroughness.

Admiral Little was an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Navy at the time when the corps was abolished by the Naval Personnel law of March 3, 1899, and its officers transferred to the line of the service. Under this law, officers who entered the navy after a certain date—one of whom was Admiral Little—were not permitted to exercise command of vessels at sea. Most of his duty since then has been in connection with inspection work ashore. He was retired for age on his sixty-second birthday, Dec. 31, 1914. He had attained the rank of Rear Admiral on March 26, 1913. He was born in New York, and was appointed to the navy from Georgia in 1872. In his forty-two years of service in the navy Admiral Little had an excellent record.

Officials of the Navy Department said there had been continual trouble with the storage batteries of K-2. Their investigation, they said, brought from Admiral Little a statement that when he passed the batteries of the K-2 he had an understanding with the Fore River Company that if any defects were discovered in the batteries they would be corrected at the company's expense. The officials said that the officers of the company denied that any such agreement existed.

Further inquiries in naval circles brought out details which gave a somewhat different version of the matter. It was said that when the K-2 was completed a question was raised by the officer in charge of the vessel whether some soldering in the battery cells had leaked into them or whether the soldering around the cells had been dropped there through carelessness. There was no way of determining this, it was asserted, except by operating the submarine.

This was done, and it was reported that the officer in charge of the submarine informed the Inspectors that the batteries worked properly. The conclusion of the Inspectors in charge was, it was said, that the lead near the batteries had been dropped there carelessly and did not indicate any defect in the batteries. The statement was made also that no defect was discovered in the batteries in the trial period of six months.

In one quarter surprise was shown over the statement of the Navy Department that Admiral Little had said that he had made an agreement with the Fore River Company under which the latter would remedy any defect in the K-2. It was said that there was no such understanding, and that the Navy Department must have been in error in supposing that Admiral Little had made a statement to that effect.

Battery Troubles Now Preventable.

QUINCY, Mass., Oct. 15.—J. N. Powell, President of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, tonight made the following statement regarding the work on the submarines:

"The storage battery on the K-2 was installed under the supervision of the manufacturers' representatives. The battery troubles which have been experienced were due to causes which have only recently been thoroughly understood, and it has required the most painstaking search to discover the reasons for the grounds in storage batteries, which can now be prevented.

"While the K-2 was delivered to the Government nearly two years ago, and some months before the present management took over operation of the plant, Admiral Little remained on duty as Engineering Inspector at the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation and the Electric Boat Company until Jan. 1 last, when he retired at the age of 62 years. My personal knowledge of Admiral Little's close attention to duty and the high standard of performance that he uniformly exacted leads me to believe that these court-martial proceedings are founded on a misunderstanding that will be speedily cleared up before the court."

Edith Cavell, Englishwoman, Put to Death On Charge of Aiding the Allies in Brussels

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The Foreign Office has been notified by the American Embassy that Miss Edith Cavell, lately the head of a large training school in Brussels, who was arrested on Aug. 5 by the German authorities in Brussels, was executed on Oct. 13, after sentence of death had been passed upon her.

It is understood that the charge against Miss Cavell was that she harbored fugitive British and French soldiers and Belgians of military age and had assisted them to escape from Belgium, in order to join their colors.

Thus far the Foreign Office is not aware that a charge of espionage had been brought against Miss Cavell.

DE FOREST TO AID AGAINST ZEPPELINS

A MICROPHONE DEVICE

It Is Expected to Record Airship Propellers' Vibrations and Disclose Their Location.

A middle-aged American inventor with an electric bulb will arrive in London this morning on a hurry-up call from the British Government to show Sir Percy Scott how the British capital may avert danger from Zeppelins. And when the American inventor has done his work in London he will cross the Channel to devise a system of protection from air attack for the treasures and the lives of Paris.

The inventor is Dr. Lee de Forest of New York City, who sailed last Saturday, taking with him his wife. He did not know until a few hours before he sailed that he was going, and to only a few intimate friends he told what his mission was.

Dr de Forest is the inventor of the Audion amplifier, an adaptation of the incandescent electric light, by which feeble electric impulses can be magnified to a point at which they can be registered with considerable force.

For several months England has used for coast defense a system of microphone detection against submarines by means of which the vibration of the propellers of German submersibles was picked up by microphones at sea and transmitted to a base, so that the approaching submarine could be located. This defense has been credited by London with being responsible for the destruction of many submarines. In this plan an instrument fashioned on the principle of the Audion was used to magnify the impulses recorded by the microphones at sea, but that form of Audion was not perfected to the stage of Dr. de Forest's recent inventions.

The effectiveness of the coast defense system suggested to the English authorities a similar plan for defense against invading airships. The success of the de Forest audion was brought to the attention of the British authorities, and they sent for the man who had invented it to come over and make their protective system work so that London could sleep in peace.

The detection system which Dr. de Forest purposes to work out is as follows: Several delicate microphones are placed in a geometrical figure, probably each on a mast. These microphones are equipped with audions, so that any vibration reaching them is magnified several hundred times, each of the audions being of the same recording power. The microphone on that point of the geometrical figure nearest the approaching airship will record vibrations of a greater strength than the microphone on the most distant point of the figure. The effect of the vibrations upon the intermediary microphones will, of course, be of varying force, according to the relative distance of the microphone from the source of the vibrations, the approaching airship. From the varying effects of these vibrations on individual microphones is calculated the line of direction of the approach of the vibrations on each microphone. These lines of direction when extended form the outline of an imaginary cone, at the apex of which will be found the approaching airship.

When the location of the airship has been determined, Dr. de Forest's task ends, and that of the aeroplanes and airship guns begins. It is planned to send aeroplanes out above the dirigibles after the location has been determined.

The audion, which has played an important role in wire telephony, wireless telephony and telegraphy, is based upon the sensitiveness to the most minute electric impulse of the rarefied air in an incandescent bulb when it is heated. The audion instrument consists of an incandescent bulb of a size depending upon the purpose of its use, into which runs an ordinary filament, terminating in two delicate cells, known as "grids," suspended between a pair of small metallic plates. The filament is for the sole purpose of heating the air between the plates, making it sensitive to very feeble electric impulses. The effect of the transmission of these impulses across the field between the plates, filled with heated rarefied air, causes a much greater current to be sent through the plates, a current supplied by batteries, but affected by the impulses received from the air.

ZEPPELIN BOMBS HIT CANADIAN'S CAMP

Casualty List Issued at Ottawa Shows Seven Men In England Were Killed in Attack.

OTTAWA, Oct. 15.—That the camp of the artillery brigade of the Second Canadian Division at Otterpool, Kent, England, was attacked by German Zeppelins on the evening of Wednesday is indicated in tonight's casualty list, which records several men killed in the Fifth Artillery Brigade and one in the Twenty-ninth Battery, C. F. A.

Last night's list gave the names of seven men of the Fifth Brigade killed by bombs and shells.

The number of Canadians approximates the total of military casualties issued by the home office in London, England, and indicates that this was probably the only real military damage in the raid.

ALLIES WILL SEEK MORE CREDITS HERE

Announcement by Lord Reading After Signing Contract for the $500,000,000 Loan.

ENGLAND CONTROLS BUYING

Half of Present Loan May Go to Russia, Which Plunged on War Supplies and Couldn't Pay.

Following the signing of the contracts for the $500,000,000 Anglo-French loan in the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co. yesterday afternoon Lord Reading, on behalf of the foreign commissioners who negotiated the loan, announced that it was planned to establish additional credits in this country for the British and French Governments. Lord Reading said he did not yet know what form the new credits would take, but that they would be of a banking character. He said they would be arranged within a month or two.

Wall Street had heard earlier reports of additional war credits, but no formal announcement had been forthcoming until Lord Reading consented to speak of the matter yesterday. The financial district has had unofficial reports that the new credits will range from $100,000,000 to $250,000,000. These figures were not confirmed, however, by Lord Reading or any member of the commission.

To effect future negotiations, two members of the Anglo-French Commission will remain in this country while the other members will return to their countries. Basil P. Blackett will represent the British Government and Octave Homberg will represent France. In addition, another representative of the British Government will be sent here soon to help Mr. Blackett. This man will be an official of the Treasury Department. Lord Reading said this new representative would not be Sir George Paish.

It is probable that all of the members of the commission will return to this country to take part in negotiations for the new credits. Lord Reading remarked informally that nothing definite would be done in regard to the supplementary credits until after he and his associates had discussed the situation with home officials. It was impossible to carry on negotiations by cable with the home Governments in matters of such importance, he said. The members of the commission will sail within a week, it was said.

Loan Contract Signed.

Lord Reading also announced that the proceeds of the $500,000,000 bond issue would not be used exclusively for governmental purposes. A part of the credit will be available for the use of individual importers. Lord Reading stated that the British Government would continue to sell exchange whenever it was deemed expedient.

The signing of the great international loan was consummated on the second floor of the J. P. Morgan & Co., building in the presence of a large number of New York bankers. There was great applause as the signatures binding a syndicate of American bankers to supply $480,000,000 in cash in return for $500,000,000 5 per cent. bonds were affixed to the papers. J. P. Morgan, as he signed his firm's name with a penny steel pen, laughingly said:

"Well, this is the first time I have signed for $500,000,000 even as an agent."

When the first copy of the agreement was signed Lord Reading said a few words commending the wisdom that had been shown in the management of the American end of the negotiations. He added:

"I desire to express our sincere gratitude. This is not an occasion on which I desire to make a speech. However, I do feel on behalf of the English Government that it is incumbent upon us to say that we are very much indebted to all who have aided.

"May I add that after we had given a close study to conditions here, after making ourselves acquainted with the difficulties of a transaction in this country, where the people were unacquainted with external loans, we sought advice, and it was given to us honestly and conscientiously, not only in the best interests of our own country, but, we believe, in the best interest of the United States."

Mr. Homberg returned thanks on behalf of the French Government.

Mr. Morgan replied, saying that any credit due should be given to the bankers who had been associated with the firm.

The work of signing the formal agreement was laborious. Although it started early yesterday afternoon it was not completed when the invited bankers arrived at 5 o'clock. All told, more than 3,600 signatures will have to be attached to the copies. There were 62 copies, one for each member of the managing group in New York, and two more for the Governments of Great Britain and France. Lord Reading, Octave Homberg, and Ernest Mallet signed all 62 copies, and the documents will be signed today, and on Monday by representatives of the sixty banking houses composing the New York group. One copy was signed in the presence of the Commissioners by Mr. Morgan, whose name serves to hold the syndicate.

There were sales of $116,000 of the new bonds on the Stock Exchange yesterday in the form of contracts for deliver, of which $79,000 sold at 98, the offering price to the public, and $37,000 at 97⅞. It was reported that of the $300,000,000, $260,000,000 were paid for yesterday and withdrawn from the syndicate by those who participated as underwriters in order to get the price of 96½ made to syndicate members. These figures could not be confirmed at J. P. Morgan & Co.'s where it was said that there had not been time for an accurate compilation of the withdrawals.

German Destroyer and a Torpedo Boat Are Sunk in Battles With British Submarines in Baltic

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 15.—A German destroyer and a German torpedo boat have been sunk by a British submarine or British submarines near the entrance to the Baltic in two separate engagements.

One encounter took place at the southern entrance to The Sound, a narrow strait between Denmark and Sweden which connects the Baltic with the North Sea. A great explosion followed the striking of the torpedo against the German craft, and the destroyer foundered immediately.

Dispatches to the evening newspapers here say that a second German torpedo boat was sunk by the British submarine E-19 near Faxe.

According to these telegrams, a German flotilla, one boat of which was sunk Wednesday, returned yesterday with reinforcements, and fishermen heard another explosion and saw a torpedo boat disappear. Thereupon the flotilla hurried away.

A message from Falsterbo, Sweden, which brought news of the first incident, adds that another German destroyer and a cruiser which were accompanying the destroyer that was sunk, ran away to the southward.

The information received here indicates that all the members of this destroyer's crew were lost.

Additional details of the first encounter were given in a subsequent dispatch. According to this version a German cruiser and three destroyers were engaged with the British submarine. The German craft moved in circles to avoid the attack of the submarine, which was bombarded heavily. This continued for some time until the submarine torpedoed the destroyer, which sank with a terrific explosion. The other German warships are said to have retreated. The submarine came to the surface and remained on the scene for some time before disappearing.

A sharp lookout from the Danish coast is being kept, but no survivors have been found.

Baltic Blockade Menaces Germany's Raw Material for Munitions

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 15, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—British submarines have now cleared the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnia entirely of German commercial steamers. Every German ship which was on her way south from Swedish ports when the submarine action started has been sunk or forced to run ashore.

Of a total of fifty German steamers engaged in carrying metal and metal ore from Sweden to Germany thirty-seven are now practically interned in Swedish ports fully loaded and have orders to remain for the present.

The scheme is to let a number of ships pass together, surrounded by German warships.

Germans have lately been gathering in a big number of warships in these waters.

If the import of Swedish metal ore stops, a dangerous situation will arise for German ammunition manufacturing.

GERMANS RETAKE A FRENCH SALIENT

ALSO WIN VOSGES HILLTOP

Burning Oil Aids Them in Their Successful Assaults on Hartmannsweilerkopf.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The Germans have inflicted defeats upon the French in Champagne and in the Vosges, according to their own and the Paris official reports.

In the Vosges, as the result of an attack on a three-mile front, they carried the trenches on the summit of Hartmannsweilerkopf and took two French observation posts.

As some compensation for their losses elsewhere, the French report the recapture of trenches in Lorraine, near Reillon.

German reports of trenches recaptured east and northeast of Vermelles, in Artois, are denied by Sir John French, who says the British hold all their gains of Oct. 13 and have improved their positions in the Hohenzollern redoubt.

This is the official Berlin statement:

Northeast and east of Vermelles the British have again been driven out of our positions. They have been able to retain only a small portion of a trench on the western fringe of the gravel quarry.

In Champagne, east of Auberive, Saxon troops took the only remaining French fortified position from which a great attack could be made upon our positions. We captured five officers and 300 men, as well as several machine guns.

During the night of Oct. 13-14 the stations of Chalons and Vitry-le-François, of military importance for operations now under way, were bombarded by one of our airships.

French Admit Two Reverses.

Bombardments were again violent on both sides during most of the day before Loos, at Bois-en-Hache, and in Givenchy-wood.

On the Lorraine front we have recaptured some elements of trenches which the enemy had been holding since Oct. 9 to the north of Reillon. We have repulsed several counterattacks. Fifty prisoners remained in our hands.

In the Vosges the Germans this morning made a very strong attack on a five-kilometer (3.11 miles) front between Rehfelsen, to the south of Hartmannsweilerkopf, and the Sudelkopf. This attack had been preceded by violent showers of shells of various calibres and big bombs, and was accompanied by the projection of blazing petroleum. The Germans were repulsed almost on the whole front of attack. They succeeded only in recapturing the trenches situated on the very top of Hartmannsweilerkopf and in penetrating two observation

FIGURES ALLIES CAN'T AID SERBIA

Major Moraht of the Berlin Tageblatt Points Out Difficulty of Getting Troops There.

RAILWAY IS INADEQUATE

Will Take Weeks to Transport 150,000 Men—Berlin Thinks Nish May Fall in Eight Days.

From a Staff Correspondent.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 15.—Germany takes great satisfaction in the eagerly-awaited speech of Sir Edward Grey in the House of Commons, particularly to the portion dealing with the matter of the Allies giving military aid to Serbia.

Major Moraht, the Tageblatt's military expert, discussing the Serbian campaign, comes to the conclusion that any help the Allies may send will come too late. He says:

"An Anglo-French expeditionary force would be of value to hard-pressed Serbia if it arrived in time to participate in the deciding battle, but this is most improbable. A single military train on the Saloniki-Uskub line could at most transport only one infantry battalion, a squadron of cavalry, or one battery. One infantry division, without supplies, would require forty trains, and one with supplies would require eighty.

"Even assuming no interruption to traffic on the two-track line, the military trains could not make more than fifteen miles an hour. It would easily take three or four days to bring one division from the landing place to the point where its participation in the fight would count. Even with uninterrupted traffic, day and night, it would take at least three or four weeks to bring ten divisions, say 150,800 men, to help the Serbians. Remembering that it is only 150 miles between Belgrade and Nish, that between them Bulgar and Austro-German armies, one realizes that the enemy's help will be most problematical.

"But it is most unlikely that traffic on this important strategic railway will go undisturbed. The Macedonian army is hostile to the Serbs, and knows the warfare of armed band.

"All in all, two conclusions result: Serbia within a short time must fight out its fight for existence. Meanwhile the Quadruple Entente troops will hardly participate directly in Serbia."

The impression here is that Nish will fall within eight days.

The newspapers take pleasure from both the tone and the contents of the speech of the British Foreign Minister, and are making the most of their opportunity to gloat over what they regard as the Allies' Balkan dilemma. The Tageblatt comments:

"His assurances that the interests of Greece and Serbia are identical do not dispose of the fact that the Greek Army is not joining Serbia and Allies, and that if the Allies want to help Serbia they must send an army. What Allied people do not want is a simple answer to the question, who will send this army and how strong will be the participation of each of the Entente Powers in the undertaking.

Sir Edward Grey was very reticent on this most important subject. His reticence is a new proof of embarrassment in London circles that resulted from Bulgaria's decision, and the elimination of Premier Venizelos. Grey emphasizes the close co-operation with France, but disinclination is spreading in France for any costly co-operation in the Balkans. The co-operation of Russian troops is promised, and that is the soonest available.

"A most interesting fact is that Italy is not even mentioned in the speech. Apparently he does not count on Italian co-operation.

"Sir Edward assures that the undertaking will rest on a sound strategic basis, but this, according to all the French and English experts, will require an army of at least 300,000. Have England and France such forces at their disposal, can they send them to Serbia, and when? Will France lay bare the defensive front in her own land, or will England alone fill out the requirements of sound strategic principles?"

Rumania to Stay Neutral; Is Guarding Her Frontiers

BUCHAREST, Wednesday, Oct. 13, via Paris, Oct. 16, (Delayed in Transmission.)—The Cabinet, after again going over the war situation, today made a pronouncement in favor of Rumania maintaining neutrality.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—Great Britain formally declared war on Bulgaria yesterday. The Foreign Office stated that, in view of the fact that Bulgaria had announced she was at war with Serbia and was an ally of the central powers, his Majesty's Government had informed the Bulgarian Government through the Swedish Minister at London, in charge of Bulgarian interests, that a state of war existed between Great Britain and Bulgaria as from 10 P. M.

It was also announced officially here that Serbia had declared war on Bulgaria because of Bulgarian attacks on Serbian armies on the Zaitchen and Radovitch fronts.

The Austrians, Germans, and Bulgarians are proceeding methodically with their invasion of Serbia, which, according to neutral reports, is costing them a very heavy price in the lives of their soldiers, as the hardened veterans of Serbia are taking every advantage of the difficult country to inflict the greatest possible loss on the invaders. According to reports made to Serbian Army Headquarters at Nish, the losses of the Teutons so far have amounted to 20,000 men killed and 40,000 wounded.

A dispatch to The London Times from Athens said the Serbians still held the heights around Belgrade at a distance of 1¼ miles from the city.

Germans Occupy Pozarevac.

The Germans, however, have been able finally to occupy Pozarevac, ten miles southeast of Semendria, about five miles from the Danube, and aver that their campaign is proceeding according to their plans. Following is the German official version of the latest operations, issued by the Berlin War Office yesterday:

The army group of Field Marshal von Mackensen is continuing on its course according to the prearranged plans. South of Belgrade and Semendria the Serbians have been driven back further. Prisoners to the number of 400, and three guns, one of them a heavy gun, have been captured.

The works on the southern front of Pozarevac were stormed last night, and the fortified town thereby fell into our hands.

The Bulgarian First Army has begun its attack over the east Serbian frontier. It took possession of the heights of the passes between Belorradjik and Kujazevic.

The Vienna War Office bulletin was as follows:

Austro-Hungarian and German troops advanced across the plain of Erino and Brdo and drove the enemy over the Bolicka Rivulet, which flows into the Danube at Vinca. German troops advanced along both banks of the lower Morava, and after fighting captured Pozarevac.

The Bulgarian first army, attacking across the Serbia eastern frontier, captured the passes and heights between Belorradjik and Kujazevic.

Bulgarians Tell of Fighting.

The Serbians last night attempted an incursion at several points in the region of Clu Bosgilegrad and Kustendil, with a view to occupying Bulgarian strategic points which defend the road to Sofia. Their attempts were frustrated. This afternoon our troops succeeded in driving off the Serbians, but in certain districts fighting continues.

The Bulgarian losses, as far as is known, were eighteen men killed and 190 wounded.

On Oct. 11 the Bulgarians made a surprise attack on us at Koritza and Glava. The attack was repulsed. The same day the Bulgars occupied the position of Kita and advanced two-thirds of a mile into our territory.

"On the 12th they attacked our positions at Ivmavora and Livadia, but were repulsed. The same day they attacked without result our positions at Pisuna, Boukva, Rasovati, Kanon, Virobouiasova, and Goleche. On the 14th they attacked the line of Tarvesnik-Kanengrad, repulsing one of our detachments. In the whole Timok River section the Bulgars opened fire on our positions. We made no reply.

"On the 14th they attacked various points Near Krivapalanka they attacked Ravnomlvo fort and also in the direction of Radiochevo and in the Strumitza Valley.

"Bulgaria thus began war against us treacherously, as in 1913, by surprise and without a declaration of war."

A dispatch yesterday to the Giornale d'Italia of Rome from Cettinje, capital of Montenegro, announced that the the Montenegrins had made such stout resistance to the Austro-Germans all along the front that they had been compelled to retire and send for reinforcements.

Troops Land Daily at Saloniki.

The Quadruple Entente Allies are perfecting their preparations to assist the Serbians and every day sees additional troops landed at Saloniki, where the French General Sarrail has arrived to take command of the allied forces.

The military critic of the Universul of Bucharest in an article published yesterday expressed the belief that the British and French troops would not go to the aid of the Serbians at Nish, which is 250 miles from their base, but would make a direct attack on Sofia from the Serbian frontier, thus cutting Bulgaria in two and also stopping the Austro-German advance by one of the principal railroads to Constantinople. The writer added, however, that the Anglo-French forces must be strong and that Italy must co-operate with them.

The political situation remains unchanged, Greece having formally announced that she would not intervene in behalf of Serbia "at present," and Rumania, although she is being urged by Germany definitely to state her position, not having yet done so.

150,000 ITALIANS TO FIGHT IN BALKANS

Intervention to Take Place at Point Where It Will Have Decisive Effect.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—Italy will send 150,000 men to the Balkans, according to information received by the Excelsior from what the paper says is a reliable source.

The Government maintains the strictest secrecy as to where the troops will be landed, says the Excelsior's informant, but Italian intervention will take place at a point where it will have a decisive effect on the whole Balkan campaign.

PARIS, Oct. 15, 6 A. M.—While there is no doubt of Italian intervention in the Balkans, the Petit Journal's Milan correspondent says the question now under consideration is how contact can be avoided between the Italian and German contingents if Italy's share in the campaign comprises the use of land forces, as no declaration of war has been made on either side.

It is reported that this diplomatic difficulty may be overcome by sending the Italians against the Turks or the Bulgarians or both.

TEUTON LOSS 60,000, SERBIANS ASSERT

Fear That Line on Danube Front May Be Pierced by German Reinforcements.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—Losses of the Austro-German forces on the northern front in Serbia have totaled 20,000 killed and 40,000 wounded, according to the latest reports received at Serbian Headquarters in Nish, says a dispatch from Nish to the Temps.

The dispatch, which was dated Wednesday, says:

"There has been severe fighting along the northern front. According to the latest report received at Serbian Headquarters the Austro-German troops on the Obrenovatz - Belgrade - Semendria-Gradichte front have lost 20,000 killed and 40,000 wounded. A wireless message from Oreovitza to the German Legation at Sofia admits great losses, and says that the Serbian resistance exceeded expectations.

"Another wireless message in cipher, which was interpreted and decoded, and which was supposed to be signed by the German Emperor or by Field Marshal von Mackensen, urged Bulgaria to begin operations against Serbia without delay.

"Despite furious attacks and against heavy odds, the Serbians are maintaining their positions along the Drina, Save, and Danube. The Serbian forces, however, appear to be seriously menaced by German reinforcements, estimated at four divisions, reported in the Delibiat section north of the Danube, and it is feared that the Serbian army which is heroically maintaining the Pozarevac front will be cut in two and thrown back toward the Rumanian frontier.

"Despite heavy losses the Serbians are prepared to make all sacrifices. They are urgently demanding that Anglo-French reinforcements be sent in time."

According to a Nish dispatch to the Matin the invaders have not advanced more than four miles south of the river at any point on the Danube front. The Bulgarians have been held in the Timok Valley, where a new action is in progress along the entire front.

Mayors of villages along the Macedonian frontier have been made officers in the Serbian Army, and have been instructed to organize bands of irregulars, who will be armed with Mauser rifles.

If Nish is seriously menaced by the Austro-German-Bulgar invasion it has been decided to transfer the Government to Mitrovitza, close to the Montenegrin frontier. Mitrovitza is the terminus of a branch railroad which connects with the main line from Nish to Saloniki at Uskup.

LINES TO SERBIA CUT.

Communication with Rumania and Russia Destroyed.

MILAN, Oct. 16, (via Paris.)—The Saloniki correspondent of the Secolo sends the following:

"Communications have been cut between Serbia and Rumania, as well as between Saloniki and Russia, as the result of the Austro-German offensive.

"The Serbians are expecting an attack by the Bulgarians between Guevgheli and Strumnitza, with the object of cutting the Saloniki Railroad and preventing the arrival of allied troops at Nish."

BATTLE NEAR GREEK BORDER.

First German Prisoners Arrive at Serbian Capital.

MILAN, Oct. 15, (Dispatch to The London Daily News).—According to the Secolo, the Bukarest Esta announces an offensive by 50,000 Bulgarians in the Valandova region near the Greek frontier. Desperate fighting is proceeding at Etnos.

MAKES THREAT TO RUMANIA.

Berlin Paper Warns Her Against Letting Russians Through.

BERLIN, Oct. 15, (via London.)—"Rumania must choose quickly and without hesitation," says the Lokal Anzeiger, referring to the report that Russia had asked for permission to march troops through Rumania to Serbia's assistance.

What will Rumania do in such an event? asks the Lokal Anzeiger, adding that if she imitates Greece and only registers a protest against Russia's marching through the Central Powers cannot remain indifferent.

BERLIN, Oct. 15, (by Wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—"Sofia advices by way of Vienna say that King Ferdinand of Bulgaria exchanged telegrams with King Ferdinand of Rumania on the first anniversary of the death of the late King Charles of Rumania, Oct. 10," the Overseas News Agency says. "King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, with representatives of the Bulgarian Government, attended a requiem in Sofia in memory of the late King."

GREECE TELLS BRITAIN OF HER NEUTRALITY

But Army Is Kept Mobilized to Prevent Bulgar Attack on Allies' Base.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—In a note to the British Government, received today, Greece announces her definite decision not to intervene in the war on behalf of Serbia at present.

In the communication, which is of great length, Premier Zaimis of Greece presents his interpretation of the Greco-Serbian treaty. He concludes with the statement that the present Greek Government is of the opinion that the treaty with Serbia does not call for intervention by Greece in the present circumstances.

Would Force Greece to Decide.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Times in an editorial this morning says:

"Almost every hour counts, yet the Allies are still without any clear or definite indication of the intentions of Greece. It is imperative that they should learn without delay if she is with them or against them. The hour is too vital for finesse or equivocation, as it is too vital for procrastination.

"The English and French forces have been sent to Saloniki on invitation of the late Prime Minister of Greece. They are there to support the cause of Greece's ally. The change, which King Constantine has since thought fit to make in the person of his chief adviser, cannot affect these facts. If the Greek Government contemplates the abandonment of the policy on the strength of which we were induced to dispatch our ships and soldiers to a Greek port we have the right to exact a clear, unambiguous announcement of this tergiversation."

MILAN, Oct. 15.—The Greek Government is co-operating with the Quadruple Entente by keeping its army mobilized and by this action alone warding off a possible Bulgarian attack on the base of operations of the expeditionary force. An Athens dispatch to the Corriere della Sera says that in exchange for this assistance the Entente will furnish Greece funds for keeping up its armaments and that the National Bank of Greece already has received a credit of 30,000,000 francs ($6,000,000) from London and Paris.

BERLIN, Oct. 15, (by Wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—"According to advices from Budapest," the Overseas News Agency says, "the Greek Army took measures to limit the space occupied by the troops of the Entente Allies landing at Saloniki. Thus, it is said, French telegraphers who attempted to establish a wireless station in a building in the port were forcibly ejected.

"It is stated in these advices that 35,000 Greek soldiers who have been assembled at Saloniki occupy all the buildings in the town and that the troops which landed were limited to the section of the port which is in Serbian possession."

ROME, Oct. 15.—It is asserted by the Giornale d'Italia that Bulgaria has notified Greece that she has concluded no treaty with Germany and Austria affecting Greek interests.

ITALIAN WAR CHIEFS TO CONFER AT FRONT

Minister of War Goes to Meet the King and Cadorna—Italian Gain on the Carso.

The official statement of the Italian General Headquarters, dated Oct. 15, says:

"The importance of the success obtained by us in Carnia on the 12th has been brought out by information given us by prisoners. Notwithstanding the forces employed by the enemy and the long artillery preparation the attack was broken by our steady and accurate fire at a considerable distance from our positions, which our adversary, despite all his exertions, did not even succeed in approaching.

"Enemy groups concealed in the wood region of the Lodinut Pass, at the head of the Chiarzo Torrent, on the 18th were subjected to an effective fire from our artillery and rifles and also were attacked by our patrols, who took a number of prisoners.

"On the Carso, during the morning of the 14th, our troops operating on Monte San Michele succeeded by a surprise attack in occupying an advanced position along the northern slopes of the mountain.

VIENNA, Oct. 15, (via London.)—The following report on the operations in the Italian theatre of war was issued today by the War Office:

On the Tyrolean front a strong enemy artillery fire continues. Italian infantry attacks have been made only against the Plateau of Vielgeruth, where several companies advanced toward our positions at midnight, but after a short, fierce fight, were forced to retreat. Renewed attacks in the early morning also were repelled.

On the Carinthian frontier and in the coastal districts the situation is unchanged.

Several sectors of this front have been subjected to a continuous enemy artillery fire. An Italian detachment which advanced to the border of the plateau close to Peteano was driven back with heavy losses by our counter-attack.

HINTS AT LEAVING GALLIPOLI.

London Daily News Voices Misgivings as to the Operations There.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Daily News in an editorial on the Gallipoli situation says:

"The Government has already a heavy responsibility in respect of the Dardanelles. The necessity for a decision as to the future will make it still heavier. The country has long been viewing the Gallipoli campaign with profound concern and in some respects with profound misgivings. The resolve to embarrass the Government by no open strictures is being honorably maintained. Its justification is in the confidence, which cannot be disappointed save at disastrous cost, that if a vital decision must be taken the Government will take it with eyes fixed solely on the necessities which the development of the war as a whole may impose. Not even the sacrifices of the past must fetter our strategy for the future."

BOMBS DROPPED ON MINSK

Where Czar's Soldiers Were Entraining—A Teuton Army Driven Across the Pripet in the Centre.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Russian official report received here this mornings tells of another Russian stroke in East Galicia, this time west of Tarnopol and north of the crossing of the Stripa, obtained earlier by the Russians. A flank attack west of Tarnopol drove the Germanic Allies toward the Stripa and inflicted heavy losses upon them, the report says. Tarnopol is a railway centre about sixty miles east of Lemberg.

The Russians have turned to the offensive in the region of Dvinsk, and although the Germans say that they have repulsed most of the Muscovite attacks, they admit that the Russians penetrated their line at one point.

In the centre, the Austro-Germans have been forced back across the Pripet River, according to the Petrograd bulletin, which says:

On the western front in the region of Dvinsk the fighting continues. In many places the artillery duels are developing great intensity. The general situation is unchanged.

In the region west of Lake Obole we carried by assault the village of Gavrantsi and the cemetery north of Stavareli Farm.

On the Pripet, in the region of the village of Nobel, the enemy was thrown back across the river.

During an offensive movement in the railway district west of Tarnopol, (East Galicia,) the enemy was taken on the flank and thrown back toward the River Stripa with heavy losses.

On the night of the 13th the enemy made the fourth attack of that day, charging with bayonet upon our troops in the region of the village of Halvoronka, on the Stripa, west of Trembowla. The enemy was repulsed by a strong counterattack and retreated in complete disorder to his trenches. In the same region the enemy also adopted the offensive yesterday. Our troops allowed him to approach within a very short distance and then delivered a vigorous counter-attack, again throwing him back toward the Stripa.

Army group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg: Southwest and south of Dvinsk the Russians made repeated attacks yesterday. South of the Dvinsk-Novo-Alexandrovsk line they were repulsed with unusually heavy losses. Two attacks northeast of Wessolowo also broke down. At a third attack the Russians succeeded in penetrating our positions over a width of one battalion. A counter attack is now in progress.

One of our airships dropped bombs freely on the station at Minsk, where large numbers of troops were entraining. Five loud explosions were heard and one large fire was observed.

There is nothing to report concerning the army group of Prince Leopold.

VIENNA, Oct. 15, (via London.)—The Austrian official statement says of the Russian war theatre: "There have been no important events."

CZAR TO DENOUNCE FERDINAND'S 'TREASON'

As "Chief Protector" of Slavs He Will Address the Bulgars.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—Russian intervention in the Balkans probably will be preceded by a manifesto issued by Emperor Nicholas as "Chief Protector" of all Slavs to the Bulgarians, denouncing what will be characterized as the "treason" of King Ferdinand in making common cause with the Austro-Germans, Russia's enemies. This manifesto, it is expected, will be followed immediately by definite action.

That the Russian retreat, skillfully exploited by German agents, was the immediate cause of turning against the Allies the sentiment of the Bulgarian people, who are intensely practical, was the assertion made by A. de Panafieu, French Minister at Sofia, to the correspondent of the Journal at Piraeus.

"The event coincided," he said, "with the visit of the Duke of Mecklenburg, who found a ready tool in King Ferdinand, a blind believer in Germany's victory. The Champagne success came too late to restore the balance. The Bulgarian people understand nothing of diplomatic calculations. They see only Macedonia to be conquered. Certainly if the Russian flag appeared at Varna or Burgas it might rouse memories in their inmost souls, but interest comes before sentiment. Russia, the great Motherland, will henceforth be far away to the Bulgarian peasant.

"Mobilization was a sad and dreary proceeding, without songs or cheers, vastly different from the heroic frenzy of October, 1912. Hundreds of German officers are acting as instructors of the Bulgarian armies, but they do not wear German uniforms, although a few Austrian uniforms are seen. Germans in Bulgarian uniforms organized the defenses of Dedeaghatch and the Black Sea ports and fixed batteries and anti-aircraft guns at Sofia.

"It would be premature to express an opinion about the possibility of a revolution for at least a month. The Bulgarian people are embarking upon a risky adventure without joy, but it is beyond question that if they find out they have been deceived they will seek out and punish the guilty. The rupture of diplomatic relations stupefied the Bulgarians. Even when we went to get our passports no one in Sofia believed we were going. We were treated with the greatest cordiality, and our journey to Dedeaghatch was without incident."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 15.—Extraordinary excitement prevails in Balkan circles here, composed entirely of sympathizers with the Allies. Secret intelligence from Bulgaria has inspired the feeling that a majority of the population, which undoubtedly is pro-Russian, may suddenly get the upper hand and overthrow something more than the mere Radoslavoff Cabinet.

Denies Russian Cruiser Was Sunk.

FOR REAL BLOCKADE OF GERMANY'S COASTS

English Writer Sees in Baltic Success Means to Meet Our Requirements.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—Commenting on the British submarine successes in the Baltic, The Times's naval correspondent suggests that they would justify the British Government in declaring a regular blockade of the German coast instead of continuing the policy laid down in the Orders in Council, against which the United States has been protesting.

The correspondent explains that the reason a blockade was not declared was that neither England nor her allies were in position to prevent the passage of contraband goods across the Baltic or in the Sea of Marmora. He then cites Mr. Balfour's defense of the Order in Council, published on March 29, and proceeds:

"Nevertheless the susceptibilities of the United States, greatest of all the neutrals and the pioneer of reform in international procedure, have not been altogether appeased. Yet there would seem to be no reason why they should not be. With British submarines able to maintain their pressure in the Baltic and the Sea of Marmora, we are in a position to make the blockade quite as effective as that which was exercised on the Confederate States during the civil war in America.

"A concession of this character would make no difference to the work of the fleet and would come at a propitious moment when the Germans have declared their intention to modify their policy in regard to the sinking of merchantmen."

ALLEGED GERMAN ORDER HINTS AT SHELL FAMINE

Tells Infantry That They Must Not Rely Too Much on Artillery Support.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 15, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—A divisional order marked "strictly secret," addressed to German officers and signed "Ditfurth," has been found on a German officer. The order states that it has been observed recently that the infantry limits its action simply to defensive firing, but does little so as not to provoke a reply from the enemy. When the latter bombards the German positions the infantry immediately calls for artillery support and manifests great satisfaction when the enemy attack ceases. Such conduct is emphatically condemned as tending to kill the spirit of offensive among the German troops and to convince the enemy of his superiority.

This comparative inactivity has certainly been put to profit in strengthening the positions, but this applies also to the enemy. All efforts should be made with a view to being able to take an early offensive, which will be all the more difficult the longer it is delayed, inasmuch as the enemy will be found more strongly intrenched and morally stronger. Commanders of brigades and regiments are urged to make a great effort to keep up offensive activity to the highest pitch all along the front. Instead of being subject to the will of the enemy, "we must impose our will upon him," and the troops must utilize to the full, day and night, all their resources and all their ingenuity in order to destroy the enemy. The artillery can only intervene in proportion to the quantity of munitions at its disposal, and the infantry will very often have to work alone.

Making Gas Bombs in Sofia.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 15, (Dispatch to The London Daily News.)—Many German officers and experts from munition factories in Constantinople have been sent to Sofia, where they have assumed control of the Government ammunition works and started the production of asphyxiating gases on a large scale.

GERMANS RETAKE A FRENCH SALIENT

posts between the summit and the Wuenheim Road.

Our artillery fire has torn up the German trenches and demolished two blockhouses at the Violu (between the Ste. Marie Pass and the Bonhomme Pass).

The French afternoon communication says:

In the Artois district there was a violent bombardment last night in which both sides took part in front of Loos and to the northeast of Souchez. There have been reported also spirited engagements with hand grenades in the trenches to the south of the forest of Hache.

There were severe artillery exchanges in the sector of Lihons, as well as between the Oise and the Aisne, in the regions of Puisaleine and Quenneviéres, as well as on the Nouvron plateau.

In the Champagne district our batteries have replied with great energy to a concentration of the enemy's artillery fire on our positions to the east of Auberive.

Along the front in Lorraine a French curtain of fire put an end, at a point in front of Letricourt, to a violent fire in which the artillery, the infantry, and the machine guns of the Germans took part. We have furthermore directed an effective fire against the works of the enemy to the north of Reillon.

In the Vosges there has been very spirited fighting with trench weapons in the suburbs of Chapelotte, to the northeast of Badonviller, and on the heights of the Linge and of the Barrenkopf. There has been also a violent cannonading at Hartmannswillerkopf and in this vicinity.

British Deny Losing Ground.

A British official report, received under date of 9:45 o'clock tonight from Field Marshal Sir John French, Commander in Chief of the British Army in the field, says, with reference to the German official statement of today:

The only change in the situation south of La Bassée Cana, is that we have further improved our positions in the Hohenzollern redoubt. We hold all the ground gained on the 13th inst.

The Belgian official communication issued today says:

"The enemy artillery has manifested little activity and has bombarded moderately our advanced positions and trenches to the north of Dixmude. Bomb fighting is reported to the north of Steenstraete.

SAYS GERMANS FORGED 'JOFFRE'S DRIVE ORDER'

Paris Press Bureau Declares Berlin Version "Unauthentic"—Swiss Version Better.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—The Official Press Bureau characterizes as unauthentic the version given out in Germany of General Joffre's order of the day before the battle of Champagne, as well as the latest version published in Swiss newspapers. The German account said General Joffre's order had been found on a dead officer. The Press Bureau states that there is only a slightest chance that an army order would be found under the circumstances, because officers do not carry such documents into action, but destroy them after reading them to the men.

The Swiss version is described as a better imitation of the style of General Joffre than that given out in Germany, but as equally apocryphal. It follows:

"Soldiers of the Republic: After months of waiting, which enabled us to increase our forces and resources while our adversary wasted his, the hour has come to attack, to vanquish and to add new pages of glory to those of the Marne, Flanders, the Vosges, and Arras.

"Behind a storm of iron fire, unchained, thanks to the labor of the factories of France, where your brothers have worked for us night and day, you will go to the assault together, over the entire front in close union with the armies of our Allies. Your impetus will be irresistible. It will carry you even to the enemy's batteries, beyond the fortified lines he has prepared against us. You will leave him neither truce nor repose until the completion of victory.

BERLIN, Oct. 15, (by Wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—The following statement was issued here officially today:

"The official French Press Bureau dares to assert that General Joffre's order, as published in the German Army Headquarters report of Oct. 8, was invented. German Headquarters states that there are several original copies in our hands. Furthermore, captured French officers and soldiers frankly admitted their knowledge of this order, copies of which some of them had."

The authentic text of General Joffre's order of the day, as well as that of his special address to the soldiers of the Republic, has been printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES. The text of the address to the soldiers was received by THE TIMES from Paris in the original French and was published in English translation.

PASSING OF DELCASSE DELIGHTS GERMANS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 15.—Not even Bulgaria's entry into the war rejoiced the Germans as much as Delcassé's resignation, which is regarded here as a political sensation of the first order. It caused particular satisfaction, as Delcassé is considered by the Germans as much responsible for the war as any one man could be.

The papers print column-long articles of his career. Georg Bernhard in the Vossische Zeitung warns against attaching undue political importance to the resignation, and says: "The hope is not yet justified that Delcassé's resignation indicates that French politicians are beginning to see the handwriting on the wall. One need not look for deep-lying reasons; nothing is more natural than that after the Balkan fiasco of allied diplomacy the Minister responsible for foreign affairs should be sacrificed, and if Sir Edward Grey follows at the heels of Delcassé, that need not cause wonder, nor special weight attach to the question whether Delcassé approved the landing of troops at Saloniki; whether he went voluntarily, or was pushed, or whether the Cabinet is now of one mind as to its future course. If the Viviani Cabinet wanted to stand before the Chamber and the country it could only do so by throwing Delcassé overboard as dangerous ballast.

"But, estimating Delcassé's going never so low, it still has a high symbolic meaning. This world war has at last caused the man to fall its victim who prepared and perhaps bears the greatest portion of blame for it. No one who knows the history of the last decade doubts that Delcassé filled the political atmosphere of Europe with those poisonous gases that finally in so terrible a fashion caused the explosion of July last year."

Theodore Wolff, editor of the Berlin Tageblatt, says:

"Delcassé, whom one must not underrate, sees clearly the political and military dangers of the Balkan adventure, but not for this reason alone has he resigned. It is safe to say that, cleverer than his colleagues, who are now saddled with the whole responsibility for coming events, Delcassé seized the opportunity to get out of a difficult situation. He was thus able to disappear from the political stage in the attitude of a man who foresaw calamities and warned the nation, while in reality he, together with President Poincaré and War Minister Millerand brought about the present situation."

HILL 70 LOST TO BRITISH?

War Office Official Gives Evasive Answers When Questioned.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Daily News says:

"The mystery of Hill 70 is not solved by the reply by the Under Secretary for War to the question by Annan Bryte, who asked whether the hill is held by our troops. Mr. Tennant said:

"'There has been a misunderstanding on this point. The message from Sir John French, which was published in the papers of Sept. 27, stated that we had captured the western outskirts of Hulluch village, Loos and the mining works around it and Hill 70. This was been read to mean that Hill 70 had been taken. If the words were correctly read it would be seen that the capture only of the mining works around Hill 70 was claimed.

"'The misunderstanding about Hill 70, as Mr. Tennant ought to be aware, unfortunately has not been entirely due to the misreading of Sir John French's communiqué. In a special army order issued by Sir John French on Sept. 30 and published on Oct. 4, the Field Marshal himself said:

"'After the vicissitudes attendant upon every great fight the enemy's second line posts were taken, the commanding position known as Hill 70, in advance of Loos, was finally captured, and a strong line was established and consolidated in close proximity to the German third and last line.'

"Moreover, the statement that the hill was captured was definitely made by special correspondents of the British press at General Headquarters in France, whose descriptions of the attack were carefully censored on the spot by the military authorities.

"When recent circumstances gave rise to strong suspicions that the little height was not held by us The Daily News was refused permission to repeat the published statement that Hill 70 had been lost, the reason given being that no official report that Hill 70 had been lost had been received."

BRITISH CIVILIANS TO RUN RECRUITING

Direction of Increase of Army to be Taken Out of the Hands of the Military.

WILL APPEAL TO ALL MEN

Various Organizations to be Asked to Co-operate and Every Available Man Approached.

SIX WEEKS' TRIAL ALLOWED

Conscriptionist Ministers to Push Their Plan Then If Results Are Inadequate.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—Recruiting is to be taken entirely out of the hands of the military authorities and intrusted exclusively to civilian organizations.

This, in a nutshell, is the scheme by which the Earl of Derby, Director of recruiting for the army, hopes to obtain a sufficient number of voluntary enlistments to render recourse to conscription unnecessary. He described the new system at a private conference with the Parliamentary Recruiting Committee and the Joint Labor Recruiting Board yesterday afternoon.

"The changes that I propose to make," said Lord Derby, "have not been necessitated by any shortcomings on the part of the recruiting staff, but by the exigencies of the present situation, which, to my mind, require entirely new methods of dealing with the subject. In the past recruits have been found by the military authorities, assisted by civilians. I propose to make civilians responsible for bringing raw material in the shape of recruits to the military authorities for them to enlist, clothe, equip, and train.

"This can only be rendered possible if some thoroughly representative civilian body be willing to make itself responsible for the work, and my most grateful thanks are due to the two bodies—the Parliamentary Recruiting Committee and the Joint Labor Recruiting Board—which have made themselves jointly responsible."

The much discussed "pink form" used in carrying out the national registration will be employed in canvassing, but Lord Derby declared the canvassing would be "conducted with the utmost tact and discretion."

All the existing recruiting committees will be utilized and the various municipal and civil authorities will be asked to co-operate. Every eligible man will receive a letter signed by Lord Derby, stating briefly the situation which makes an increase in the army necessary in order, as explained by Lord Derby, "that he may have a direct appeal and be unable to say in the future that he was not called upon to join."

At a recruiting meeting yesterday in the Viceregal Lodge at Dublin, which was attended by Lord Wimborne, the Lord Lieutenant or Ireland, and John Redmond, the Nationalist leader, it was decided that the Lord Lieutenant should form a department for recruiting for Ireland and he himself take the position of director, a chief organizer being appointed to work in co-operation with the military.

Earl Kitchener, Secretary of State for War, in a letter which was read at the meeting, paid a tribute to the bravery, gallantry, and exploits of the Irish soldiers. He expressed confidence from his close association with the country that the Irishmen would never leave them without reinforcements.

It was stated that the number of Irish recruits was 81,000, exclusive of those enlisted in England and Scotland and the Irish reservists who joined on the mobilization.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Daily News lobby correspondent writes:

"The Cabinet met yesterday and again considered the question of compulsory military service as well as crucial matters of policy in the Near East. It is understood that they have decided that Lord Derby's voluntary recruiting effort must have a fair trial for six weeks, and in this the conscriptionist Ministers have at least acquiesced. At the end of that time they hold themselves free to press for a compulsory system if the recruiting effort does not come up to their fullest demands.

"It must not be assumed that the majority of the Cabinet are pledged to adopt compulsion if Lord Derby's effort does not satisfy the demands of the conscriptionists by Nov. 30. Whatever the result of the recruiting campaign now inaugurated, the Cabinet will have to make a fresh decision in December.

"Lord Derby's speech, which was issued last night officially, reflects the present Cabinet policy. The Cabinet met in the morning, so that when Lord Derby met the Recruiting Committee he was able to proceed with confidence, having been informed that the Cabinet would support him."

KITCHENER MAKES APPEAL.

"I Can Only Do My Duty if You Do Yours," He Tells Birmingham.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Birmingham Post has received the following from Lord Kitchener to the people of Birmingham, with reference to the recruiting campaign in that city:

"I need more men and still more if the armies now in the field and armies which will in their turn proceed abroad are to be kept at proper strength. I appeal earnestly to all men who are able-bodied and can be spared to respond to the call, unless they are satisfied to allow the many lives given by their gallant fellow townsmen to have been given in vain. I can only do my duty by the country if you do yours by me. We must have more men at once."

RECRUITING IN JAMAICA.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Oct. 15.—The Governor and General have taken up recruiting as private individuals, organizing a recruiting campaign in every part of the island. Enthusiastic demonstrations are being held.

On Trafalgar Day, Oct. 21, an effort will be made to swell the funds of the Red Cross Society at the invitation of the Marquis of Lansdowne.

34 GERMAN TRAWLERS CAPTURED BY BRITISH

London Reports Host of Fishing Craft Taken Into Grimsby Since Sept. 15.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—That thirty-four German trawlers have been captured and taken into Grimsby since Sept. 15 is disclosed in an official statement printed in The London Gazette to-night.

2,000 TEACHERS KILLED

And 8,000 of 30,000 in the French Army Put Out of Service.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—Since the beginning of the war 2,000 French public school teachers have been killed on the battlefield and 8,000 have been put out of service, according to statistics given out today by the Ministry of Public Instruction.

The number of mobilized teachers is 30,000. Seven hundred of them have been cited in army orders.

WOULD HAVE CITY ALL ALIGHT

Blind Zeppelin Raiders With Glare, Says English Aviation Expert.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—London's whole system of protective darkening against Zeppelin attacks is wrong and should be replaced by a lavish system of searchlights, making the city one carpet of light, according to C. G. Grey, an aviation expert, writing in the Express. The best way to prevent an air raider from doing serious work, Mr. Grey says, is to blind him with a glare of light.

"For this reason," the writer goes on, "the proposed plan of sending up aeroplanes at night to attack Zeppelins is ridiculous because until the Zeppelin is lit up by searchlights the aeroplane cannot find it, and then, as soon as the aeroplane rises above the Zeppelin to drop bombs, it gets into the beam of the searchlight and the pilot is made helpless by the glare.

"I submit the following scheme for the protection of London: Divide the city into half-mile squares and in the corners of each square place searchlights, throwing wide beams vertically upward, the beam of each searchlight overlapping that of its neighbor. Thus London would be covered with a carpet of light so blinding that passing aircraft could see nothing below, while land guns would have a clear target in the lighted area above."

WOULD PREVENT MEETINGS.

Daily Mail Hints at Cause of Heavy Casualties.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Daily Mail attacks the Government in its editorial columns for not issuing an official warning when a Zeppelin raid is expected. It says:

"Possibly the authorities argue seriously that to give official warning would cause panic. Our nervous rulers are always thinking of panic. It is absurd, for the unofficial warning which everybody has instead of causing fear rouses a thrill of interest, and this is exactly where the authorities are not only stupid, but criminal. The absence of official warning and the absence of official orders that during a particular evening people are not to congregate, not only outside but, what is even more important, inside large buildings, is criminal because it increases a hundredfold the possible death roll."

ZEPPELINS FIRED AT BY DUTCH SOLDIERS

One Raider Returning From England Reported Hit and Badly Crippled.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 15 (Dispatch to the London Daily News).—All the Zeppelins which are believed to have taken part in Wednesday night's raid on London crossed various parts of Holland in the early hours yesterday morning on their way home, most of them being fired at energetically by the Dutch sentinels as soon as they were observed in the morning mist.

According to numerous reports, the Zeppelins seem to have divided on leaving the English coast, some steering toward Germany along the well-known Frisian Islands route and others making a bee line southeast with the apparent intention of reaching Belgium and thence coursing along the Dutch-Belgian frontier till they could reach their haven in Germany. In each case they missed their way, for all of them crossed Dutch territory at some point or other.

At 6 o'clock one was observed above Rosendaal coming from the direction of Bergenonzoom and passed across the Belgian frontier at Esschen. Two hours later another was seen from Schinnen, going southeast. This was plainly visible. Indeed, observers could distinguish two black crosses on it, together with the marking LZ-77.

At Nispen a Zeppelin came under lively fire from the sentries, who discharged more than 100 shots at the intruder before it passed out of sight toward Esschen. The effect of the fire could not be seen. At Sittard one Zeppelin passed over the pear-shaped strip of Dutch Limburg into Germany. Near Epen a Zeppelin was also fired upon by a Dutch machine. It rose and disappeared in the direction of Liége.

The intruders, who took a short cut across Holland in order to reach their lairs were also subjected to rifle fire. One passed close to Helder Point, Holland's naval base, and disappeared toward Vlieland. It was fired upon by a coast guard.

Two hours later a second Zeppelin suddenly appeared from the southeast and passed between the Islands of Vlieland and Terschelling. A heavy fire was directed upon it, and it speedily rose to a great height and disappeared in the mist, following a northeasterly course.

ROTTERDAM, Oct. 15.—It is reported that one of the Zeppelin airships which passed over Holland yesterday and bore the number LZ-77, was crippled by shots and disappeared toward the German frontier, moving erratically and apparently in great distress.

READY NOW FOR RAIDERS.

Asquith Intimates They Will Get a Hot Reception.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—Premier Asquith's faith in the ability of Rear Admiral Sir Percy Scott in charge of London's aerial defenses, to counter the raiding attempts of Zeppelins, based presumably on knowledge of preparations now making is evidenced by the answer in today's parliamentary papers to an inquirer who was anxious regarding the safety of Westminster Abby, St. Paul's Cathedral and other landmarks.

"It is hoped," says the Premier, "that the service presided over by Sir Percy Scott will deal effectively with any further attempts at indiscriminate destruction of property."

DUTCH HOLD UP WARNINGS.

Prevent News of Zeppelin Movements Reaching England in Time.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—How the regulations in the Netherlands prevent England from getting timely warning of the approach of Zeppelin airships is explained today by The Times's Amsterdam correspondent, who also refers to the "insolent violation of Dutch neutrality perpetrated by Zeppelins returning from a raid on Great Britain."

"The Dutch Government's regulations," says the correspondent, "forbid the telegraphing to England of any warning unless the Zeppelins actually pass over Dutch territory or territorial waters. When they are only seen from the coast over the high seas all telegrams are detained six hours, sufficient time to make a friendly warning to England impossible.

"Therefore, when going west the Zeppelins are careful to keep outside of Dutch limits, showing plainly that they can do so if they wish. But in returning no penalty attaches to a violation of Dutch neutrality. Therefore homeward bound airships exhibit a total disregard of territorial limits. Today they flew inside the Dutch northern islands.

"The Netherlands Government wisely avoids anything likely to provoke a rupture with Germany, but the feeling of the Dutch people is intensely bitter. I suggest that the British press and public should insist on an abrogation of the rule preventing telegraphic warning."

GERMANS AT HOME IN CZAR'S CASTLE

ANIMAL FOUND IN BACK YARD

CHATEAU KNOWN TO FAME

"Meeting of the Three Emperors" Was Held on the Estate 31 Years Ago.

By JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

SKIERNIEWICE, Russia, Sept. 6.—There is a rude American slang phrase, which implies that when you have figuratively speaking, got a man's goat you have deprived him in a manner at once unceremonious and decisive of something dear to him, and that in the process you have not only stunned and bewildered him, but in some measure made him ridiculous.

The Germans literally have got the Russian Imperial goat. It is wandering care free and comfortable on what used to be the Czar's favorite Polish playground—the hunting lodge of Skiernlewice—and German soldiers now occupying the place not only have got the goat but are making much of it.

Accustomed, apparently, in past times when courtiers were as common as stable boys at Skiernlewice, to having its every wish promptly gratified, the goat still emits the querulous and frequent bleat. At this signal, from one to three German soldiers instantly pay attention and minister to the goat with a solicitude which could not but be very gratifying to the former master of the lodge if he knew about it. As Skiernlewice has been utterly inaccessible to him since last Christmas time he probably does not know.

This morning numerous ribald correspondents from numerous more or less neutral lands came upon the goat in a bit of a back yard to the left of the avenue of grand old trees which leads up to the imperial château. Instantly the indecorous cry went up, "The Germans have got the Czar's goat!" Forthwith the pretty creature, which assumed in rapid succession attitudes aloof and unconcerned, skittish and inquiring, combative and supercilious, was photographed in all those attitudes, and all the photographs were labeled "Getting the Czar's Goat!"

After that Skiernlewice settled back into the dull decorum of German occupation and the sentries wondered what the mad "zeitungsleute" were laughing about.

Castle of Historical Interest.

I suppose more notable men and women—Emperors, Kings, Chancellors, Generals, and primates—have passed within the imitation castle of brick which serves for a railway station at Skiernlewice than have ever alighted at any other town in the world of equal size, but you might look on a hundred English or American made maps of Russia and not find Skiernlewice.

And yet here in 1884 was held the historic "meeting of the three Emperors" which was to have established the affairs of Europe on such a beautiful basis, and here have been held innumerable house parties at which the fate of empires was informally discussed by the men and women who held the threads of destiny in their hands.

From Christmas until the middle of July Skiernlewice lay within range of the Russian guns. It was the southerly point of that tremendous triangle of death which I visited and wrote about last Winter, and it was one of the points from which were launched the operations along the Bzura-Rawka line, from which the Russians fell back to the Bionie line only a few weeks ago. It is forty miles southwest of Warsaw, and in peace time it has a population of 12,000.

In the course of the December fighting the long, castellated railway station at Skiernlewice, where the red carpets for royalty have so often been laid down, was badly shattered, but it is now well repaired and scrupulously clean. The Czar's waiting room, however, still stands open to the glad sky and it will require numerous alterations in addition to a new roof, before he will care to use it again.

Among other things that will have to go before he comes back will be, I fancy, certain mottoes which German soldiers have worked out in various fancy forms and hung over the station entrance. They convey the following intelligence of a patriotic nature:

> WIR DEUTSCHEN HALTEN
> TREU UND FEST
> ZUSAMMEN.
> and—
> HEIL KAISER WILHELM DIR!

On a cask head which had been converted into a very presentable chield, the arms of the German Empire have been worked out in the national colors and encircled with a wreath of evergreen. This composition also is hung over an entrance through which the majesty of Russia used to pass. Everywhere are new German signs which give the distances and direction to points all along the railway line, and which warn the soldiers not to talk to strangers, especially women strangers, and not to drink unboiled water.

Everything to which a coat of whitewash could be applied has been so treated, and soldiers are setting out plants in bits of greensward at one end of the train platform. A little periodical stand where you can buy the latest German magazines and editions of German classic plays bound in paper covers has been opened, and the soldier whose train stops at Skiernlewice for a few minutes can also buy a good sandwich for 5 cents and a glass of beer for 2½ cents.

I set down all these details because they are so entirely characteristic of the tasks of repairing and decorating which the Germans set themselves in all the railway stations along the vast stretches of country they have occupied on both fronts. They are more methodical and thorough at this kind of thing than the Austrians are in the territory they occupy further to the south, and as to the French system—well, matters were more at loose ends at the railway stations in France a week after the war had begun than they are now in some remote little Russian village which the Germans have held for a few days. The difference seemed to me important because it spelled out national characteristics in such large print.

Boy Scout for Waiter.

And you can always depend upon a German soldier promptly to set the eating part of his quarters to rights. In the restaurant of the Skiernlewice station there are flowers on the table and a mannerly Boy Scout to wait on table and a menu that is amazing when you consider how far the food has to be transported. On the walls of the dining room are three pictures of Field Marshal von Hindenburg and two of the German Emperor, and one of the Crown Prince and one of John the Baptist, and of that selection I leave the theologians to make what they can.

Cleanliness, comfort, and low voices give a strangely sedate and well ordered tone to this place, where you cannot walk a dozen paces without seeing shattered walls and unroofed rooms and unglazed windows.

In the switchyards outside stand work cars, the roofs of which have long since been sodded over in order to fool the flyers. The grass is quite flourishing. Bearded German railway engineers—who also are an arm of the Government service, and proud of it—are manoeuvring long trains of flat cars loaded with ammunition wagons up and down the tracks, and as to these German engineers and German engines and German cars that one has seen so often and in places so unexpected, the old question rises to the lips, "Where does the empire get them all?"

Beyond the area in front of the station the switch yards are still a mass of wreckage. The town proper, however, seems to be unharmed.

The exterior of the Czar's château is unpretentious, but the lawns and gardens around it are lovely. The stretch of lawn that drops away into a sunken garden in front of the château has lately received a new embellishment, the permanency of which it will take a war to decide. It is a gigantic facsimile of a German Iron cross composed of foliage plants with leaves that are almost black, and the design is completed with foliage plants of which the leaves are almost white.

On the edge of the park rises the ornate lodge church of white and green and gold. There is also said to be a private theatre somewhere about the place, but we did not see that.

Still in charge of the château is the ancient castellan who was there in the days of the glory. He has the whiskers and the deprecatory air of "faithful retainer of the family" in an English melodrama, and everybody who looked into his shrewd, noncommittal, "I'm-so-humble-Mr.-Copperfield" face thought what stories he could tell. Guided by him, we wandered through the silent, linen-shrouded rooms of the hunting palace. In one the Emperor Franz Josef had slept when he joined the meeting of the three Emperors thirty-one years ago. Here was the Czar's bedroom. There was the Empress's. And here was her bathroom. Upon my word, it semed fairly indecent, this invading of the privacies of a deserted house.

But his whiskers prattled on in his polite, routine way.

Scene of a Grim Tragedy.

Here the Crown Prince Leopold of Bavaria had slept in recent days. Here was a door at the bottom of a stairway that let down and disclosed not only the tiny closet into which it opened but also the fact that the inner side of the door was upholstered and formed the bed on which the sentries of the Czar's bedyguard slept between watches.

And just beyond that cubby hole is the little withdrawing room in which the imperial family used to drink coffee after dinner. The castellan did not tell us the grisly story about the room, but a man of another nationality did. I don't know whether to believe him or not, but his story was that ten years ago a certain Grand Duchess was sipping coffee in that room when she suddenly fell back dead. The coffee had contained a poison intended for the Czar.

After investigating the Empress's bedroom, which was equal to any you would find in an old-fashioned American hotel that has come upon second rate days, we had no shame left, and so we all laboriously took a peep through the keyhole at the private chapel of the palace. This apartment the Germans keep locked. All we could see was a blaze of fresco and gold. It seemed to be the most splendid part of the establishment.

All the rest of it was very mahoganish, very satiny, very chintzy, very chandeliery, and reasonably tasteless—though one got the idea that it would light up gorgeously at night.

The sole genuinely artistic objects I saw were some exquisite little plates or tray enameled with miniatures of the most delicate design imaginable. For them alone I envied the Czar and I have seldom been nearer to temptation than when I was left alone for several minutes in an apartment where the delightful little masterpieces were strewn all about. It raised my estimation of human nature in general and of German human nature in particular to realize that ever since this palace was occupied in December by Russia's invaders those things had been lying there and had been respected.

I also noted the facts that in one deserted room after another fly paper had been hung from the chandeliers and that there is a big "wipe-your-feet" mat in front of the main entrance. The Czarina may rest assured that her palace at Skiernlewice is being well looked after in her absence.

96,899 BRITISH LOST AT THE DARDANELLES

Nearly 19,000 Killed, of Whom 1,185 Were Officers—French Losses Unknown.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—The total of British casualties at the Dardanelles up to Oct. 9, according to official figures given here today, was 96,899.

Of this total the number of men killed was 18,957, of whom 1,185 were officers. The casualties of the Australasian contingents were 29,121.

Announcement of the great losses of the British forces at the Dardanelles follows the sensational speech in the House of Lords Thursday night of Lord Milner, who is said to have characterized the expedition as hopeless. He suggested the withdrawal of the troops from the Gallipoli Peninsula and their transfer to some other front. Lord Lansdowne responded for the Government that it was impossible to give an undertaking either that the troops would continue in the Dardanelles operations or would be withdrawn from them.

The figures given out yesterday do not tell the full story of what it has cost the Allies to attempt to force the Dardanelles. In addition to the British casualties are the losses of the French, concerning which no reliable information is available. The British total, however, bears out dispatches from correspondents on this front, who have described the loss of life as frightful. In some instances, according to these advices, trenches and gullies have been choked with the dead. Turkish losses also have been described as very heavy.

TURKS REPORT SUCCESSES.

Tell of Recent Heavy Allied Losses at the Dardanelles.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 14, (via London, Oct. 15.)—An official statement issued tonight by the Turkish War Office says:

Near Anafarta we inflicted heavy losses on the enemy by the use of bombs. Our fire damaged an enemy aeroplane, which fell east of Tuzlagoel and finally was destroyed by our artillery.

Our observation detachments near Sedd-El-Bahr inflicted heavy losses on the enemy's right wing after a surprise attack with hand grenades Tuesday night. A mine exploded before his left wing destroyed a considerable part of the enemy's trenches.

Enemy torpedo boats and coast batteries vainly bombarded our artillery. Near Sedd-El-Bahr our artillery forced torpedo boats, which were bombarding our left wing, to leave the Narrows.

ENGLAND CAN PAY IF PEOPLE WILL SAVE

Sir George Paish, Confident of Nation's Power, Emphasizes the Need of Economy.

A DIFFICULTY FOR BRITONS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Sir George Paish, editor of The Statist, commenting today on the speech in Parliament Wednesday by Mr. Montagu, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, in which he foreshadowed sweeping measures to obtain funds for the prosecution of the war, said:

"The speech of the Financial Secretary to the Treasury is being much discussed. No one acquainted with the financial strength of Great Britain can doubt her power to maintain her great war expenses and to continue her valuable financial assistance to her allies, provided, of course, that her financial strength is husbanded and exerted in a manner that will yield the greatest advantage.

"An important part of that financial strength consists in the freedom with which money is spent in England in normal times, after provision is made for the capital needs of the country and for the great sums of money lent to foreign nations.

"Since the war began the country as a whole has maintained, and probably somewhat increased, its expenditures on the everyday things of life, and at the same time the Government has spent great sums upon munitions of war. The expenditures have, however, become so vast that some reduction in the domestic expenditures of the nation are now essential, and measures need to be taken to bring this about.

"The Government hoped to accomplish this by inducing the public voluntarily to reduce their domestic expenditures and to place the money saved in war loans, and it has been necessary to instruct the public as to the economic and financial consequences accruing to a nation that spends too freely and as to the need to provide for the war by economy.

"So far the British people have found the task of changing their habits and customs extraordinary difficult, for hitherto they regarded the generous expenditure of money for domestic purposes as a virtue, and it is difficult for the great mass of the people, now receiving high wages, to regard it from any other standpoint.

"Mr. Montagu's speech indicates that the Government is now realizing that other steps are called for, and, consequently, I anticipate that the great financial reserves, which the British people possess in their ability to reduce their generous domestic expenditures to the extent needed to meet their war expenses, will be brought into play.

"Of course, if the British people can borrow in the United States or elsewhere some of the money they require, they will not need to reduce their consumption as much as otherwise would be necessary. Indeed, the loan which the American people have so generously supplied to France and Great Britain will greatly assist the British and French people to maintain their purchases of American goods.

"A moderate contraction in consumption would set free more British goods for export, and this would give us greater power to make remittances abroad in order to pay for goods imported.

"Now that the Government is realizing that voluntary economy is practically impossible to the free-spending Englishman, and is preparing measures to meet the present situation, one can look forward with confidence to the maintenance of foreign exchanges, especially having regard to the valuable and friendly assistance of the American people and of American bankers."

CALLS FOR UNITED ENGLAND

Choice Must Be Made Between Brotherhood or Death, Says Express

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Daily Express prints a double-column editorial entitled "An Appeal for Unity."

"We are faced," it says, "by the greatest peril that has come to us since Great Britain became a nation, and we are fighting an enemy fanatic in his purpose, strong in numbers and equipment, desperate in his resolve to conquer at all costs, and absolutely united in his devotion to the common cause. Strength can only be overcome by strength, resolution by resolution, unity by unity. Yet at this crisis, awful in its danger, inspiring in its possibility, the nation is rent and weakened by controversy, intrigue, and disagreement.

"We are forgetting the brotherhood of a year ago in petty selfish discussions, and unless we swiftly repent we shall ensure defeat and shameful national death. There can be no doubt of this. All history and all experience teach that there can be no hope for a people who wrangle and quarrel with the enemy at the gate.

"We appeal to the nation that is harassed and bewildered by the splutter of controversy; we appeal to all men of good intent. The destinies of the empire may be settled within the next few weeks. Is it to be brotherhood or death? The nation is eager for any and every sacrifice; it is waiting for marching orders. Unless those orders are given boldly and at once, unless there is an immediate call to forget everything but England, and what England means, then her glory, her happiness, and her prosperity will soon be a mere memory, and 'Weighed in balance and found wanting' will be the epitaph of the British Empire. The country is united; it looks to its leaders to be equally united, resolved and enthusiastic in the pursuit of victory."

ALLIES WILL SEEK MORE CREDITS HERE

Morgan & Co. made this statement concerning the temporary receipts as bank collateral:

It is understood that an impression is current that it is impossible to borrow on the participation receipts in the Anglo-French loan. This is absolutely erroneous. The receipts are not transferable without the consent of the syndicate managers, but upon request J. P. Morgan & Co. will give a letter to any bank recognizing an assignment for the purposes of a loan.

The British Commissioners have abandoned the trip to Canada and will sail for home within a few days.

"Of the millions of dollars spent daily in this country by the Allies for war supplies, not a dollar, it was learned authoritatively today, can be spent without first obtaining the official sanction of the British Government.

"This sanction is obtained from a committee sitting in London and holding frequent sessions. Although the committee has been in operation for many months, its existence has not heretofore been generally known outside of Governmental circles. Only once, so far as can be learned—and then in the case of Russia—has the mandate of this body been disregarded.

"The personnel of this committee has never been published and probably never will be. It consists, however, of representatives of each of the allied nations from Great Britain to Montenegro, controls absolutely the purchase of all war supplies in whatever section of the world they may be brought, acts as a financial check and supervisor over all the war chests of all the Allies, and seeks to eliminate positively competitive bidding on the part of the Allies for war supplies in the free open markets of the world, first of all, in the United States.

"Over purchases made in home markets by the various nations, the committee holds no supervision. Its sphere is limited strictly to purhases outside the boundary lines of the nations at war and their colonies.

"The committee is designated by a French title, the English translation of which is 'The International War Supplies Committee.'

Avoids Competitive Bidding.

"Under its guidance Great Britain, France, Russia, and Italy, in seeking munitions of war in the United States, and other supplies, refrain from competitive bidding. Such competition, if permitted, the committee realized early in its career, would result in sending prices of munitions and other supplies to prohibitive levels and would consequently swell the cost of conducting the war proportionately. Instead of coming into the American market when supplies are needed and waging a financial contest for supremacy in obtaining the supplies, the Allies have adopted a system of placing one big order at a time in this country. When the contract for this order is signed the next allied nation's needs are taken up and another contract is placed. This system is maintained until all the allied nations purchasing supplies here are cared for.

"The committee's scope extends to the purchase not only of ammunition and firearms, but to all supplies needed for allied armies in the field and the allied navies which are incapable of being supplied in Europe. Grain, flour, clothing, meats, blankets, boots, shoes, and the long list of minor articles used by the allied armies are embraced in the purchases over which jurisdiction is exercised.

"Great Britain, as banker for the Allies, dominates this committee. British purchases, where convenient, are made in this country without consulting the committee. Only in the most perfunctory way does the committee keep track of the British supplies bought here. Another department of the Government attends to this.

Britain Finances Its Allies.

"One of the chief functions of the British members of the committee is to act as a mouthpiece of the British treasury in allotting to the other allied nations the amounts advanced by Great Britain to them for the purchase of war supplies in this country. Each country is financed to a certain extent—in the case of Russia almost wholly—by Great Britain. The British members of the committee advise the representatives of other nations thereon just how much Great Britain will permit them to spend at stated intervals, how much they will be permitted to contract for in the United States with the British guarantee of payment, and how the money shall be spent.

"The only time the committee's plan failed of operation was about six months ago, and the effects of the failure have not yet been eradicated. This was in connection with purchases by Russia in the United States.

"Russia had been notified by the British members of the committee that she might spend a certain sum of money for war supplies in this country. The sum was not disclosed today, but it is believed to have been between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000. Whether the allotment was fully understood by the Russian Government is not known; but what Russia did was to spend the sum allotted, and, in addition, make huge commitments in this country for further supplies. These commitments, covering many months, were said to run into the hundreds of millions of dollars—a sum in excess of the amount allotted her by the British Government.

Embarrassed by Russia.

"In making these contracts, apparently, Russia failed to consult the committee. When the contracts came due, in part, Russia had insufficient funds to meet them, and the committee, not having authorized the making of the contracts, had to devise quickly some method of paying the bills. This was extremely difficult, and the demoralization of the foreign exchange markets in this country recently was attributed in no small measure to this cause.

"Since that time Russia has adhered strictly to the wishes of the committee. Not a dollar's worth of war supplies is purchased by her in this country without the committee's approval. In return Great Britain is paying her bills here. Not only these bills, but those of Italy and, more recently, France are being paid today by Great Britain.

"A single financial house—J. P. Morgan & Co.—acts as the disbursing agency of the British Government in this country. Its disbursements are understood to cover payments of all goods purchased for the allies here. Great Britain keeps a record of the amounts which her Allies draw against her, and separate agreements between the British Government and those of the other Allies provide for a settling of the score among the Allies. The $500,000,000 Anglo-French credit loan just negotiated, it is said, will provide payment for a large quantity of goods purchased here for Russia, but the bill will go to England. Some experts estimate that as much as half of the loan, or $250,000,000, may be used in paying for supplies for Russia, chiefly for supplies for which contracted without the knowledge of the International Committee."

WOMEN ENVOYS URGE NEUTRALS TO MEET

Report Belligerents Would Not Oppose a Conference and Quote High Officials.

OTHERS WAIT FOR US TO ACT

International Committee Issues a Manifesto—Believes Three European Neutrals Ready.

The International Committee of Women for Permanent Peace in a formal statement made public yesterday said that the nations now engaged in war would look without disfavor upon a conference of the neutral nations as a possible medium for the settlement of the conflict, and that the neutral nations of Europe were prepared for such a conference provided they could get the co-operation of the United States. Dr. Aletta Jacobs of Holland, who called the Women's Peace Congress at The Hague, and who sailed from this city on Oct. 5, took with her copies of this declaration to be made public in Amsterdam simultaneously with the announcement here.

The International Congress of Women, which met at The Hague last April, appointed two groups of envoys, one to the belligerent Governments, and to Holland and Switzerland; the other to Russia and the Scandinavian countries. The reports of these embassies form the basis for the announcement issued yesterday.

The statement is signed by Dr. Jacobs of Holland, Miss Chrystal Macmillan of Great Britain, Mme. Rosika Schwimmer of Austria-Hungary, Professor Emily Greene Balch of Wellesley College and Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago. Miss Addams is President of the International Committee; Miss Macmillan, Secretary; Dr. Jacobs and Mme. Schwimmer, Vice Chairmen.

In their joint report the leading members of these two delegations unite in saying that the evidence and assurances given them convinced them that the belligerents would not consider such a conference unfriendly, and that the neutrals would not be unwillingly to act, if first assured of American co-operation.

The three foreign delegates came to the United States in September, and the Executive Committee since then has been in conference with the American delegates.

The envoys were received by the following, among others:

Prime Minister Asquith and Foreign Minister Sir Edward Grey, in London.
Reichskanzler von Bethmann-Hollweg and Foreign Minister von Jagow, in Berlin.
Foreign Minister d'Avignon, in Havre.
Foreign Minister Sasonoff, in Petrograd.

Prime Minister Cort van der Linden and Foreign Minister Loudon, in The Hague.
Prime Minister Zahle and Foreign Minister Scavenius, in Copenhagen.
King Haakon, Prime Minister Knudsen, Foreign Minister Ihlen, and by Messrs. Loeviand, Aarstad Castberg, and Jahren, the four Presidents of the Storthing, in Christiania.
Foreign Minister Wallenberg, in Stockholm.
President Motta and Foreign Minister Hoffman, in Berne.

While in Rome the delegation went unofficially—that is to say, without a mandate from the congress—to an audience with the Pope and the Cardinal Secretary of State. The signers of the statement were themselves leading members of the two groups of envoys.

Text of the Manifesto.

The manifesto issued by the International Committee follows:

"Here in America, on neutral soil, far removed from the stress of the conflict, we, the envoys to the Governments from the International Congress of Women at The Hague, have come together to canvass the results of our missions. We put forth this statement as our united and deliberate conclusions.

"At a time when the foreign offices of the great belligerents have been barred to each other, and the public mind of Europe has been fixed on the war offices for leadership, we have gone from capital to capital nd conferred with the civil Governments.

"Our mission was to place before belligerent and neutral alike the resolutions of the International Congress of Women held at The Hague in April; especially to place before them the definite method of a conference of neutral nations as an agency of continuous mediation for the settlement of the war.

"To carry out this mission two delegations were appointed, which included women of Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden, and the United States. One or other of these delegations was received by the Governments in fourteen capitals, Berlin, Berne, Budapest, Christiania, Copenhagen, The Hague, Havre, (Belgian Government,) London, Paris, Petrograd, Rome, Stockholm, Vienna, and Washington. We were received by the Prime Ministers and Foreign Ministers of the powers, by the King of Norway, by the Presidents of Switzerland and of the United States, by the Pope and the Cardinal Secretary of State.

"In many capitals more than one audience was given, not merely to present our resolutions, but for a thorough discussion. In addition to the thirty-five Governmental visits we met everywhere—members of Parliaments and other leaders of public opinion.

"We heard much the same words spoken in Downing Street as those spoken in Wilhelmstrasse, in Vienna as in Petrograd, in Budapest as in the Havre, where the Belgians have their temporary Government.

No Opposition to Conference.

"Our visits to the war capitals convinced us that the belligerent Governments would not be opposed to a conference of neutral nations; that while the belligerents have rejected offers of mediation by single neutral nations, and while no belligerent could ask for mediation, the creation of a continuous conference of neutral nations might provide the machinery which would lead to peace.

"We found that the neutrals, on the other hand, were concerned lest calling such a conference might be considered inopportune by one or other of the belligerents. Here our information from the belligerents themselves gave assurance that such initiative would not be resented. 'My country would not find anything unfriendly in such action by the neutrals,' was the assurance given us by the Foreign Minister of one of the great belligerents. 'My Government would place no obstacle in the way of its institution,' said the Minister of an opposing nation. 'What are the neutrals waiting for?' said a third, whose name ranks high, not only in his own country, but all over the world.

"It remained to put this clarifying intelligence before the neutral countries. As a result the plan of starting mediation through the agency of a continuous conference o the neutral nations is today being seriously discussed alike in the Cabinets of the belligerent and neutral countries of Europe and in the press of both.

Quote High Officials.

"We are in a position to quote some of the expressions of men high in the councils of the great nations as to the feasibility of the plan. 'You are right,' said one Minister, 'that it would be of the greatest importance to finish the fight by early negotiation rather than by further military efforts, which would result in more and more destruction and irreparable loss.' 'Yours is the sanest proposal that has been brought to this office in the last six months,' said the Prime Minister of one of the larger countries.

"We were also in position to canvass the objections that have been made to the proposal, testing it out severely in the judgment of those in the midst of the European conflict. It has been argued that it is not the time at present to start such a process of negotiation, and that no step should be taken until one or another party has a victory, or at least until some new military balance be struck.

"The answer we bring is that every delay makes more difficult the beginning of negotiations, more nations become involved, and the situation becomes more complicated; that when at times in the course of the war such a balance was struck, the neutrals were unprepared to act. The opportunity passed. For the forces of peace to be unprepared when the hour comes is as irretrievable as for a military leader to be unready.

"It has been argued that for such a conference to be called at any time when one side has met with some military advantage, would be to favor that side. The answer we bring is that the proposed conference would start mediation at a higher level than that of military advantage. As to the actual military situation, however, we quote a remark made to us by a Foreign Minister of one of the belligerent powers. 'Neither side is today strong enough to dictate terms, and neither side is so weakened that it has to accept humiliating terms.'

"It has been suggested that such a conference would bind the neutral Governments co-operating in it. The answer we bring is that, as proposed, such a conference should consist of the ablest persons of the neutral countries, assigned not to problems of their own Governments, but to the common service of a supreme crisis. The situation calls for a conference cast in a new and larger mould than those of conventional diplomacy, the Governments sending to it persons drawn from social, economic, and scientific fields who have had genuine international experience.

How European Neutrals Feel.

"As women, it was possible for us, from belligerent and neutral nations alike, to meet in the midst of war, and to carry forward an interchange of question and answer between capitals which were barred to each other. It is now our duty to make articulate our convictions. We have been convinced that the Governments of the belligerent nations would not be hostile to the institution of such a common channel for good offices, and that the Governments of the European neutrals we visited stand ready to co-operate with others in mediation.

"Reviewing the situation, we believe that of the five European neutral nations visited three are ready to join in such a conference, and that two are deliberating the calling of such a conference. Of the intention of the United States we have as yet no evidence.

"We are but the conveyors of evidence which is a challenge to action by the neutral Governments visited—by Denmark, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, and the United States. We in turn bear evidence of a rising desire and intention of vast companies of people in the neutral countries to turn a barren disinterestedness into an active good will. In Sweden, for example, more than 400 meetings were held in one day in different parts of the country, calling on the Government to act.

"The excruciating burden of responsibility for the hopeless continuance of this war no longer rests on the will of the belligerent nations alone. It rests also on the will of those neutral Governments and people who have been spared its shock but cannot, if they would, absolve themselves from their full share of responsibility for the continuance of war.

SUPPER DANCES STOPPED.

Savoy in London Sends All Patrons to the Ballroom.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—Supper and dancing at the Savoy Hotel are going out of fashion. The management yesterday decided to have no more hesitation waltzing or turkey trotting in the Winter garden, which is on the same floor as the foyer, slightly below the level of the Strand. Patrons who wish to dance must now go downstairs into the regular ballroom, which is on the same level as the embankment.

The former opportunity for a couple supping in the foyer to rise from the table between courses and have a dance in the Winter Garden alongside is gone.

TWELVE GERMANS FLED INTERNMENT

FIVE MORE TRY FLIGHT

But Dutch Captain Refuses to Take Them Aboard—Washington Stops All Leave.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Oct. 15.—It became known today that besides the six German officers whose escape was announced yesterday six enlisted men sailed from Hampton Roads in the yacht Eclipse for a destination unknown, and that other officers and members of the two interned cruisers here were attempting to obtain passage on outgoing steamers bound for European ports.

The investigations of Secret Service men in the employ of the Navy Department today disclosed the fact that no less than twelve German officers and sailors were aboard the Eclipse when she was last seen Sunday afternoon. It was also learned that the little craft was stored with provisions, a large quantity of gasoline and other supplies at one of the Sewell Point piers below the city. In order to avoid arousing suspicion the Germans bought what they needed in small quantities and conveyed them to the little craft in public automobiles. Indications point to well-laid plans for the escape.

Officers of the two cruisers deny that any of the sailors disappeared with the German officers, but admit that two ordinary seamen are strangely absent.

Rear Admiral Beatty today gave out the names of the missing officers. They are Lieutenant Hoffman, Navigating Officer of the Kronprinz Wilhelm, and Junior Officers [illegible] Reismun, Forstrenter, Lussfeld and Fischer. So far he has been unable to learn definitely if any of the enlisted men are missing. The five junior officers are said to have about the same rank as an Ensign in the American Navy.

It is believed here that the Germans for weeks have been using the Eclipse to familiarize themselves with the channels of Norfolk, Newport News and Hampton Roads, and that sketches of these waterways and their fortifications were made. It is asserted that they have been seen frequently in the neighborhood of Fort Monroe, Fort Wood and the site of the proposed Cape Henry Fort.

There is still no clue to the probable destination of the Eclipse and her crew. The prevailing opinion tonight is that the men will attempt to cross the Atlantic to some European port.

Rear Admiral Beatty is still pushing the search for the missing men. Naval officers at the yards and the Government of the European neutrals we visited stand ready to co-operate with others in mediation.

"Reviewing the situation, we believe that of the five European neutral nations visited three are ready to join in such a conference, and that two are deliberating the calling of such a conference. Of the intention of the United States we have as yet no evidence.

Other Sailors Attempt to Escape.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Oct. 15.—Five men from the interned German cruisers Prinz Eitel Friedrich and Kronprinz Wilhelm made bold but fruitless attempts today to escape from this country to Holland on the Dutch steamers Noordam and Maasteindijk, which sailed from this port for Rotterdam. From Holland it would have been an easy matter for them to reach Germany. One of the men, Christopher Storm, is under arrest here. The others made their escape, and it is supposed that they went back to the German cruisers.

Their efforts to get back to the Fatherland were frustrated by the Captain of the Dutch steamer, who denied them passage and immediately reported the matter to the customs authorities.

Collector Hamilton is co-operating in every way with Admiral Beatty in taking steps looking to the prevention of the departure from the port of any of the missing men.

Leave of Interned Men Revoked.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Steps have been taken by the Administration to prevent a repetition of the disappearance of members of the commissioned personnel or crews of the interned German auxiliary cruisers Prinz Eitel Friedrich and Kronprinz Wilhelm, at Norfolk. Orders have been issued by the Navy Department to Rear Admiral Beatty, commandant of the Norfolk Yard, not to grant any more paroles or leaves of absence to officers or men of either of these ships until the six officers of the Kronprinz Wilhelm who have been missing since Saturday are satisfactorily accounted for or returned to their ships. Besides giving these orders, the Navy Department has reported the matter to the State Department, which, it is believed, will report the matter to representatives of the German Government.

Up to a late hour tonight no definite word had been received from any source as to the whereabouts of the missing warrant officers. The Navy Department was informed today that a rumor had reached Norfolk that the missing sloop Eclipse, in which the six officers sailed from Norfolk, had been seen at an unnamed point in the Chesapeake Bay, but this report was only sent as a rumor, and had not been confirmed. High officials of the Navy Department were asked tonight whether any naval vessels had been sent in pursuit of the missing men. The reply was in the negative.

The German officers [illegible] permitted to leave their ship on parole, by arrangement between the Captain of the Kronprinz Wilhelm and Rear Admiral Beatty, to whom the names of the six were given by the German commander. The understanding was that they were merely going for a sail on Saturday, and that they would return on Monday. Their parole expired on that day. It was explained tonight that the Captain of the Wilhelm held himself responsible for the observance of all paroles by his officers and men

TELLS KING FERDINAND TO TAKE JEWELS BACK

Orléans Says He Cannot Return Them, as They Are in Chateau Seized by Germans.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—The Duke of Orléans addressed a letter to King Ferdinand of Bulgaria several days ago requesting that monarch to take back jewels of Bulgarian orders which had been bestowed upon him, but the letter was to be published only on the day Bulgaria entered the war. In his communication the Duke said:

"The attitude your Majesty has thought right to take in the present war, contrary to your previous policy, forces me to the sad duty of praying your Majesty to take back the jewels of Bulgarian orders with which your Majesty invested me, first, upon the death of your venerable mother, and, second, when your Majesty was in Paris to point out how much Bulgaria owed to France.

"I tell your Majesty to take back the jewels, because, alas, I cannot send them back, but your Majesty has only to apply to his ally, who for more than a year has occupied my château in Belgium and for whom my safe can be answerable, I authorize the giving up to your Majesty of orders I can no longer wear.

"Your Majesty will understand I am obliged to warn your Majesty that the day he takes up arms against my country, France, the name will be struck from the Chapter of Knights of the Holy Spirit. I do not ask your Majesty to send back the jewels of the Order of the Holy Spirit, but wish, on the contrary, that these souvenirs of the France he has betrayed shall keep alive perpetual remorse."

A letter that the Duke wrote to Emperor Francis Joseph at the outbreak of the war has also been published. In it he asks the ruler of Austria-Hungary to take back the jewels of the Order of the Golden Fleece and refers to his marriage to the Archduchess Maria Dorothea as "the misfortune of my life."

Prince Louis Philippe, Duke of Orléans and the French Pretender, was married to the Archduchess Maria Dorothea of Austria at Vienna in November, 1896. She obtained a separation from him in Paris in July, 1914, after a series of domestic difficulties which had lasted for years. Under the decree granted by the Court of Arbitration she was to receive $11,000 a year from the Duke, who also was ordered to restore to her money which he had

MACHINE FIGHTING IS EDISON'S IDEA

He Advocates Potential Preparedness, or Mere Readiness to Turn Out Munitions.

WAR ON A BUSINESS BASIS

Big Powder Mills, Shell Machines, Raw Materials, and Trained Officers His Defense Scheme.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—Maintain a potential preparedness for a war in which fighting is done by machines, not men, is Thomas A. Edison's advice to the United States.

In an interview tonight, while his car was being transferred from the Michigan Central to the Chicago & North Western Railroad to continue its journey to the San Francisco Exposition, the Chairman of the Naval Advisory Board of the United States gave his ideas on preparedness.

"The soldier of the future will not be a sabre-bearing, blood-thirsty savage," said Mr. Edison. "He will be a machinist. The war of the future, that is, if the United States engages in it, will be a war in which machines, not soldiers, fight. For that reason we can gamble safely on a volunteer army provided we have a great quantity of officers trained and ready for service in forty-eight hours to lead and drill the new men."

"Will you give in concise form your idea of what should be done in America for preparedness for or against war?" he was asked.

"Well," he replied, reflectively, "my idea of that may not be just the same as the idea of many people. Let me see. Consider the great amount of powder being shot off on the European battle front every day. I would build great factories in which twice as much powder as that could be manufactured. I would locate and have stored away enough material to make up the powder. Then I would not make it. I would have everything ready, so that within forty-eight hours I could go ahead turning it out.

"Then as to shells: I think it is a wasteful thing to make shells on lathes, as they make them now. We should get up shell machines for making them rapidly and in enormous quantities. Then I would grease the machines up and store them away with a great quantity of steel billets, ready to be worked up on short notice. In fact, I would make my preparation potential, and I would do it right away. The proposition should not be a military one at all. I don't like this military idea at all. It should be done solely on an economical basis—a business basis.

Big Saving in Money.

"Building these powder factories and these machines and ammunition factories wouldn't cost much. But I would keep this in mind in preparing to make stores and ammunition. I would prepare to turn out right along twice as much as is being used now on the whole European battlefield—then not make it.

"Now as to actual fighting. I would rather use machines than men. A man is only one man, after all. A machine can be easily as good as twenty men. Then one man, using it, is as good as twenty men. He should be at least that good if he is American.

"America is the greatest machine country in the world, and its people are the greatest machinists. They can, moreover, invent machinery faster and have it more efficient than any other two countries. It is a machine nation; its battle preparation should be with machinery.

"I am down on military establishments. A standing army is not worth anything unless it is on a war footing, which is absurd. We do need an enormous number of trained officers and drill sergeants, however. These should be trained right along, even more than apparently would be needed, then turned back into industry.

"They should be kept in touch at stated intervals with the latest things in warfare, so that they would be ready as soon as telegraph and railroad could summon them to go into active service. We can gamble on a volunteer army because the American is the quickest-minded human being in things mechanical. He could learn the use of machinery of war with sufficient dispatch for army use. In short, the new soldier will not be a soldier, but a machinist; he will not shed his blood, but will perspire in the factory of death at the battle line."

"What is the principal aviation deficiency as you see it?" was asked.

"Oh, the motor question," Mr. Edison replied. "The motor situation is only fair abroad, although their motors are the best now made. But we ought to be able to get a much better one, and we need it."

"What do you think of the use of liquid fire and asphyxiating gases?"

"They are perfectly proper for use in defense, but not for offense. A man has a right to claw, scratch, bite, or kick in defending himself, but when he is on the offensive, no."

"Have any ideas of material value been submitted to the Naval Advisory Board?" he was asked.

"Engulfed in Ideas."

"Ideas!" he exclaimed. "Well, bless your heart, I should say we have. We are tabulating them as rapidly as a force of clerks can work and we are being engulfed with ideas. What is more, we want them to keep coming. The more the better. Any one with an idea carefully thought out should send it right along. We need them all.

"They are good, too. You would be surprised to know that in such a heterogeneous collection of ideas that at least one in every fifty is good, in some measure, and worthy of consideration. That's a very high ratio in such a situation.

"You also would be surprised to know the sources of the ideas. Bank Presidents send them, messenger boys send them. I am reminded to say this by the fact that two of the best ideas we have had sent in to us touching upon offensive warfare have come, one from a bank President and another from a young messenger boy who has not yet cast his first vote.

"Of course, there is much of this information—most of it, in fact—which will not be given to the public. It is to be stored up, worked out and made ready and held on tap for use by the Government when wanted."

"How can America prepare itself in the shortest time; that is, how can this preparedness be brought about?" Mr. Edison was asked.

"The newspapers and Congress are all that can do it," he said.

"Is the need immediate?"

"Well, any one can answer that. How long would it take us to get officers for our Army if war should start? How long to make enough powder, to make enough shells? What machinery would we have?

"That is why I say potential preparation is necessary. Had we all these things ready to start turning the wheels in two days, with a volunteer army of bright, mechanically minded men and officers who know the business of war, and sergeants who know how to drill men, we would be a dangerous kind of nation to monkey with. Maybe our preparation always would remain potential. If so, it would be cheap insurance, which ought not to meet with disapproval from pacifist minds."

"What part will the wireless and other similar forces play in a future war if your board has time to get to work on them?" he was asked.

"That is something I cannot tell you," Mr. Edison replied. "There are forces available, or which may be made available, which some of us have run across, which are mightier than anything which has been used as yet—by that I mean mightier in their potentiality. But they must be backed by the machinist army I described.

"What you gentlemen of the press want to impress on the minds of the people is that potential preparation is the thing, and it should be brought about speedily. Tell them that preparation for war is not military work, but should be done by shrewd business men in an economical way. Machines should be invented to save the waste in men."

LOUDEN INDICTED ON BIGAMY CHARGE

Suspected Teuton Spy Is Said to be a Wholesale Marriage Swindler.

SECRET SERVICE MEN BUSY

Federal Agents Trying to Identify "Count" as Man Who Got Plans of New York's Defenses.

"Count" Max Lynar Louden, inventor and adventurer, and suspected of being a German spy, was indicted here yesterday for bigamy. The Secret Service agents who instigated his arrest for bigamy are satisfied that he will no longer be in a position to operate as an agent of the German and Austrian Governments, as he was suspected of doing.

After the indictment was filed the Department of Justice began an investigation of the activities of a man, who, under the name of "Lynar," is said to have done confidential work for the German and Austrian Governments last June and July. It is not known definitely whether "Lynar" and Louden are one and the same man, or whether they are relatives.

Whoever "Lynar" was, it is believed that he had much to do with the transmission of detailed plans and sketches of certain fortifications around New York Harbor to the German Government. It was reported to the United States Secret Service agents that the plans had been sent to Berlin by two messengers aboard a steamship which sailed from this port for Rotterdam during July. The ship was searched at Falmouth and again by the British Consul at Rotterdam, but the messengers eluded detection.

It is considered significant by the Department of Justice that Max Lynar Louden's application for an American passport was made after the departure of this vessel from New York. The man known as "Lynar" remained in New York after the alleged messengers started for Berlin. Louden, according to the Secret Service agents, was accustomed at times to travel under the name of Lynar, and they say it was under this name that he married Miss Rose O'Brien in Albion, N. Y., in 1912.

Both Miss O'Brien, now of Rochester, and Mrs. Fred Arnold of Poughkeepsie picked Louden out in a line-up in the Tombs yesterday as the man who had married and deserted them after he had relieved them of all the money he could get. Mrs. Arnold, who was Amalie Wendt at the time of the alleged marriage, came to the Tombs with her twenty-year-old son, Max, who, according to her story, was the issue of her union with Count Von. She said the boy had never seen his father until yesterday. Mrs. Arnold said she had the marriage annulled before marrying Fred Arnold.

The indictment against Louden states he had married Miss Wendt in Poughkeepsie on Sept. 25, 1893, and had married Rose O'Brien in Albion, N. Y., on Nov. 14, 1912, while he was still the husband of Miss Wendt. Records in the City Hall show furthermore that he had married his present wife, Lalla Florence Jansen, in September, 1911, but this union is not mentioned in the indictment. Miss Jansen, who was with her husband in their apartment at 124 Convent Avenue when he was arrested, failed to appear before the Grand Jury yesterday and detectives are now seeking her with a subpoena.

Miss O'Brien told Assistant District Attorney Embree that Louden got $4,600 from her before he decided that he no longer cared for her company. Mr. Embree heard yesterday that Louden had a police record in Germany as a "marriage swindler." He is now suspected by the District Attorney's office of having committed bigamy with several women other than those already known, to swindle them out of all the money they had. His name is said to appear on the books of matrimonial agencies in this city as a candidate for a profitable marriage.

A dispatch received yesterday from Pittsfield, Mass., states that a Minna Collatz, who came from Germany two years ago, consulted an attorney in that city yesterday regarding Count Max Lynar Louden. She says he obtained three patent rights from her in Germany. She also alleges he proposed marriage to her.

"Count" Louden will be arraigned before Judge Crain in General Sessions on Monday.

CALLED LYNOR'S MESSENGER.

Providence Journal Says Austrian Captain Carried Our Defense Plans.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 15.—In an article on the case of Max Lynar Louden, the suspected Teuton spy, indicted in New York on a charge of bigamy, The Providence Journal will say tomorrow morning that the person supposed to have carried lans of the defenses of New York to Berlin or Vienna last July was Eugene Von Tomory.

"Von Tomory is a Catain in the Austrian army," The Journal article says. "He has been in this country for two years and left here under an assumed name on the Holland American steamshi Nieuw Amsterdam on July 24 for Rotterdam.

"The Journal is able to state positively also that von Tomory carried with him a mass of documents from Count von Bernstorff and Dr. Dumba, to be delivered to Berlin and Vienna, and that these documents reached their destination safely in spite of the fact that the British authorities were warned of von Tomory's presence on the ship and that they made a vigorous search of the vessel, holding it up at Falmouth for two days for the purpose.

"The reason why they failed to find the messenger was because he was disguised in the uniform of a steward of the vessel. As soon as the man was clear of the ship in Rotterdam he sent a cablegram to a wel-known trust company in New York on Aug. 5 containing the two words, 'arrived safely,' without signature.

"For several months before he left for Europe Von Tomory lived in rooms at 146 West Eighty-second Street, New York, which he rented from a Mrs. Blanche Haskins. Two months before he left he moved to other apartments in charge of Mrs. Haskins, at 268 West Eighty-fourth Street.

"When a Journal representative interviewed Mrs. Haskins she stated that Von Tomory had rented rooms from her for about a year and that during that time he had made frequent trips to Pittsburgh and Chicago. She said that he had sailed on the Nieuw Amsterdam on July 24, to go to Vienna, and that since his arrival in Austria she had received a post card from him, telling her of his safe arrival and announcing also that he was to be transferred at once to the Italian frontier as Captain of a company of Austrian infantry.

"Max Lynar, who is a German Army officer, has been for a long time an intimate acquaintance of Count Von Bernstorff, Dr. Dumba, Captain von Papen, and most of the members of the staff of the two embassies. For the past year he has been particularly active in alleged experimental work on several inventions for military and naval use in this country, though as far as can be ascertained no tangible results have been reached except that his constant declarations that all his talents were now at the disposal of the United States Government have given him many opporunities of securing knowledge of things not easy for the layman to reach."

RUSSIAN ASSAILS OPPRESSION OF JEWS

THINKS KAISER IS TO BLAME

Insists the Black Hundred and Other Reactionaries Were In German Emperor's Pay.

"No amount of explanations or reasoning, and no accusations, no matter how well founded, could in any way justify the treatment of the Jews in the war districts of Russia," says George Baklanoff, the Russian baritone of the Boston Grand Opera Company, who spent several months fighting in the Russian Army, having been discharged after being wounded.

"Every intelligent Russian has long since deplored the treatment of the Jews," he said. "I believe the bureaucracy itself realized long ago that the policy of oppressing an entire race was bound to result in causing an internal disease of corruption, hatred, and lawlessness; but, with the blindness of an ostrich, men like Maklakoff and Chegiovitoff continued to invent new restrictions against the Jews, believing, like their predecessors of the type of Plehve and Durnovo, that the best way to safeguard the existing system was to offer the Jews as a sacrifice to the discontented population.

"In my own defense, as a Russian, I must point out that the heart of Russia has ever stubbornly refused to accept the dogma of Jew baiting as the cure for all evils, and it is to the credit of Central Russia that no pogrom has as yet been recorded as having taken place there.

"Indescribable things took place during the evacuation of the invaded provinces. It must be remembered that for years the existing rule among the Russian officials has been that, in order to gain rapid promotion, one had to become a persecutor of the Jews, and when the order came that the civil population was to leave the districts threatened by the German Army, these officials, as well as a number of officers, permitted and even encouraged such outrages as to make every thinking Russian blush with shame.

"Only those who, like myself, saw the unfortunate fugitives, witnessed the results of the inhuman orders and tried in vain to help the victims, can understand the horrors of the situation created by a blind bureaucratic power.

"It will sound paradoxical, but still I must insist there is no anti-Semitism in Russia in the sense in which it exists in Germany, and those whose sympathies are drawn away from Russia, and justly so, because of the treatment of the Jews by the Russian Government, would do well to ponder that it is a matter of record that the so-called Black Hundred organizations of Russia, the prime movers in all the reactionary plans of the Russian Government for the past twenty years, were, as was shown by documents in the Duma, on the pay roll of Germany's Kaiser.

"Far be it from me to underestimate the civilizing value of Germany, nor do I want to maintain that my own country has emerged from the barbarian state as far as the Government is concerned, but, in all justice to the Russian people, it must be stated that for the last 200 years German influences were the overpowering force in Russia's public life.

"As I said, I do not want nor could if I wanted to, offer any excuses for Russia's treatment of the Jews, particularly during the present war. It is shameful, but while admitting all the wrongs, I maintain that the Russian people as a whole have had nothing to do with it, save that in their ignorance they followed the orders of the higher spheres, in this case—Germany.

"What is of great importance is to take a peep into the future, and it is my opinion as it is of all the Russians to whom the welfare of their country is of prime importance, that the Jew in Russia will attain and hold full rights of citizenship when this war is once over. Whether Russia be victorious or not, the bureaucracy—our worst inheritance from the days when Peter the Great first began to Germanize Russia—will necessarily go out of existence. In the one case, because victory will bring to the Russian people the knowledge of their own strength; in the second, because the nation will not forgive the policy of having destroyed national spirit and national resources to the extent of being unable to meet a foe.

"I would like to make it clear that no matter what the evidence of today, the future for the Jews in Russia holds nothing but bright prospects, and that once the shackles imposed by a brutal system are shattered, the Jew in Russia will become a citizen to a far greater extent than in Germany, for the Russian knows no racial hatred.

"Nor must it be forgotten that the Jew has his own role to play in this emancipation movement, for centuries of persecution have dwarfed him. Let us hope that the millions of Jews in Russia will accept the brotherly hand of the Russian people in the spirit of forgiveness for the past wrongs, and should they do so, it is no idle prophecy to declare that it will take only a few years before the present conditions will become but a nightmare of the past.

"Despite all the persecutions, despite their forced immigration, but few Russian Jews that I have met in my travels have lost their love for Russia and Russians, and in this lies the proof that the Jews feel and know that the blame for their suffering is with the Government, built on German models, impregnated with the German spirit, having at its head, among the principal reactionaries, men with German names, and not with the Russian people.

"The persecutions of the Jews will ever remain a black page in Russia's history, but if right and justice can atone for the past wrong doings, the Russian people will see to it that this is done."

ARMY PLAN CALLS FOR 669,000 MEN

prescribe specified curricula it is believed that officers in large numbers can be obtained from among the students at military colleges through an understanding that if they measure up to certain requirements in their military courses they will be eligible for commissions or warrants in the Continental Army.

The Garrison plan also calls for a change in the term of enlistment in the regular army. It specifies a six-year term, of which the first two years will comprise intensive service with the colors, while the other four years will be away from the colors with the soldier on furlough. The four years furlough will be in the nature of reserve duty. Any time during the four-year period after the soldier has served two years with the army he will be subject to duty in the event of war or threatened war.

Increase of $75,000,000.

The cost of the proposed additions to the army will be distributed over two years. The estimates now ready to be submitted to Congress call for a total of $184,000,000, as compared with an appropriation of $109,000,000 for the current year. This means that the Garrison plan calls for an increase of $75,000,000 in army appropriations during the next fiscal year. The army needs officers and the plan calls for the appointment of 1,000 new officers for the regular army during the next fiscal year, and 1,000 during the fiscal year next following.

The creation of ten new regiments of infantry, four new regiments of field artillery, fifty-two new companies of coast artillery, fifteen new companies of engineers, and four new aero squadrons, will be spread over two years. The estimates prepared for Congress call for sufficient money to organize some of these new units the first year, and for the creation of the others under appropriations for the second year.

No new units of cavalry are being organized. This is because there are enough cavalrymen to form a full division with two extra regiments left over for service inside of the United States. There are now fifteen regiments of cavalry in the army. There are six regiments of field artillery. The new plan will bring the total up to ten regiments. The army now has thirty regiments of infantry. This will be increased to forty regiments. There are now 170 companies of coast artillery. Under the new organization there will be 222 companies.

Each of the four aero squadrons is to have 12 machines, a total of 48 aeroplanes. The complement of men for each machine, including the necessary number of aviators, will be an average of about 12, or about 600 men.

The entire program for national defense to be recommended to Congress proposes a total expenditure next year of about $400,000,000.

The President also has approved the proposal of Secretary Daniels and the General Board of the navy for a five-year naval construction program to cost $500,000,000, giving the navy ten new dreadnoughts and six battle cruisers, as well as more than seventy submarines, fifty destroyers, ten scout cruisers, and a host of auxiliary ships.

Secretary Daniels and members of the General Board were in conference until late tonight discussing the exact number of ships to be recommended for the first year and a scheme for equalizing the expenditures over the five-year period.

When the conference adjourned at midnight it became known that the following naval construction program for the first of the five years had been decided upon:

Two dreadnoughts, two battle-cruisers, twenty-five coast submarines, five seagoing submarines, twelve destroyers, an increase of 8,000 in personnel, and an augmentation by 2,500 of the Naval Academy student body.

McADOO AT KANSAS CITY.

Again Makes Plea for Larger Navy and Big Merchant Marine.

KANSAS CITY, Oct. 15.—A plea for a navy which would make the United States able to face any other world power and a forty-million-dollar merchant marine to be used as a naval auxiliary in case of war was made by Secretary McAdoo in an address before the Kansas City Commercial Club today.

"Mechanical and military developments of the last few years have destroyed our natural barrier of 3,000 miles of ocean," said the Secretary. "It is not for aggression that we must have an adequate navy, but to take the place of this former barrier and to be able to say to the world that we are prepared to uphold the honor and majesty of this great republic."

BRYAN STILL HAS FEARS.

Reiterates That Preparedness Will Drag Us Into War.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—William Jennings Bryan, who is here, was asked tonight if he had read the estimates of the War Department for increasing the military forces of the United States. He had not, he said, but that a correspondent had shown him what purported to be the estimates.

"I do not care to discuss any particular estimate until it has had the President's approval," said Mr. Bryan.

When he was asked if he thought Congress would make large increases in the appropriations for the army and the navy he replied:

"I do not know the views of enough of the Congressmen to be able to predict what will be done. I have traveled over a considerable part of the country, and I find that the taxpayers are not as badly scared as the people who manufacture munitions, and I believe that the jingoes will find it difficult to raise enough money to cover the expenditures which they favor. The discussion of the subject will reveal to the public, first, that there is no necessity for increase; and second, that the policy which the jingoes favor will provoke war instead of preventing it.

"This policy of preparedness contemplates not merely the appropriation of large sums of money to get the country ready for war, but the setting up of false standards of honor, the encouragement of a military spirit and the cultivation of international hatreds—the very things that have caused the war in Europe. It contemplates the lowering of the moral standards of our country and a return to the swagger of the pistol toter and the sham honor of the duellist.

"The Democratic Party has had the courage to oppose the tariff barons, the trust magnates, and the money power and I shall be both surprised and disappointed if it surrenders to the mercenary group that, under the cover of patriotism, is seeking to scare the money out of the pockets of the taxpayers."

FIND MUCH FRAUD IN MOSS PETITIONS

60 PER CENT. FALSE NAMES

Louis Krause of 19 West 117th Street, a Deputy Superintendent of Elections and Commissioner of Deeds, was arrested last night on the charge of taking false acknowledgments to a petition for the nomination of Frank Moss as the Republican and Progressive nominee for District Attorney. Assistant District Attorney Weller, who has been making an investigation into frauds at the last primaries, said more than 60 per cent. of the signatures on petitions submitted by Krause were spurious.

Krause was a Becker witness. On the first trials he was called to the stand by Mr. Moss, then Assistant District Attorney, to identify the gunmen, "Lefty Louis," "Gyp the Blood," and "Whitey Lewis," who were hired to kill Rosenthal. Since the execution of ex-Lieutenant Becker, Krause has frequently complained to the District Attorney's office that he was being hounded and persecuted for having testified.

When arrested yesterday on a warrant issued by Magistrate Ten Eyck, Krause was taken to Police Headquarters, where he was later bailed out in $1,000. He will be arraigned in the Tombs Court today.

The specific charge against him states that on Aug. 25, as a Commissioner of Deeds, he purported to witness the signature of Rinehold Fredel, Jr., of 329 East Eighty-ninth Street, and take an oath that Fredel was a voter in the primaries, and qualified to place his name on the petition.

The man referred to in the petition was, in fact, not Rinehold Fredel, Jr., but Fredel Rinehold, Jr., living at the address given. Mr. Rinehold denied that he had signed the Moss petition. Three other men whose names appeared in the same petition have repudiated their signatures as false. They were James Farrell of 256 East Ninetieth Street, Aaron Greenbaum of 328 East Ninetieth Street, and Henry Greenbaum of 308 East Ninetieth Street.

Other arrests are expected before the investigation into primary frauds is concluded. So far no irregularities have been discovered in Tammany petitions. In the petitions for John F. O'Connell, a Progressive candidate, who withdrew in favor of Frank Moss, there is evidence of extensive frauds, which may lead to the arrest of nine or ten notaries who acknowledged spurious signatures.

A warrant has already been issued for a notary who drew up a faulty petition naming District Attorney Perkins for the Republican nomination. This man informed the District Attorney's office that he would surrender.

BOWERS WANTS FEES CUT.

Candidate for Sheriff Writes to the Board of Estimate.

Under Sheriff Frank K. Bowers, candidate for Sheriff on the Republican ticket, has written a letter to the Board of Estimate suggesting that instead of reducing salaries of city employes, legislation be recommended to eliminate the present fee system of the Sheriff's office and the abolition of Ludlow Street Jail. The under Sheriff says that this legislation, if passed, will save fully $110,000 to the city.

"The maintenance of the jail," he wrote, "costs the city approximately $50,000 a year. The fees collected by the Sheriff aggregate now about $120,000 a year, of which half goes to the County treasury, and the other half, or $60,000 a year, directly into the pocket of the Sheriff himself.

"This huge income, which is allowed him in addition to the Sheriff's statutory salary of $12,000 a year, making a grand total of about $72,000 yearly, creates a wholly ridiculous remuneration for the character of the services rendered, and is actually larger than that enjoyed by any official in the United States, the President alone excepted."

Bull Moose Oppose Constitution.

The County Executive Committee of the National Progressive Party went on record last night as opposing the proposed new State Constitution. Although William H. Hotchkiss had written a letter to the committee asking it to favor the Constitution, and Stanley Isaacs, Chairman of the committee, to consider the Constitution, had reported in favor of allowing individual members of the party to settle the question for themselves, John J. O'Connell, the new Chairman of the County Committee, said the Constitution should be beaten, and a resolution was adopted unanimously to this effect.

W. R. Hearst in Campaign.

According to an announcement made yesterday by Edmund O'Connor, Chairman of the Independence League Campaign Committee of Kings County, William R. Hearst will speak at a mass meeting in Prospect Hall next Saturday on behalf of Edward T. O'Loughlin, county leader of the league, who is the Democratic and Independence League nominee for Register. The ticket of the league is also the McCooey ticket.

CALLS NOMINATIONS VOID.

Danehy Says Judicial Candidates Are Result of a "Deal."

Stanley Danehy, a Bronx lawyer, who was nominated for Justice of the Supreme Court on the Prohibition ticket, sent a protest to the Board of Elections yesterday against all nominations except his own, made for Justices of the Supreme Court by the various political parties at the recent primaries, being printed on the official election ballot this year. Mr. Danehy says all other nominations but his own are void because the political parties entered into a "deal" to bring about the nominations. He said:

"As said six judicial candidates should not be allowed to profit by their own participation in wrongdoing, and as I should not be put to the trouble and expense of contesting this matter after any votes are cast for these candidates at the election, I hereby protest to you against your allowing, putting, or printing the names of these six judicial candidates or any of them on the official election ballot to be used at the forthcoming election.

"I request that you make this protest a matter of official record in your office, and that you do any and every act within your official authority or duty necessary to secure and insure a free and fair election for Justices of the Supreme Court in the First Judicial District."

TRAVIS MAY PAY $6,000,000.

Court Refuses to Enjoin State Controller from Redeeming Notes.

Supreme Court Justice Erlanger yesterday denied an application of the United Real Estate Owners Association for a temporary injunction restraining State Controller Travis from paying $6,000,000 due yesterday on short term notes issued last February. The application set forth that the loan was unnecessary because at the time it was made there was $8,000,000 in the State treasury, and that the Controller had no right to borrow more than $1,000,000 at any time without the express permission of the Legislature.

The Controller submitted an affidavit saying that before he borrowed the money he had ascertained that on June 30 there would be a deficit in the treasury of $3,873,637, and that $2,500,000 more would be needed before Oct. 1 to meet State obligations authorized by the Legislature and for the salaries of State officers and employes. Before the application was denied it was stipulated by the attorneys that the case should be placed on the short term calendar for trial without delay. The purpose of the suit is to settle the question whether the Controller has the right to borrow more than $1,000,000 at any time without authority from the Legislature.

The institutions that lent the $6,000,000 were the United States Trust Company, the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, the New York Trust Company, the Bank of Manhattan Company, the Bankers Trust Company, and the Central Trust Company.

SHIP DRIFTS 1,166 MILES.

Officers of the Norweglan freighter Ulriken, which arrived last night at Quarantine, after having been at sea since Aug. 3, coming from Christiania, said that the vessel had been disabled in a storm and narrowly escaped being dashed to pieces on the rocks.

On Sept. 1, in latitude 57.43 and longitude 38.34, the Ulriken struck a piece of submerged wreckage and lost her propeller. At that time a westerly gale was blowing, which continued with heavy seas until Oct. 1. During these thirty days the Ulriken lay helpless at the mercy of wind and sea, and drifted 1,166 miles. One Sunday morning the steamer was being swept ashore on the rocky coast of Iceland when the wind fortunately shifted in time and blew the vessel out to sea again.

The crew was powerless to do anything while the storm lasted, but when it cleared on Oct. 1 the forward tanks were filled to raise the stern out of the water and the engineers fitted on a new propeller.

The Ulriken was in Petrograd when the war started and was held there a year.

ENDS FOUR LIVES WITH GAS.

Boatman Drowned, Widow Kil Herself and Three Children.

Mrs. Anna Huntsinger, 40 years old, of 555 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn, whose husband, Joseph, a barge captain, was drowned several days ago in the Gowanus Canal, and her three children were found dead of asphyxiation yesterday morning by her brother, Peter Connell, a house mover, of 467 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn.

Connell had called on Thursday night at 10 o'clock, but had left, thinking Mrs. Huntsinger and her children were asleep when his knocks at the door were unanswered. Yesterday, when he reached the second floor, where the Huntsingers lived, he found the smell of gas very strong and went downstairs, returning later with the landlord and a policeman.

They forced an entrance and found Mrs. Huntsinger, fully dressed, dead on a couch. The three children—Alice, 15; Elizabeth, 8, and Emmet, 3—were dead in bed in their night clothes. Gas was flowing into the rooms from all the jets and the cracks in the door and windows had been stuffed with paper. A bank book, showing $160 in deposits, and some money were found.

STOPS COUNT OF BALLOTS

And Breaks Up Meeting of City Democratic Committee—Reporter Dies of Injuries.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Oct. 15.—A pistol battle in which one man was killed and four others wounded broke up a meeting of the Democratic City Executive Committee here today at which the votes of last Tuesday's municipal primary were to have been canvassed. A National Guard Company with fixed bayonets helped the police to restore order, and tonight still was patroling the streets around the office building in which the trouble occurred.

Sidney J. Cohen, a reporter for The Charleston Evening Post, was shot through the lung and killed. W. A. Turner, an insurance agent, and W. E. Wingate, Superintendent of the city chain gang, were seriously hurt, and H. L. Wilensky, a city meter inspector, and Jeremiah O'Brien, Inspector of Weights and Measures and a member of the Executive Committee, received minor bullet wounds.

It was not clear tonight just who did the shooting, which occurred during a general scuffle in a hallway adjoining the committee room. Six arrests were made, but no specific charge was preferred against any of the prisoners. Cohen is said to have been walking toward a window when the fatal shot struck him.

Today's trouble grew out of a bitter campaign which ended last Tuesday in a primary held while several companies of National Guards were kept in readiness to suppress possible disorders. The election day passed quietly and the guardsmen were dispersed on Wednesday. Followers of Mayor John P. Grace, an aspirant for renomination, charged that Governor Manning by sending troops was trying to interfere with the primoary, thereby favoring the candidacy of Grace's opponent, Tristram T. Hyde.

Unofficial tabulation of the returns showed that Hyde had been nominated by a majority of nineteen votes out of more than 6,000 cast. The case of more than one hundred contested votes was to be settled today by the Executive Committee.

Just as the meeting was called to order some one in the hallway started a fight. After some scuffling, several pistols were brought into play, and amid the scramble to escape, three ballot boxes were thrown out of the windows.

When the shooting was heard, trouble was threatened for a time in the crowd outside. The extra force of police held the crowd in check while a hurry call was sent for the troops.

The ballot boxes thrown from the windows were recovered, and as far as known tonight none of the boxes in the room was missing. All of the men arrested are said to have been active in the interests of Hyde. They are Max Golman, a marine engineer; H. J. Brown, ice wagon driver; Edward McDonald, stevedore; J. J. Healy, former Police Sergeant; Conrad Stender, Deputy Sheriff, and J. H. Steenken, keeper of a cemetery.

It was said tonight the votes would be canvassed tomorrow.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Oct. 15.—As soon as Governor Manning received notice of the shooting he ordered the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston under arms and placed Colonel E. M. Blythe of Greenville in charge of the militia during the absence of Adjt. Gen. Moore. The Governor also ordered the Charleston Board of Control to close the dispensaries.

Later Governor Manning called the entire Second Regiment of the National Guard under arms to await eventualities in Charleston.

INCOME TAX ARGUMENTS END

Supreme Court Takes the Case Under Advisement.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Oral arguments before the Supreme Court of the income tax cases was completed this afternoon. Most of today's discussion was by Assistant Attorney General Wallace and Solicitor General Davis, for the Government, who devoted most of their attention to the attacks on the provisions for collection at the source and for taxing mining companies.

The entire question of the constitutionality of the tax was taken under advisement by the court, and may not be decided for months.

PROSPERITY IN PHILIPPINES.

Gov. Harrison Praises Administration and Progress of Filipinos.

MANILA, Oct. 15.—Governor General Francis Burton Harrison, in his message to the Legislature, describes the era in the islands preceding the beginning of the present administration in Washington as extravagant and careless, while economies and reform brought about in 1914-15 have averted bankruptcy and restored the stability of the Treasury without restricting necessary governmental activities.

Despite world-wide disturbances, the message says, commercial conditions in the Philippines are satisfactory, while politically there is harmony between Americans and Filipinos, the latter showing themselves increasingly efficient under a greater measure of self-government. The message adds that this Democratic experience justifies further extensions, and that the Jones bill was defeated only because there was not sufficient time for its consideration. The Governor General said that it was expected that this measure would be passed at the coming session of Congress and that its passage was eagerly awaited.

The message recommends the continuance of emergency taxation, the establishment of an insular bank, government aid in the construction of sugar and copra centrals, and larger appropriations for education.

$250 FOR KEEN MOTORMAN.

Railways Co. Who Saved Rewards Murphy, Car from Subway Cave-In.

Motorman Malachi Murphy of the Broadway line of the New York Railways Company is to receive $250 from the Board of Directors of the company in recognition of his presence of mind and good judgment at the time of the cave-in of Broadway at Thirty-eighth Street.

In announcing the award yesterday, Theodore P. Shonts, President of the company, said:

"Murphy felt the tracks sagging under him, but notwithstanding that fact he heroically stuck to his post, quickly reversed his power, and succeeded in backing his car with its passengers out of danger. By his promptness and presence of mind in the emergency Murphy in all probability averted a very serious accident."

MUTINY THREATENS VILLA'S AUTHORITY

BROTHER REPORTED SLAIN

American Consul Reaches El Paso from Chihuahua with Many Refugees—Conditions Serious There.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Oct. 15.—A widespread plot to start a mutiny against Villa and turn the entire border over to Carranza was unearthed today. General Villa is reported to be hurrying here from Casas Grandes.

As a result of the discovery of this plot practically all of the civil and military officials are coming to the American side, and many residents are leaving the town for fear of a mutiny and the looting of stores and houses. American Consul Marion Letcher of Chihuahua arrived at the border tonight with the last American women refugees and many male refugees. He declared he would not return to Villa territory. Conditions are reported to be serious there.

Excitement was increased in Juarez this afternoon, when a report was received from the south that Hipolito Villa, brother and financial chief for General Francisco Villa, had been taken from the troop train at Villa Ahumada and executed after all of the officers and soldiers had mutinied for Carranza. The report could not be verified, either in Juarez or El Paso, as the only wire south Ahumada is closely censored. Hipolito Villa was en route to Juarez, and it was reported that he expected to desert his brother's cause and come to the American side to live. He has had charge of Villa's finances, and had large accounts in the banks here.

Mayor Montfort, the Chief of Police, and practically all of the Villa civil officials in Juarez have followed General Tomas Ornelas to the American side, and Juarez is without either a civil or military head tonight. The officers came over in automobiles late last night, and are bringing their families to this side.

CONSUL SHANKLIN RESIGNS.

Leaves the Service After Difference with Brazilian Envoy in Mexico.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Arnold Shanklin of Missouri has resigned as Consul General of the United States in Mexico. He will return to Mexico City as the representative of an American oil company.

Mr. Shanklin was recalled to the United States after the Brazilian Minister in Mexico, who was in charge of United States interests, complained that Mr. Shanklin had interfered with the work that the Minister was doing in behalf of American citizens. It is understood that the explanation made by Mr. Shanklin satisfied the State Department, but the Administration was exceedingly anxious to show the greatest consideration for Brazil with which it was co-operating in the effort to adjust the troubles in Mexico and therefore did not publicly exonerate Mr. Shanklin.

According to the understanding here the difference between the Brazilian Minister and Mr. Shanklin was trivial. The Minister had accepted an offer of Mr. Shanklin to take charge of the work of furnishing transportation for Americans anxious to leave Mexico. In accordance with their understanding Mr. Shanklin placed a notice in newspapers in Mexico City asking Americans to apply to him for transportation. This, it was said, offended the Brazilian Minister, who contended that Mr. Shanklin should have applied to him for permission to insert the notice. In order to avoid friction and to placate the Brazilian envoy, Mr. Shanklin was instructed to return to the United States. He reported personally to the State Department, which granted him leave for two months.

ENVOYS TO MEET AGAIN.

Will Decide Next Week on Form of Carranza Recognition.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Secretary Lansing will call a conference next week of the Pan-American diplomats to arrange the form in which recognition is to be extended to the de facto Government of Carranza.

The formal act of recognition probably will occur next week with the reception of Eliseo Arredondo, authorized representative of General Carranza. A note very likely will be presented to him, notifying him of the recognition of General Carranza as the head of the de facto Government.

Reports today of activity by Carranza adherents in fomenting a revolution in Guatemala met with prompt denial at the Carranza agency. It was announced that after conferences between Eliseo Arredondo and the Guatemalan Minister here the subject has been brought to the attention of General Carranza, who after investigating reported that none of his men was involved.

STOPPED LEAK AT SEA.

French's Liner's Captain Planned Return to This Port.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—The French Line steamship Espagne arrived at Bordeaux on Wednesday night after an eleven-day voyage from New York, which she left Oct. 2. When a day and a half out from New York the passengers were amazed to see the liner turn about and steam westward. A volley of questions from passengers brought the explanation from the Captain, they said, that the steamship had sprung a leak, and it was thought wise to return to New York.

After about an hour's steaming on a westward course the Espagne turned about again and proceeded on her voyage. It was said that the leak had been found and stopped.

The Espagne will go into drydock for a few days. The new liner Lafayette will sail on her first trip to New York at the end of the present month.

PLAN FOR WASHINGTON WILL

Governor of Virginia Orders Its Return to Fairfax County.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 15.—Governor Stuart has ordered that the will of Martha Washington, recently returned to the State by J. P. Morgan, be given into the custody of Fairfax County, from which it was stolen during the civil war. It will be formally delivered to the Chairman of the Fairfax BoBard of Supervisors on Monday and will take its former place in the Court House.

Governor Stuart acted under a ruling of Attorney General Pollard, who held that the will must be returned to Fairfax County as a part of the county's records, in compliance with the legislative act which authorized the State to bring suit against Mr. Morgan for its recovery. When Mr. Morgan voluntarily returned the will, which had been found in his father's collection of historic manuscripts, he requested that it be placed in Mount Vernon, and offered to build for it a fireproof receptacle.

Bronson-Howard has written the great novel of the year. "God's Man" is a thrilling narrative of the New York of now, one of the few works of fiction that deserves to be called a novel, in the sense of the word when we speak of Dickens, for instance. The scene is New York and Long Island time, present day; purpose, to show through the lives of three young men the social injustice of modern civilization. "God's Man" is powerful, dramatic, absorbing, original in both substance and style. Thirty-five speaking characters live in its four hundred and seventy-five pages and appeal to every emotion.—Advt.

Government's Attorneys Will Present Prosecution's Case on Monday Morning.

MANY TALESMEN EXCUSED

Few Care to Give Up Business for Months—One Tells of Pity for the Old Men Accused.

The jury which will try the eleven past and present New Haven Directors on the charge of having conspired to monopolize the transportation facilities of New England contrary to the Sherman law was completed yesterday. Judge Hunt sat until 6 o'clock to get the challenging of talesmen finished. The Government used all its nine peremptory challenges, but the defendants were content with eight.

In giving the jurors, after they had been sworn in, the usual caution against discussing the case with any one, Judge Hunt emphasized the importance of the trial by the unusual detail of his instructions. Rising from his chair and stepping from the bench to the witness stand, he leaned toward the jury and impressed on them that in no case were they to talk about New Haven matters to any one or to permit any one to approach them upon such mattef.

The Twelve Jurors.

These are the men who were chosen as jurors:

1. STEPHEN D. HIRSCHMAN, real estate, 300 West 109th Street; 200 Broadway.
2. MAX HARTMAN, commission agent; Hotel Wellington.
3. ALBERT E. WELDON, draughtsman, 3,006 Bainbridge Avenue.
4. THOMAS N. PELL, Secretary, 34 Pine Street.
5. FRANK S. DOUGLAS, contractor, 1,089 Nelson Avenue, the Bronx.
6. FRED O. BONNY, Secretary International Flax Fibre Company, 100 Broadway; 249 West 126th Street.
7. JAMES H. CARTON, horse exchange manager, 123 West 96th Street.
9. PETER WAGNER, builder, 236 West 121st Street.
10. C. A. FLINT, electrical engineer; 42 Fordham Road, Westchester.
12. ANDREW L. GRACE, Inspector of the New York Edison Company; 306 West 116th Street.

Before these men had been obtained counsel had excused a most extraordinary number of talesmen, who had contracted such strong opinions on the Sherman law or the merits of this particular case that they could not conscientiously undertake to act as jurors and give up three or four months from their businesses. Sometimes even De Lancey Nicoll grew impatient with the oft-repeated excuse and turned to the court for support, and then Judge Hunt would try to persuade the talesman that, even if he had a private view of what the law might be, he could still pass fairly on whether the law had been violated.

Persistent in His Prejudice.

"The Sherman law is part of the United States law," said Judge Hunt as he reasoned with Herbert Rose of Yonkers. "Can you not apply the United States law as it is laid down by the court?"

The talesman was still unable to say that he could, and Judge Hunt told him that what he now thought was a prejudice might prove to be nothing at all when he came to hear the evidence. Mr. Nicoll wanted to challenge the man for cause, but the Judge was not satisfied, and not until he had completed his own interrogation was Mr. Rose permitted to depart.

Robert E. Fisk, the bond statistician in the banking house of Harvey Fisk & Sons, was one of those who occupied temporarily a seat in the jury box. He said that he had studied the Sherman law in the course of his business and was not satisfied that it could not be improved. It had been intended to rectify one set of evils, but had brought on another, and he thought that another decision of the Supreme Court would clarify it advantageously.

Then he knew most of the defendants personally, but his statement of his position was not sufficient to let him escape. He occupied seat No. 11 for several hours until toward the end of the day he was challenged peremptorily by the Government.

An unusual excuse was given by Charles F. Wright. He is a contractor, who has some work in connection with the Grand Central Terminal and from the moment he took his seat it was evident that he wanted to get back to it. As soon as it had been established that he had none of the fashionable prejudices, he bent over to Mr. Nicoll and told him that he did not think he was fit to pass upon the complicated questions that the trial would bring up.

"It needs," he said, "a man with a college education and much experience to decide them."

Sympathy for Old Men.

The very frankness of the man inclined counsel to take him, but he was dismissed as a result of the question whether he would have any objection to finding the defendants guilty if the evidence seemed to warrant it. He looked at Mr. Rockefeller as he sat leaning on his cane, and said:

"Well, when I look at some of these old defendants I think of my old father. I might be swayed, I think. I should not like to send them to jail."

Once in the examination the "widows and orphans," who are likely to figure largely in the summing up of the Government, came up. Fred M. Bennett of the National Biscuit Company was under interrogation. When he had been asked if he had any connection with Texas, from which R. L. Batts, of counsel for the Government, comes, he had raised a laugh by saying his company had sent dog biscuits there, but he proved his ineligibility as a juror by remarking:

"Some of my family were stockholders of the New Haven and suffered large losses of income."

"Do you believe," demanded Mr. Nicoll, "that these men were responsible for the sufferings of the widows and orphans? Might not the Government have been equally responsible?"

As a contrast to Mr. Bennett, another talesman was sent back to his business because he had made money out of the New Haven. Harry D. Lewis confessed that he had just bought 100 shares of New Haven at 82 and sold them at 83, and cleaned up a little profit. The court room entered into his satisfaction with a general laugh and Judge Hunt remarked: "I think we'll have to excuse him."

Flanigan Put Out.

Daniel M. Flanigan, the retired business man, who had been chosen as foreman almost at the beginning of the examination, was permitted to remain undisturbed until well into the afternoon. He seemed well pleased at having acquired an occupation for the next few months, and it was with a sigh of regret that he stepped down on the peremptory challenge of the defense. There was a good deal of difficulty in finding a satisfactory substitute, and it was late before Stephen D. Hirschman, a real estate man of 300 West 109th Street, was selected for the place.

Even then he seemed so certain of his lack of prejudice for or against the Sherman law or combinations, and for or against the defendants and other wealthy men that Mr. Nicoll questioned him sharply before letting him stay.

William Rockefeller and the other defendants were present during the whole day, but left the conduct of their case to their counsel. When Mr. Rockefeller came in from luncheon his chair was gone, and he had to stand a few minutes by the door. Some of his friends beckoned to him to come and take their places, but he motioned to them not to put themselves out for him, and in the end one of the lawyers gave him his chair. Lewis Cass Ledyard a little later was also almost crowded out, and the court attendant had to bring him a chair from another room.

The counsel for the Government retired to an ante-room of the court for a final consultation before they exercised their last challenge, but the chief counsel for the defense were satisfied with a talk in the court room, as they decided that they would take the jury as the Government left it, without exercising their right to dismiss peremptorily a ninth man.

No Grand Jurors in the Box.

Then just before the jury was sworn in Mr. Batts, mindful of the new trial granted in the Andrew Freeman case because one of the petty jurors had also served on a Grand Jury, which had considered a part of the case, called upon any of the talesmen who might have served on any Grand Jury dealing with any phase of the New Haven matter or the charges brought against the Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada to announce the fact at once. No one replied, and so rising in their places the talesmen were sworn as jurors by Clerk Westervelt.

The Court adjourned until 10:30 o'clock on Monday, when Mr. Batts will open for the Government.

50 ACRES FOR ROCKEFELLER

He Compromises with Catholic Society for the Oussani Tract.

John D. Rockefeller and the Catholic Foreign Mission Society arrived at a compromise yesterday in the dispute over fifty acres of land adjoining the Rockefeller estate at Pocantico Hills. An offer submitted by Mr. Rockefeller was accepted by the Mission Society.

In July, 1912, the society entered into a contract with Joseph T. Oussani for the property for $45,000. John D. Rockefeller did not look favorably upon another institution near his country seat, so he sent his agent to buy the land.

A deal was made by the agent to buy the property for $68,000. Mr. Rockefeller paid down $10,000 to bind the bargain. Then the Mission Society stepped in, maintaining that it had a contract to buy the land for $45,000. Suit was begun, and the decision was that Mr. Oussani must carry out his contract with the Catholic Society.

In the meantime the society had purchased a site north of Briarcliffe and did not need the Pocantico Hills land. It was willing to sell it to Mr. Rockefeller and get the profit which would have gone to Mr. Oussani.

FACTORY SMOKER FINED $50.

Magistrate Punishes Seven Men for Causing Fire Danger.

Seven men were before Magistrate Murphy in Yorkville Court yesterday charged with smoking in buildings where there was danger of fire.

J. Jonas Jacobs of Orange, N. J., was arrested for smoking a cigar in the six-story printing plant at 247 West Thirty-sixth Street, where he is a foreman. Word had been sent to Fire Commissioner Adamson that men were smoking in the building, where there was much inflammable material, and he detailed Inspector Joseph N. Bartick to investigate.

"You must pay a fine of $50 or go to jail for three days," said the Magistrate, and Jacobs paid.

The other men were fined $25 each. Among them were Morris Rokoss of 409 Rodney Street, Brooklyn, and Harris Weinberg of 39 West 114th Street, who were found smoking in the twenty-story building at 105 Madison Avenue, were more than 1,000 men and women cloak and suit makers are employed.

PRODUCE MEN WANT BARGE CANAL ISSUE

Merchants' Association Also Favors $27,000,000 in Bonds to Finish the Work.

DAMAGE CLAIMS ARE COSTLY

Seth Low Says 101 Millions Spent Will Be Wasted Unless More Money Is Supplied.

The Barge Canal Committee of the Produce Exchange held a meeting in the Exchange yesterday for the purpose of arousing interest in the proposed referendum vote on a bond issue of $27,000,000 for completing the construction of the canal and satisfying claims for damages. About 300 were present and Seth Low, former Senator Henry W. Hill of Buffalo, and State Engineer Frank M. Williams were the speakers. All urged the audience to work and vote for the bond issue.

James Ward Warner, President of the Produce Exchange, presided. He said the original appropriation of $101,000,000 had been found insufficient because of damage claims that had been allowed and other things that could not be avoided.

"At the general election in November there is one proposition that all ought to support," said ex-Senator Hill. "That is the Canal Referendum. This is not a political proposition. It deserves the support of all voters. The barge canals are nearly completed. Unless funds are raised by a bond issue, it will be necessary to levy direct taxes to complete the canals. Therefore it is good business to vote for the Canal Referendum."

Seth Low, President of the Chamber of Commerce, and Chairman of the State Barge Canal Committee, said that no policy was open to the State but to finish the barge canal. He said the fact that $101,000,000 had been spent and which would virtually be thrown away unless the other money necessary to complete the canal was raised, made it imperative that some means be found to finish the work.

"Not to provide the money necessary to complete the canal," said Mr. Low, "would be monumental folly on the part of the State. I hope all of you will vote for the referendum. A bond issue of $27,000,000 is called for, but I understand that only about $9,000,000 is needed for the actual completion of construction. The rest of the money will have to be paid anyhow, as I understand it, for estimated damage claims and other charges. I am told that if the bond issue is authorized, the canal can be completed and put into operation in two years."

State Engineer Williams said the canal is 90 per cent. completed. He thought the bond issue, with its lighter tax rate and longer time for payment, the best method of raising the funds necessary to complete the work. Secretary of Commerce William C. Redfield sent a letter in which he said:

"The national commerce needs the canal. We cannot afford to have the friendly people at the North outstrip us in transportation facilities. It must not be that the fair cities which dot the central part of our State shall find their Canadian sisters better off in this respect than they. We may not, either, judge of the fruitfulness of the canal to the interior of our State from past experience. Since the new canal was begun there have been great developments in the motive power for such vessels as will use it; and now it is possible with an effectiveness hitherto unknown to make a great internal water transportation system, by means of which not only Lake Champlain shall be knit to Ontario and to Erie and all through the Hudson to the sea, but by which also the smaller lakes, like Seneca, Cayuga and Oneida, may themselves become a living part of the same great thoroughfare. For economic and for patriotic reasons, for the gain of capital and for the good of labor, for the growth of our State and the benefit of the nation the canal should be finished and finished quickly."

The Merchants' Association also went on record as favoring the adoption of the referendum. Resolutions which were adopted read in part:

"Resolved, That the Merchants' Association of New York urges every voter in New York City to vote in favor of the adoption of the proposal and particularly requests each member of the association, for the promotion of the city's welfare and in order to avoid the crushing burden of additional direct taxation for an improvement which, because of its nature should be paid for by long-term bonds, to appeal to his friends to vote in favor of the referendum on Nov. 2."

DR. HILLIS'S REPLY AWAITED

Ministers to Support Him in Answer to Ferguson.

While there was a lull yesterday in the controversy between the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis and Frank L. Ferguson, his former business agent, the attorneys for the pastor of Plymouth Church were busy preparing a reply to the affidavit filed by Ferguson in court on Thursday. The question whether Ferguson should be examined before Referee William D. Dickey as to his management of the financial affairs of Dr. Hillis will be argued in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, on Tuesday.

Charles T. Lark of Dr. Hillis's attorneys said yesterday that he would present affidavits in court answering the allegations made by Ferguson. It is understood that these will be offered in support of the minister's assertion that the Ferguson affidavit contains "slanderous statements." Several of the affidavits to be submitted by Dr. Hillis, it is said, will be from "ministerial friends," to whom Ferguson alleges, the pastor of Plymouth sold timber licenses at "quick and fabulous profits."

FIND GOOD DOG MUZZLE.

Animal Lovers Approve Device Shown to City Authorities.

Representatives of the Dog Lovers' Protective Association met representatives of the Board of Health and the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals yesterday at the shelter of the latter organization at Twenty-fourth Street and Avenue A, where a private demonstration of a dog muzzle was given. It was a muzzle that was casually found on the open market, an inexpensive little thing of wire and leather, which seemed to come nearer to the solution of this problem for dog owners than any which has yet been found. The muzzle permits the dog to open his mouth sufficiently for breathing, not sufficiently far to bite any one. The straps are adjustable and have the merit of crossing the face and head so that the sight of the dog is not impaired. The authorities are debarred from recommending any make of muzzle, but dog lovers approved of it.

Statistics prepared from the Health Department records during the past year in which the dog muzzling regulation has been in effect show that the Department has had in that time 3,864 complaints of persons bitten by dogs, 480 of which were muzzled at the time the biting was done; 516 held on leash, but not muzzled, and 247 both muzzled and held on a leash. This total is a decrease from the record of 1914, when the total number of people reporting to the board as having been bitten by dogs reached 4,646. The number of deaths of dogs from rabies decreased in the same time from 318 to 55, and the number of deaths of human being traceable to dog bites from 8 to 1, a result due to the muzzle-wearing enforcement.

In the year in which the muzzling regulation has been in force 45,136 unmuzzled dogs have been collected and destroyed by the authorities in charge of enforcing the muzzling regulation. A rather superficial census of the dogs of the City of New York in all five boroughs showed that there are 225,000 remaining, and only 60,000 of them licensed, and that of the latter number only about 1 per cent. go about the streets properly muzzled. To get this army properly muzzled and controlled is the object for which the Department of Health, S. P. C. A., and the Dog Lovers' Protective Association are to work together this Winter.

Woman Caught by Trailing a Pardoned Murderer.

Carrie Weatherby, 40 years old, who described herself as a dressmaker, and said she lived at 107 West Eighty-eighth Street, was locked up at Police Headquarters yesterday on a charge of grand larceny. She was arrested on Sept. 20, 1904, on a charge of stealing $200 from Elroy Clark of Oswego, N. Y., at Fortieth Street and Park Avenue. She was released on $500 bail and then disappeared.

A few nights ago Inspector Cray of Headquarters met Harry Campbell, recently released from a Scottish prison where he was serving a life sentence for murder. He was pardoned by the King for heroic work in rescuing several prisoners from a cave-in in a quarry.

The Inspector questioned Campbell, who said he was living honestly, but knowing that Campbell and Carrie Weatherby had been sweethearts, he detailed two detectives to follow Campbell. Campbell and the woman met at Thirty-eighth Street and Sixth Avenue yesterday morning.

Inspector Cray said Carrie Weatherby was first arrested in July, 1893, and since then had been arrested thirty times, although she served but one term in prison. That was in Cape Town, South Africa, where she was sentenced for six months.

PASTOR TO SHOW HIS GARY SCHOOL

AID TO PUBLIC SCHOOL 45

Church Federation Plans Survey for Extension of the Wirt System.

It was announced yesterday that thirty or more Ministers—Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish—will visit Public School 45 in the Bronx on Tuesday to examine experimental work under the Gary plan. The ministers will have with them laymen and also a number of women, all members of the Interdenominational Committee on Week-Day Religious Instruction, which will hold their meetings in the Trustees' room of Columbia University.

The Rev. Father Caffuzzi of Mount Carmel Church, near Public School 45, has rented an eight-room building and has furnished it with school furniture loaned by the Board of Education. Here children are being taught in groups of 200. All pupils in Public School 45 are Catholics, save about 300. Those who go to the Mount Carmel School do so upon direction of their parents. They stay fifty-five minutes, and to avoid truancy the groups are accompanied to and from school. It is to examine this school that the visitation is to be made Tuesday.

From John Whalen, a member of the Board of Education, it was learned yesterday that children will be dismissed in relays from 9 in the morning until 3 in the afternoon, that churches must bear expenses for teachers, and in some cases for buildings, and that should churches not utilize the time designated for religious instruction the schools will care for them at that time, except when children are in overcrowded schools, when they will be compelled to stay in the street or in their home, unless churches took them in.

Speaking yesterday for the Interdenominational Committee, its Chairman, Bishop Courtney, said:

"The purpose of our committee is to advocate adequate provision for more children in the public schools than the present system makes provision for, and an improved curriculum for them, and to secure religious instruction for all public school children by utilizing any time which the school programs permit. The function of our committee, in short, is to see how far week-day instruction at churches can be developed in this city, especially through the Gary plan."

Commissioner Whalen said it will require two years to reorganize on the Gary plan the fourteen Bronx schools ordered to be so changed. No Gary school is yet planned in Manhattan, and only one in Brooklyn.

The Federation of Churches has, on request of an uptown Manhattan committee, consented to make a survey from 116th to 137th Street, Eighth Avenue to the Hudson River, provided the public furnish money for the expenses. It is said that Episcopal, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, Reformed Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic churches of this district are planning week-day religious work. St. Mary's Episcopal Church in Lawrence Street was said yesterday to have offered its parish rooms to other religious bodies, in so far as its own needs permit, since there are only two churches situated near Public School 43, where a local committee has been named to secure Gary co-operation.

The Interdenominational Committee figures out that of 831,000 children in public schools of New York 180,000 are attending Sunday schools in union with the Sunday School Association, and 41,000 the Jewish religious schools of the Jewish Educational Bureau. In the enlarged membership of the committee all bodies are represented. Commissioner Whalen represents the Roman Catholics with five others. The Rev. Dr. J. L. Magnes, the Rev. Dr. H. P. Mendes, the Rev. Dr. M. H. Harris, and others speak for Jews, and the other bodies have as members the Revs. A. G. Lawson, C. H. Sears, J. M. Philput, L. T. Reed, G. U. Wenner, Allan MacRossie, W. B. Stevens, David G. Downey, and Bishop Wilson.

The Rev. Mr. Sears is to meet delegations of visitors to Public School 45 next Tuesday at 9 o'clock at the Fordham Station of the Third Avenue Elevated, and Dr. Leland is to meet others at 10 o'clock to escort them to the school.

VAN NORDEN DENIES DEBT.

Has Sued Father's Estate for $2,250,000 Accounting, He Says.

Warner M. Van Norden, son of the late Warner Van Norden, founder of the Van Norden Trust Company, yesterday denied that he owed his father's estate $1,000,000, or any other amount, and declared that the estate owed him a part of $2,250,000. A suit in which Mr. Van Norden seeks an accounting for the $2,250,000, which he said he gave his father at various times and for various purposes, is now pending.

Warner M. Van Norden denied that he had received more than $2,000,000 from his father, and asserted that the notes, totaling more than $800,000, now held by the estate, had been cancelled about two years before his father died. He added that he held personal general releases for notes held against the Van Norden estate by the Nineteenth Ward Bank, now in process of liquidation; the Equitable Trust Company, and the Irving National Bank.

ENDS USE OF GEM LAMPS.

Service Board Orders Tungsten Renewals After Jan. 1.

Consumers of electricity in Manhattan Borough will receive from the New York Edison and United Electric Light and Power Companies after Jan. 1, 1916, tungsten lamps as renewals as long as they are of fifty or more watts power, and lamps of less power will cost them only such a price as will repay the company. From Jan. 1 no more of the old-fashioned gem lamps of an efficiency of less than 1¼ watts a candle-power are to be supplied.

This order was adopted yesterday by the Public Service Commission.

Other provisions of the order forbid the companies from refusing to supply current to a consumer, because he owns a private electric plant, provided he does not sell current off his premises. After Jan. 1 the companies may not install on any premises more than one master meter, unless special conditions make it necessary. Then its regulations must prescribe the conditions under which a consumer may receive exchange service and the terms under which the company will sell its meters. Moreover, when the company sells lamps its prices must be based on their actual cost and not on consideration of the amount of current which they consume.

Mrs. Ann Belmont Tiffany in Suit.

A judgment of $550 was taken by default in the City Court yesterday against Mrs. Ann Belmont Tiffany of 63 West Ninth Street. The plaintiff was Jaques Doucet of Paris, who said the money was due for merchandise bought by the defendant in Paris on Oct. 7, 1911. Mrs. Tiffany owns an estate on Fingerboard Road, Fort Wadsworth.

THERE are very few cities in America larger than the city of visitors which New York absorbs every day. Yet Father Knickerbocker manages these things smoothly for his guests and none of his arrangements are smoother than the schedules of the

SUFFRAGISTS FEAR JERSEY LABOR VOTE

BRYAN TO SPEAK TONIGHT

Noonday Meetings in Factory Centres Will Close Women's Campaign on Monday.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 15.—The eleventh hour appeal of the forces arrayed against woman suffrage in New Jersey will be to organized labor. Tomorrow the Men's Anti-Suffrage League of New Jersey will have posted in factories and spread broadcast throughout the State as advertising matter an open letter from W. T. Hickey, Secretary-Treasurer of the Colorado State Federation of Labor, in which he declares that from a labor standpoint woman suffrage has been a failure in his State.

WARNING!

William T. Hickey, for eight years Secretary-Treasurer of the Colorado State Federation of Labor, a fellow-worker with John Lawson, sends a warning message to New Jersey's toiling thousands:

Denver, Col., Oct. 11, 1915.

Speaking from a labor standpoint, suffrage has been a failure in Colorado.

There has never been a measure enacted into law for the protection of women and children of this state that was not initiated, campaigned, and paid for by organized labor.

The Women's Eight-Hour Law was defeated at two sessions of the Legislature through factional fights among the women representatives; the child labor laws and Woman's Minimum Wage Law would never have been enacted if left to the women to champion.

There are many reasons why suffrage has been a failure and I fail to see one act on the part of the women that has been to their benefit during the twenty years of suffrage in Colorado.

I do not want my meaning in this to be misconstrued, as we have some of the finest women in the world in Colorado, many of whom have tried to bring about better conditions, but their efforts have been a failure.

It is with these issues constantly in view that I say suffrage has been a failure in Colorado.

My advice to the laboring people is: Consider this question thoroughly before you lend your support to a measure that you may in after years have reasons to regret.

Assuring you of my assistance at any time, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours, W. T. HICKEY.

The New Jersey State Federation of Labor for the first time since the fight for woman suffrage in this State began failed to give its indorsement to the votes-for-women movement this year. The suffragists this year did not ask it as they have in other years. When the State Federation of Labor held its convention this Summer indorsement of woman suffrage, nevertheless, was embodied in the program as one of the topics to be taken up for discussion. This aroused the suspicion of the leaders in the suffrage movement, and their fears were soon realized, for a resolution indorsing suffrage was tabled by the convention.

The women who are fighting for the vote believe that James Nugent, the Democratic boss of Essex County, the brewers and allied liquor interests, inspired the action of the State Federation of Labor. Before the Convention acted, the Bartenders', Waiters' Brewers', Bottlewashers', and Cigarmakers' Unions had adopted resolutions opposed to woman suffrage, on the ground that the Suffragists were committed to local option and that the advent of woman as an active factor in politics would hasten the hour when prohibition would be ushered in.

The antis have never been convinced, however, that the labor leaders who dominated the convention would be able to deliver the labor vote against woman suffrage. This fear was inspired largely by the fact that the Socialists, who are supposed to wield a stronger influence among the industrial workers of New Jersey than in any of the other Eastern States, had openly indorsed woman suffrage in their State platform.

They had conducted a campaign among this element of the population, but have been somewhat handicapped from the fact that the rules of their organization do not permit of outdoor work, which is the method best adapted for appeals to this class of voters.

The Woman's Political Union, under whose auspices the suffrage campaign in Northern New Jersey, the industrial section of the State, is conducted, made hurried arrangements yesterday to offset the proposed action of the Men's League. Appeals for speakers were sent broadcast, not only throughout New Jersey, but to New York. It is the plan of the suffragists to devote all of Monday—the day before the special election—to a vigorous monday campaign among the factory workers in such industrial centres as Paterson, Newark, Jersey City, Elizabeth, and Elizabethport.

The antis practically wound up their speaking campaign tonight with a big meeting at Krueger's Auditorium in Newark, where anti-suffrage leaders from the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, where woman suffrage amendments are to be voted on this Fall, occupied seats on the platform. The principal speaker was Mrs. A. J. George, Field Secretary of the Women's Anti-Suffrage Association.

Mrs. Horace Brock, President, and Mrs. J. Gardner Casatt, First Vice President of the Pennsylvania Association of Women Opposed to Woman Suffrage; Miss Alice Hill Chittenden, President of the sister organization in New York State, and Miss Mary F. Ames, former President of the Massachusetts organization, were among the invited guests. Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, who was Mrs. Grover Cleveland, occupied a seat on the platform.

Mrs. Garret A. Hobart, widow of the late Vice President, who is an ardent anti-suffragist, sent this message from her home, Carroll Hall, near Paterson:

"Please, remember that I am one of the thousands of women in our State who do not want the vote and that I speak for them when I beg you to vote against woman suffrage. We need your vote to prevent what we believe to be a great injustice to us as well as a grave menace to our State."

The suffragists have reserved their big meetings for tomorrow night.

The suffragists had one of their busiest days. The developments indicated plainly that the fight in this State is regarded by the suffrage devotees in the adjacent States, which are suffrage battleground, just at present as merely a preliminary struggle in which they all must help in order to best promote the suffrage fortunes at home.

A party of New York suffragists came over to Newark gypsy fashion, in a converted lunch wagon drawn by two emaciated horses sensitive enough to feel deeply hurt when urged to move on at the conclusions of the wayside meetings that marked the progress of the expedition through New Jersey. Mrs. Nora Blatch de Forrest, daughter of Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, the suffrage leader in New York, was in charge of the little suffrage band. The other members were Mrs. Rheta Childe Dorr, a magazine writer; Miss Florence Kelly, President of the Consumers' League, and Miss Alice Carpenter, who is a member of the New York State Progressive Committee and has helped to draft Bull Moose platforms in the days when the Bull Moose found the going better than now.

The only man with the party, aside from the negro driver, was Harold A. Content, Assistant United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

The suffragists have reserved their big guns for tomorrow night, when William J. Bryan and United States Senator William E. Borah of Idaho will address big mass meetings at Paterson and Newark.

Mrs. Mina C. Van Winkle, President of the Woman's Political Union, returned to her desk at suffrage headquarters in Newark this afternoon after some weeks' absence. Mrs. Van Winkle busied herself most of the day with the selection of woman watchers for the polling places. There will be two watchers at the polling places in every district where there is reason to believe that fraudulent voting might be attempted.

Mrs. Van Winkle, though a resident of a "silk stocking" ward of Newark, has worked as a volunteer watcher at polling places in some of the wards where stormy scenes were regular incidents at all elections, and any efforts to keep floaters and repeaters away from the polls were habitually resented by the exercise of force.

"If no underground influences get in their work on Tuesday we will win this election," said Mrs. Van Winkle. "The organization men themselves have assured us that we will carry the Eighth, the Ninth, Eleventh, and Sixteenth Wards in Newark, despite anything that the organization leaders may attempt with a view to defeating us."

Champlain L. Riley, President of the New Jersey Men's League for Equal Suffrage, sent a telegram to President Wilson today urging him to issue an executive order granting leave of absence to Federal employes who are citizens of this State in order to enable them to go home and vote. It is said that from 3,000 to 4,000 votes held in Washington would be released if Mr. Riley's request was granted.

BANKS GREET SUFFRAGISTS.

Women Welcomed and Allowed to Present Their Arguments.

Thirty-five banks and trust companies were visited yesterday by suffragists, who made the rounds in decorated automobiles, while in various Assembly Districts the leaders and Captains called on other banks. The suffragists asked for only a minute, but they were invited in and at some banks talked for as much as fifteen minutes. After the closing hour they were allowed to address employees individually. Miss Mary Newcomb, Mrs. M. B. Morgan, Mrs. Charles F. Winch, Miss Portia Willis, Mrs. Mabel Keep, Miss Mary C. Francis, Mrs. T. T. Cotman, Miss Adeline Sterling, Miss Rose Bower, and Miss Katherine Mills were among the speakers.

Eleven big shops have given their clerks permission to march in the Oct. 23 suffrage parade, and they will not be docked for their time. The shops which have given this permission are B. Altman & Co., Franklin Simon & Co., Bonwit, Teller & Co., Stern Brothers, Best & Co., Gimbel Brothers, A. A. Vantine & Co., Lord & Taylor, James McCreery & Co., Bloomingdale Brothers, and John Wanamaker.

Recruiting stations for the parade on Oct. 23 were in charge of actresses yesterday, among them being Fania Harinoff, Katherine Emmett, Katherine Grey, Janet Travers, who is a niece of Janet Scudder, the sculptor; Madge Tyrone, who went to Wall Street; Bernice Golden, and Edith Ellis Furness. Miss Rose O'Neill, who held the recruiting stand in front of the Hotel Astor on Thursday, headed the list in getting marchers for the parade, the ballot box hanging from the tripod over which she presided being packed with ballots.

Miss Oliver will be Marshal of the Actress Division of the parade of the 23d, taking the place of Mary Shaw, who will be out of town.

"Uncle Sam" has been selected for the parade. He appeared at the Empire State Campaign Headquarters yesterday and applied as a good suffragist. He is Eric Blonquist, a letter carrier of 519 East 144th Street. He is 6 feet 5 inches tall. Miss Columbia has not been selected yet.

HONOR MRS. CADY STANTON.

Hundredth Anniversary of Suffragist's Birth Is Observed in Syracuse.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Oct. 15.—The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, the first advocate of woman suffrage in the United States, was held tonight in the Johnson Opera House, Seneca Falls, where the first suffrage convention was held July 19 and 20, 1848.

Henry Stowell, the veteran editor of The Seneca Falls Reville, who was a friend of Mrs. Stanton, presided at the meeting, and Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch, a daughter of Mrs. Stanton, was one of the speakers. Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott of New York, Professor Nathaniel Schmidt of Cornell, and Mrs. H. O. Havemeyer also spoke.

The Johnson Opera House is one of the oldest buildings in Seneca County. A tablet bearing the words of the suffrage resolution presented by Mrs. Stanton and passed by the first convention adorns one of the walls.

FIRE CHIEF KENLON CUT

Budget Sub-Committee Smashes at Dock Department and Makes Adamson Angry, Too.

Slashes in salaries of city employes by the sub-committee of the Board of Estimate Budget Committee furnished excitement at yesterday's session of the committee in the Municipal Building. The trouble started when the sub-committee took up the estimates of the Fire Department and recommended that the salary of Fire Chief Kenlon be reduced from $10,000 to $7,000 and that the salary of Deputy Chief Lally of Brooklyn and Queens, who has been in the department since 1870, be reduced from $7,500 to $6,000.

Both Chief Kenlon and Fire Commissioner Adamson were present when the report of examiners of the Bureau of Standards recommending the salary reductions was made to the sub-committee. When the cut in Chief Kenlon's salary was announced, Commissioner Adamson jumped to his feet and asked:

"Who recommended that?"

"Didn't you know about it?" asked Borough President Pounds, one of the members of the main Budget Committee.

"I certainly did not," replied Commissioner Adamson, with considerable anger.

Chief Kenlon also jumped up and with flushed face demanded that he be allowed to make a statement.

Kenlon's Threat to Resign.

"If anybody here is looking for a new Chief of the Department," he began, but before he was allowed to continue, President Mathewson spoke up.

"I don't think it is as bad as that," he said. "At any rate I would not offer my resignation tonight, if I were you."

Director Tirrell of the Bureau of Standards said the cut in Chief Kenlon's salary had been suggested because the present salary was far out of proportion for the work done, and that in no city in the world was such a large salary paid the Chief of Department. As Pounds and Mathewson were the only members of the main Budget Committee present, both McAneny and Prendergast, the remaining members being away, they suggested that no action be taken until the full committee had met and gone carefully over the schedules.

Chief Kenlon was very anxious to find out how his position had been appraised and requested that he be allowed to have a few words to say when the matter was again taken up. This was agreed to and the committee passed to the reduction in Deputy Chief Lally's salary. When Commissioner Adamson protested against the reduction both Pounds and Mathewson agreed to let the matter go over for the present.

The next item was a proposed reduction in the salary of the Commissioner's secretary, Theodore Stitt, from $3,800 to $3,360. Commissioner Adamson himself had requested that the Secretary's salary be reduced to $3,500 in order to conform to the proposed standardization of the office. The Commissioner with considerable heat objected, however, to its being cut any lower. He said Mr. Stitt was more than earning his present salary and that he would not consent to its being reduced below $3,500. Thereupon the members of the main committee overruled the sub-committee and placed the salary at $3,500.

Cut the Chaplains $100.

The four chaplains in the department were reduced from $1,000 a year to $900. Four volunteer companies of Whitestone, L. I., lost their appropriation from the city for next year. Commissioner Adamson had requested an increase of salary for Chief Fire Marshal Thomas Brophy from $3,000 to $4,000, but the Bureau of Standards recommended that it be increased to only $3,360. Borough Presidents Pounds and Mathewson made it $3,600.

The sub-committee also swung its axe hard on the Dock Department. It recommended the abolition of about 100 places and the reduction in salaries of fifty water tenders, twenty oilers, eighteen marine engineers, and five foremen laborers. It is the second blow the employes of the Dock Department have received in the Mitchel administration. Last year 478 men were dropped. Among the places recommended abolished is that of Secretary of the department, held by William C. Malone, father of the Collector of the Port, Dudley Field Malone, and a personal friend of the Mayor. It pays $4,000 a year.

The abolition of the office was taken to mean a direct slap at the Mayor by Controller Prendergast, whose subordinates make up a majority of the budget sub-committee. The examiners of the Bureau of Standards recommended the abolishment of the offices and the reductions in salaries, and their recommendations were adopted by the sub-committee.

Dock Department Cuts.

Dock Commissioner Smith requested $1,939,505.05 for his department for 1916. His allowance for 1915 was $2,190,050.47. The budget examiners recommended that the 1916 request be reduced to $1,653,-895.21, a decrease from the 1915 allowance of $536,155.26.

Another important place recommended abolished is that of the cashier of the department, held by Silas Strauss, at $4,000 salary. Several new places were created in the department which would be filled according to the new standardized methods.

The largest group of employes to be affected by the abolishments recommended are ninety-seven stokers, who receive an average of $1,080 a year. These positions are not needed, the examiners say, as plans have been approved by the Commissioner to equip the municipal ferries with oil-burning engines. For this $270,120 is allowed, which is said to be much less than would have to be provided if coal was burned next year in all the boats.

The water tenders whose salaries are recommended reduced receive $1,140, and they will be paid hereafter $1,020. The oilers are reduced from $1,140 to $960, the marine engineers from $1,650 to $1,260, and the foremen laborers from $1,460 to $1,260.

In the estimate made by Commissioner Smith he requested that his own salary of $7,500 a year be reduced to $5,000, and that the $2,500 be given First Deputy Harrison. The sub-committee decided they had not the power to grant this request.

PRAISE NEW CONSTITUTION.

Wickersham and O'Brien Address Queens Chamber of Commerce.

Former Attorney General George W. Wickersham and ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien defended the proposed new Constitution as a great forward step in the interest of property owners and residents of this State in addresses before the Queens Chamber of Commerce in Long Island City yesterday afternoon. Mr. O'Brien said that former Judge Edgar M. Cullen was unduly alarming labor by his attitude toward the new Constitution.

"I presented to the convention a resolution, drawn by Judge Parker providing that the civil courts should always be above the military courts," said Judge O'Brien. "I also advocated this measure before the convention, but it was the judgment of the majority that no State had such a clause in its Constitution, so it was not necessary for New York State. To reject the Constitution for this reason alone would be like rejecting a good dinner because some sweetmeat was not provided."

Mr. Wickersham said the Constitution was a non-partisan measure and should be supported by every party.

"The Republican majority was so great," said Mr. Wickersham, "that the men of that party could have swept aside all consideration of the proposals from the Democrats, but because of that big majority we considered that more careful attention should be given to the claims of our opponents. As a result, the final draft was adopted by a majority of both the Republicans and Democrats in the convention."

C. C. DODGE BEQUEST TO RELIGION A MYTH

ESTATE $29,734.84 IN DEBT

Ask Appointment of Referee to Decide on Disposition of Available Assets.

The bequest of Charles Cleveland Dodge, supposedly amounting to about $250,000, to be used for the "furtherance of Christian work in the world," as his will expressed it, is only mythical, according to the testator's son, Charles Stuart Dodge of 20 East Sixty-ninth Street, who, as executor of the estate, yesterday filed his accounting in the Surrogates' Court.

The younger Dodge shows that the present indebtedness of the estate, above all assets and exclusive of the commissions of the executors and trustees and the disbursements attendant upon the accounting, is $29,734.84. Mr. Dodge also asks an order of the Surrogate appointing a referee to determine just how these debts, some of which were loans made by his sister, Mrs. Mary Ethel Cleveland Sanger of Sangerville, N. Y., to help pay the funeral expenses, are to be paid.

Mr. Dodge recites that the bequest to religious purposes was to consist of 2,100 shares of the stock of the Boston, New York & Cape Cod Canal Company, which, he believes, is valued at about $20 per share. However, the executor explains further, in order to settle certain claims against the estate, he transferred 500 shares of the stock to Willard Howland, 175 shares to William O. Brown, and 30 shares to Charles Henry Phelps. He further recites that August Belmont & Co. and the canal people, who are in possession of the stock, have not consented to the transfers, except in the instance of Mr. Phelps, without a Surrogate's order so directing.

The executor further says that the direction of the will which provided for the formation of a corporation to further the charities was not complied with because there are no funds. He also says that there are 1,375 shares of the canal company stock still unattached, and he wants to know whether himself and sister, as beneficiaries under the will, are not entitled to the stock, valued at about $27,500, under the Decedents' Estate law. He recites that no payments have been made to any beneficiary.

Lapland Brings $1,250,000 in Gold.

The White Star liner Lapland arrived here yesterday from Liverpool with $1,250,000 in gold, in charge of Purser Greenslade, consigned to the Guarantee Trust Company and the Irving National Bank. Some of the passengers were under the impression that the liner had been convoyed by torpedo boat destroyers, but this was denied by Captain J. Bradshaw and his officers who said they had not seen a warship since leaving Liverpool. The Lapland will leave for Halifax on Tuesday to carry 3,000 troops to England.

Ten Women Arrested in Strike.

Women took part yesterday in the disturbances growing out of the strike of the New York Dock Company's freight handlers on the Brooklyn waterfront, and, as a result, ten of them were arrested. All of the women arraigned in the Adams Street Court were wives of strikers. They were accused of throwing stones at strikebreakers at Fulton Street. Magistrate Nash imposed a fine of $1 in each case.

TOOK BABY AS LOAN PLEDGE.

East Side Man Then Fined $2 for Disorderly Conduct.

In fining Michael Dennenhof of 43 Allen Street $2 for disorderly conduct, Magistrate Ten Eyck in the Tombs Court yesterday said it was not proper to appropriate a baby in payment of a loan. Dennenhof went to the home of a neighbor, Benny Pacboack, at 62 Allen Street on Thursday night to get $18 which Pacboack owed him. Mrs. Pacboack said her husband was not at home and she knew nothing about the loan.

Dennenhof insisted that he ought to be paid. The woman said he had better go away. Whereupon, Dennenhof pulled her 2-year-old boy from his high-chair and carried him out of the room, exclaiming:

"No money, no baby."

Children's Harvest Home.

Park Commissioner Cabot Ward announced yesterday that the "little farmers" of the Corlear's Hook Park farms, South and Jackson Streets, will have their "harvest home" today. The little farmers will cook and serve the vegetables they raised. Thirteen poles, fifteen feet high, will be decorated with the products of the farms. Some of the children will be dressed to represent vegetables. Mrs. Fannie G. Parsons, director of the children's school farms, will be in charge of the celebration.

Mrs. Moncrieff Gets Child.

The Appellate Division yesterday, in reversing an order of Supreme Court Justice Goff, awarded the custody of Alice May Moncrieff, 7 years old, daughter of James R. Moncrieff, the commercial artist, to her mother, Mrs. Alice M. Moncrieff, pending the trial of a separation suit in the Supreme Court. Mrs. Moncrieff, the higher court holds, is also entitled to alimony pending the trial.

The Money Master

By Sir Gilbert Parker

"Sir Gilbert Parker has drawn many interesting and many lovable characters, but never perhaps one quite so quaint or so lovable as this Jean Jacques Barbille. . . .'The Money Master' is a novel which is not only worth reading, but worth keeping."—N. Y. Times. "The triumph of a masterpiece of story-telling is this character of Barbille. He is a monumental creature because he is intensely human in his struggle and his evolutions, above all in his buoyancy and rightness of intention."—London Observer. "The book is as kindly as it is arresting. If anyone desires romance pure and undefiled as a relief from the troubles of the times, it is here. 'The Money Master' is the work of a master craftsman."—London Standard.

Heart of The Sunset

By Rex Beach

"A tale of the Mexican-Texas border, of revolution, of rangers, of desert and brilliant skies, of dangers and death, such is Rex Beach's new story. With his love of the wilds, of adventure and romance, the author is at his best with such a scene for his plot, and he has worked out an absorbing story."—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

The Bachelors

By William Dana Orcutt

A strong story of American life—an impressive portrayal of varying types of men affected in different ways by college ideals in meeting the world as we know it to-day. The action moves steadily forward with cumulative interest to a dramatic and unexpected climax. And of course where there are "bachelors" there must be romantic complications.

Jan A Dog and a Romance

By A. J. Dawson

The story of a wonderful dog—half wolfhound, half bloodhound—of his first training in a quiet English neighborhood, and of his active career in Canadian wilds. His obedience, bravery, endurance, and daring, and his keen delight in the rough life of the North, make of Jan a kind of superdog, whose adventures can thrill as those of a human hero. And the human characters of the novel are shown as they appear in the dog's eyes.

City to Guarantee Against Deficits —Head of Fifth Avenue System Protests.

Another motor bus service in Manhattan and the Bronx, north of Fourteenth Street, will in all probability be started in a few months, as the result of the report which the Franchise Committee of the Board of Estimate has prepared for presentation to the board. It proposes to give the franchise to the New York Motor Bus Company of 1 Wall Street, of which Roland R. Conklin is President and William R. Willcox and Bainbridge Colby are counsel, for a service entirely independent of the existing lines of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company. As the Franchise Committee consists of Mayor Mitchel, President McAneny and Borough President Mathewson, it is considered likely that its recommendations will be accepted.

One of the features of the arrangement which the new company will accept is the operation of a certain number of motor buses over short routes for 5 cents. It will charge for its long north and south lines 10 cents, but for those running through Washington Heights and across the city the fare will be 5 cents, with a transfer to the longitudinal lines for another 5 cents. Moreover, for rides entirely north of 125th Street on any line, the price will be only 5 cents.

Another point in the new arrangement is the right reserved to modify the routes on which the new buses will run, and to order the establishment of new services to connect up any of the existing lines. Moreover, the city will retain control of the headway schedule on which the motor buses will be run, and other details of operation, including the character of the vehicles. On the other hand, in consideration of this right to control, the city undertakes to bear any deficit there may be in the earnings of the new company, and agrees, if that deficit amounts to 75 per cent. of the payment to the city under the franchise, to consent to the abandonment of some of the routes.

The two main routes of the new company will start from Union Square. One will run up the west side by Fourteenth Street, Seventh Avenue, Broadway, Amsterdam Avenue, Eighty-sixth Street West End Avenue, Broadway and St. Nicholas Avenue to Fort George. The other will follow the east side by Fourteenth Street, Irving Place and Lexington Avenue to Twenty-third Street, and then up Madison Avenue to Fortieth Street, then to Fifth Avenue to Fiftieth Street, and from there to Park Avenue and so up to Ninety-sixth Street. In addition there will be a line running from Manhattan Avenue and 110th Street up Morningside Park East and Convent Avenue to Broadway at 168th Street.

The five-cent fares will be charged between Union Square and the Pennsylvania Station and between the Pennsylvania Station and the Grand Central Terminal, the east and west main lines of the new company between Thirty-first and Thirty-third Streets, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Streets, and Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Streets, and along the three transverse roads in Central Park. In addition there will be a short line serving the Washington Heights district west of Broadway.

The franchise is to be for fifteen years with a ten years' renewal clause. The buses which the company promises to put on will be of the low stepless variety with side doors and double decks. They will have their stairways inside and will seat forty-two passengers. According to Mr. Weaver, the company will be able to place at least 100 of these in operation within six or eight months. The company will pay the city 5 per cent. of its gross earnings and will guarantee a minimum payment of from $30,000 to $60,000, according to the routes it operates. It has already deposited with the city a certified check for $60,000 as proof of its power to carry out the contract if it is awarded to it.

The Fifth Avenue Coach Company was not willing to give the city any control over its operation or the right to order extensions of its service. It was, however, prepared to share its net profits equally with it or to pay 5 per cent. on its gross earnings, guaranteeing an annual payment of from $35,000 to $65,000. But it also asked that any franchise tax, which might be imposed upon it, should be set off against this payment.

R. W. Meade, President of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, criticised last night the report of the Franchise Committee. He argued that the committee had ignored the chance of giving the traveling public a unified bus service throughout the city at a single fare in the hands of an experienced and efficient company. Moreover, he pointed out the city was not going to consult the owners of the real estate affected by the new lines, and appeared to have been dazzled by the prospect of a few five-cent fares for the short-haul lines.

"Two more public hearings, he added, would have to be given before the franchise was granted, and he believed that there would be many protests against the award to the New York Motor Bus Company.

WANTS 8,000,000 SERMONS.

Go-to-Church Committee Believes New Yorkers Can Deliver Them.

Eight million sermons by the inhabitants of New York tomorrow are asked for by the Go-to-Church Sunday Committee, composed of fifty-five pastors of various denominations. Its final appeal, issued yesterday through its Chairman, the Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young, pastor of the Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, reads in part as follows:

"Eight million sermons ought to be preached by New Yorkers tomorrow. Four million persons in this city could go to church. Each one who does go will preach a sermon from the starting place to the church, and from the church back to the starting place, a sermon, the chief points of which will be, 'I believe in showing thus by my example my appreciation of what the churches have done, are doing, and may do for human kind. I want at least once this year to be counted with those who believe in God and the worship of Him. I am willing to forego for this one Sunday, anyway, the extra rest, the reading, the visiting, the trip, the business, the recreation, or whatever else is necessary to make it clear that I am not against my churchgoing neighbors in their regular religious activities, and I do not wish by staying away to cause the rising generation to infer that I am hostile.'

"Remember, New York has every kind of church, and therefore can suit anybody's taste. There is absolutely no excuse for absence on the score of ecclesiastical choice. Over 2,000 churches open their doors to welcome strangers."

SERUM TOO LATE TO SAVE STACKPOLE

SYSTEM HAD BEEN POISONED

Conscious Until Last, "Judge" of Riverhead Bids Family Brave Farewell.

George F. Stackpole, who was taken to Bellevue Hospital on Sunday afternoon suffering from anthrax, died early yesterday morning. Serum-vaccine administered to the patient carried Mr. Stackpole past the danger of choking to death from the swelling in his throat, but the poison of the disease had so thoroughly permeated his system before the vaccine was injected that he could not recover. Mr. Stackpole died of heart failure and congestion due to the ravages of the disease.

Mr. Stackpole whose spirit had made many who never heard of him before his illness ardently wish for his recovery, was clear headed until within five minutes of his death. Several hours before his death he seemed to be getting stronger, and told members of his family assembled about him that he "felt smart." But at 2:30 o'clock, an hour before he died, he felt himself growing weaker. A little while later, turning to his son, he said:

"I feel that I'm going to lose the good fight, Philip—but I'm not afraid of what is to come. I hope you will live such a life, my boy, that you can face death bravely when it comes. All of us have to die, some time—and we never know when."

Five minutes before his death, Mr. Stackpole murmured, "Good-bye," and died quietly.

Dr. H. E. Dwyer of the Bellevue Hospital Medical Staff, who had been the patient's almost constant attendant, made the last effort to carry Mr. Stackpole through the final crisis, but he could do nothing against the poison. The authorities of the hospital said that, because of the death, the Eichhorn serum-vaccine which was sent from the Bureau of Animal Industry in Washington should not be considered valueless. No matter what its potency might be, they said, it was administered too late in Mr. Stackpole's case to cure the disease.

Mr. Stackpole's body was sent to his home in Riverhead yesterday afternoon. By order of the Board of Health it was inclosed in a sealed, metallic casket, so that there might be no danger of contagion.

Mr. Stackpole would have been 72 years old next month. He was born in Lebanon, Me., and received his academic education in Dartmouth College, from which he was graduated in 1872. He went to Riverhead in the same year to become Principal of the high school. Several years later he was admitted to the bar. He became Justice of the Peace of Suffolk County, which position he held for nineteen years. He practiced law until attacked by anthrax. Throughout his illness there was much testimony by friends who came from Riverhead to inquire after him of the affection and esteem in which he was held by the people of Riverhead. To all of them he was "the Judge."

It was said at Bellevue Hospital yesterday that Martin Bradsky, who was taken to the hospital from Riverhead on Wednesday night suffering from what was feared to be incipient anthrax, had only an abscess on his neck that would heal within a few days.

Dr. John C. Helper of Benbow City, Ill., a sufferer from anthrax there, was reported here yesterday to be growing weaker. His physicians, however, have not given up hope of his recovery.

CANADA'S PART IN THE WAR.

Members of Transcontinental Party Told of the Sacrifices Made.

Special to The New York Times.

ON BOARD FIRST TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAIN OVER THE CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILROAD, PORTAGE, LA PRAIRIE, Man., Oct. 15.—The members of the Canadian Parliamentary party who are opening this third Canadian railroad line across the continent, were entertained in Winnipeg today by the Mayor and citizens of Winnipeg and, at a luncheon given by the Canadian Club at the Royal Alexandra Hotel, heard some of the things that Western Canada is doing for the empire in the European war.

The whole trend of the address at the luncheon was patriotic. The members of Parliament heard from the spokesman for Manitoba that western Canada felt that Canada was in the war to the end, and that no effort of hers would be spared to bring about the triumph of the Allies.

A. M. Nanton, speaking for the Canadian Patriotic Fund, quoted figures to show that from a seven and a half million population, Canada had already put 150,000 troops in the field, that is one person in fifty of the total population was already on the firing line. Alberta had sent one in every twenty-seven of its population, Manitoba one in twenty-nine, British Columbia one in thirty, and Saskatchewan one in forty.

Moreover, for every person in the population Manitoba had contributed $1.43 to the Patriotic Fund which cares for the dependents and the maimed left to the public care by the war. These figures were quoted in no boastful spirit, but soberly set forth to indicate what the Canadian Middle West was doing for the Empire and what the people of that section expected from the Eastern provinces. They were enthusiastically received and succeeding speakers, who intimated that still greater efforts were desirable, were cheered in a manner which showed that Canada would give freely of men and money up to the limit of her resources.

To the man who travels across the continent and sees even in the smallest villages little squads of sturdy men drilling under an officer in khaki there is no doubt how Canada feels about this war.

T. P. O'Connor mentioned the work of Americans in raising a fund, and also praised the effort to the same end being made by the Lord Mayor.

SAYS ONLY GERMANY CAN SAVE ARMENIANS

Lord Bryce Declares Pressure of Neutral Opinion May Force Her to Act.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—"There is only one power that can stop the Armenian atrocities, and that is Germany," declared Viscount Bryce at a meeting today at the Mansion House in support of the Lord Mayor's Fund in aid of the Armenian sufferers. He declared that the only remedy was to bring the pressure of world opinion, particularly of neutral opinion, to bear on Germany, and force her to take action.

Lord Bryce, who proposed a resolution condemning the reported atrocities, paid tribute to the intelligence and progressiveness of the Armenians, who, he said, were far superior to the Mohammedans, and he declared the case was not so much one of religious fanaticism as it was of deliberate extermination of a people of whom the Turks were envious.

The horrors of the massacre exceeded anything in the history of persecutions, declared the speaker. Women and children, he said, had been driven across the Arabian desert with whips by the Turks, who went mad, and at Trebizond carried their victims out to sea in boats and drowned them. "Women, many of whom were as highly civilized as any of us," he asserted, "had been sold into slavery, where they were Mohammedanized. He declared untrue the excuse offered by Germans for the Turks to the effect that the Armenians had rebelled, saying that the Armenians were quiet and inoffensive until forced to defend themselves.

In seconding the resolution Cardinal Bourne said that the evidence was so strong that even Germany was not able to deny the massacres. Neutrals, he said, should follow the example of Pope Benedict, who wrote a personal protest and plea to the Sultan.

Sir Edwin Pears, who had been the leader of the British bar in Constantinople, apparently surprised his hearers by saying that persecution was not an article of Mohammedan faith, and that the massacres were deplored by the mass of the Turks.

WE CAN DO NOTHING FURTHER

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—The United States Government has done all it can, officially, toward relieving the condition of the Armenians in Turkey, in the opinion of State Department officials. They told Representative John J. Eagan of New Jersey today that, beyond making informal representations to the Turkish Government through Ambassador Morgenthau, pointing out the bad effect upon public opinion in the United States of the treatment of the Armenians, nothing further could be done.

Representative Eagan had inquired as to the conditions among the Armenians and concerning the policy of the United States in the matter.

DROP JEWISH CONFERENCE.

No Meeting to Consider War Problems to be Held in Washington.

The Jewish conference to be held in Washington on Oct. 24 has been abandoned, it was announced yesterday. This conference was called by the American Jewish Committee to consider the Jewish problem, and especially what American Jews may do when the war ends to get that problem before the world and, if possble, obtain a settlement of it. The Chairman of the American Jewish Committee is Louis Marshall, and it was formed originally for purposes of relief.

Immediately after the Washington conference was called, opposition to it developed, led by Louis D. Brandeis. This was due to the conviction that the men to settle questions that affected 13,000,000 people ought to be chosen by all Jews, not by a selected few.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Ambassador Thomas Nelson Page at Rome cabled to Secretary Lansing today that he had never expressed an opinion concerning the Italian campaign nor given out any expression whatsoever in regard to the probable results or merits of the European struggle. The State Department had inquired concerning a published report that the Ambassador had given an interview regarding the Italian army and as to success of the Italian campaign.

FOR A HIGHER TAX ON PUBLIC UTILITIES

COMMITTEE HASN'T TIME

Will Hold Executive Session Today to Consider Income, Habitation, and Occupation Taxes.

Senator Ogden L. Mills, Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Taxation, said yesterday there had been an overwhelming sentiment among witnesses examined in favor of a State income tax, but that it was too early yet to determine what form of taxation would be recommended to take the place of the present personal property tax as a means of producing revenue.

The committee will hold an executive session at Mr. Mills's home today and discuss these propositions: The so-called classified personal property tax, that is, the taxation of personal property by classes at a lower rate than the general property tax; habitation and occupation taxes, and a State income tax. The committee will hold several sessions upState, and in the meantime counsel will put the various recommendations in shape for submission to the public for suggestion and criticism.

The committee will return to this city in December and examine more witnesses and then get its report ready for submission to the Legislature next February.

"If we can work out and solve the personal tax problem, and the Legislature is willing to treat with our suggestion, we can go on, but if what we propose is thrown out of the window by the public and the Legislature it would be idle to continue," said Senator Mills. "Yesterday's test question seems to have been misunderstood, partly through a suggestion made by me to the effect that it would be possible by means of an income tax running from 1 to 3 per cent. to raise some $45,000,000.

Committee Has No Plan Yet.

"The estimate was not made by me, nor was it in any sense accurate or final, in so far as the income tax proper is concerned. The committee is not committed to the plan either tentatively or finally. As a matter of fact, at the last executive session of the committee the Chairman was authorized to prepare two or three substitutes for the personal property tax. At the executive session of the committee to be held tomorrow the Chairman will make such a report.

"In view of the misunderstanding which seems to have arisen about an income tax, I desire to state that public service corporations are a separate and distinct class. They enjoy special privileges from the State, and should pay higher taxes. The subject of taxing public service corporations is, however, so vast and intricate that the committee has been and is unable to consider it in the short time at its disposal. A Connecticut commission took some two years to complete this task, while this committee has but six months at its disposal. I hope that the committee at some future date may be able to take up this question, but any discussion at this time on the subject of taxation must be understood not to include public service corporations."

It was explained that the committee in its estimate of producing $45,000,000 in revenue did not consider taxing corporations 3 per cent. on their net income in lieu of the present franchise tax. What was meant was the imposition of a larger tax on general business corporations or mercantile companies under the general franchise tax law. Under Section 182 of the law the tax on these corporations brings in at present about $2,000,000. It is estimated that, with the imposition of an additional 1 per cent. tax, the companies would yield to the State $8,000,000 a year. It is estimated that these companies in the State earned last year $650,000,000, and the committee feels that they should be made to yield a much larger revenue to the State.

Personality Tax Condemned.

A. C. Pleydell, Secretary of the New York Tax Reform Association, the first witness yesterday, said that the collection of the tax on personal property is almost impossible, chiefly because the population changes so frequently, making it difficult to reach them by mail or by personal call. He also said that if the "stamps on checks" system were in operation people would resort to currency instead of checks.

Ex-City Controller Herman A. Metz appeared as a member of the Merchants' Association. He favored a tax on all persons, as that would embrace teachers, lawyers, and others.

"Do away with the local personal property tax," said Mr. Metz. "I do not believe individuals should be taxed the same as corporations, because corporations have facilities individuals do not enjoy."

Mr. Metz said that corporations would naturally go away to avoid a tax they would not have to pay elsewhere. He frankly admitted that he personally has moved out of the city and maintained two offices in Esopus, N. Y., thereby escaping local taxation.

"I go there only once a year to the stockholders' meetings," he said. "The law allows me to do that."

Asked if he favored classified taxation, the witness said it was a question where to draw the line. He said he had removed several factories from New York to New Jersey, not to escape an income tax, but because of the restraint placed upon him here.

"The New York laws," he said, "interfered with my ability to compete with other men, and that amounted to loss of income. The conditions at present are unfair, and I say we should equalize taxation all over the State. The corporations up State have no road or school taxes to pay. This is not fair."

Metz Is for an Income Tax.

Mr. Metz said the clump in real estate was due to general conditions, and not to taxes. When he was Controller he said there was a sum of $36,000,000 in uncollectible taxes. He said it was a mistake to impose heavy taxes on people because their names appear in the Blue Book or the telephone directory. He said it was easier to drive people away than to collect taxes from them.

Mr. Metz declared that a flat rate of 1 per cent. tax on incomes of $1,000 to $2,000 and a 2 per cent. tax above that up to $50,000 would most likely be satisfactory. He thought that citizens would be willing to pay 2 per cent. on their incomes rather than leave the State.

"If they will not pay it let them get out of the State," he said. "They're not good citizens."

Mr. Metz did not think well of the listing system, as it would be easy for people to get around it, he said. "For instance," he said, "a man might say he owned only the piano, that his wife owned the automobile, and the hired girl something else."

NATION'S AIR SAFETY NEW WRIGHT CO. AIM

Men of Millions, All Americans, Pledged to Work for Ample Preparedness.

SEEK NO FLYING MONOPOLY

Small Aero Builders Encouraged—New Owners Elect Officers and Announce Policy.

The new owners of the Wright Company will co-operate in every possible way with the movement for national preparedness.

The announcement was made yesterday after a meeting at 14 Wall Street, at which new officers were chosen for the company which owns aeroplane patents, factories, and training school bearing the Wright name.

This means that the preparedness movement will have the support of a body of capitalists, among whom are many of the strongest bankers and wealthiest business men in this country. As it was said yesterday: "This new company will be as strong if not stronger than any corporation in this country."

The officers elected yesterday were: President—T. Frank Manville, President and a Director of the H. W. Johns-Manville Company and a Director of the Mechanics and Metals National and the Merchants National Banks of this city; Vice President—C. S. Jennison, an attorney of 14 Wall Street, who arranged the purchase of the Wright Company stock for William B. Thompson, head of the syndicate, and Treasurer—Harvey D. Gibson, Vice President and a Director of the Liberty National Bank and interested in many other corporations.

Sutphen a Director.

The Directorate includes the officers and Orville Wright and Henry R. Sutphen, a Trustee of the American Savings Bank and a Director of the Elco Company, the Electro-Dynamic Company, the Holland Submarine Torpedo Company, the National Association of Engine and Boat Manufacturers, and Vice President and a Director of the Electric Boat Company. As an official of this latter company Mr. Sutphen recently sold to the British Government $22,000,000 worth of forty-knot power boats which are being delivered and are used to scout for submarines.

It was announced that four or five more Directors would be added as soon as the syndicate decided upon the men who would be most useful in forwarding the success of the enterprise.

The advent of this powerful corporation in the aviation field will not result in crushing competition by the independent aeroplane manufacturing companies, as was feared in aviation circles when the announcement of the sale of the Wright Company was published.

"It is our intention to develop aviation in every possible manner," Mr. Jennison said yesterday, "and we feel that it would be a backward step to hinder the small constructors. They are all doing good work, and many of them are very successful in their adaptations of the Wright patents. Furthermore, if it were made impossible for them to use the Wright patents, they would go out of business, and aviation would lose the benefit of their researches and experiments.

"While we have not decided upon the basis on which the use of the patents will be granted to independent constructors, it is safe to say that an eminently fair arrangement will be offered. It is probable that a royalty will be fixed, at which our company will receive a stated sum for every aeroplane built. This, however, will be taken up at a meeting in the near future, possibly at our meeting next week.

"The men behind the new company are men who are accustomed to succeed. They do not go into a thing until they are sure that it can be made successful, and in this case the ground was carefully studied long before the negotiations for the purchase of the Wright Company were started. With their great resources, second to none in this country, they will put the aeroplane on a business basis and will develop it to its greatest efficiency, combined with absolute safety, so that it will become a plain commercial commodity instead of a freak for exhibition purposes or a destroyer for war use.

"We have taken over the Wright factories and schools and will add more factories as soon as they are needed. It is likely that a large one will be established at Tidewater, although we have not as yet considered a site. At the Dayton training school, there are now more than thirty Canadian aviators, many of whom are being trained for service with the British aviation corps, and we already have applications for instruction from nearly four hundred young men, who will be accommodated within a few months.

Wright Chief Engineer.

"Orville Wright, who is retained as a Director, and who will be our chief aeronautical engineer at a large salary, will be in charge of the laboratory in Dayton. He has been criticised in the past for refusing to let the Wright patents be used on terms that would allow the small constructor to do business, and it has been said that he was too selfish with his patents for the good of aviation. This was unjust. Mr. Wright became involved soon after the formation of his company in 1909 in a number of infringement suits, with the result that he was forced to give more of his time to protecting the patents than to promoting their use. Now, however, this will no longer be the case. We will take care of everything. Mr. Wright will continue his life's work of perfecting the aeroplane and we will promote the patents in every way possible. As you see, our advent in the aviation field will promote the manufacture of aeroplanes, instead of throwing a damper on the business."

In reply to a question regarding the stand adopted by the syndicate in the matter of national preparedness, Mr. Jennison said:

"We have had a number of communications from various bodies, and we are for the movement and will co-operate in every way to make it a success. One of the greatest needs of this country is an efficient and sufficiently numerous fleet of aeroplanes, as has been demonstrated by the European war, and every member of the syndicate feels that the United States should be properly protected in the air as well as on land and sea.

"Contrary to rumors that have been circulated, there are none but Americans interested in the new Wright Company. Neither the Allies nor any other foreigner has representation in the company, and it is the policy of the company to build American machines with American labor, for a world-wide market."

In regard to the design of aeroplane to be built, it is the intention to combine all the safety and stability of the Wright designs with great speed. Such machines will be built in various sizes, the larger being greater than any yet flown, and all will be equipped with the Wright stabilizer. In addition to biplanes it is expected that monoplanes will also be manufactured as well as hydro-aeroplanes of all types and sizes. An important part of the work that will be taken up by Mr. Wright and a corps of trained experts, and in which it is said Mr. Sutphen will assist, is the development of motors. It is planned to build a motor which will eliminate the possibility of "going dead," now the greatest danger in aviation.

COL. E. B. GLASGOW A SUICIDE

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—Colonel Edward Brodie Glasgow, 40 years of age, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, committed suicide shortly before noon today in the home of his brother at Elkins Park, a suburb of this city. He placed a revolver in his mouth and pulled the trigger, dying almost instantly.

Colonel Glasgow, who was a bachelor, came to the home of his brother about ten days ago for rest. Upon his arrival his brother noticed that the Colonel was suffering from a nervous breakdown, but did not think his condition serious.

CARNEGIE AT HOME; HEALTH RECOVERED

Ironmaster Has Nothing to Say at Present About Peace, War, or Politics.

HASN'T READ THE PAPERS

Caught Some Big Fish in Maine and Is Preparing for a Season of Autumn Golf Now.

Andrew Carnegie came back yesterday afternoon from Bar Harbor with a twinkle in his eyes and on his brain certain fish stories which he for the present forbears to tell. He admits that he caught a haddock which was the largest ever seen, and also a cod which was a wonder. When he gets thoroughly rested he may talk, but for the present he is saying nothing about angling, peace, war, or politics.

Mr. Carnegie went away last June to recuperate from a severe attack of grip, and all this time he has been at Pointe d'Acadie, near Bar Harbor, getting back his strength. He is active and cheery and hopes soon to be as strong as he was before the attack of illness.

The ironmaster was accompanied home by Mrs. Carnegie, his private secretary, and a physician, and went in his automobile to his New York home at Fifth Avenue and Ninety-first Street. Through his secretary he asked the reporters to excuse him from giving an interview.

He said that as he began to recover his health at Bar Harbor he had spent most of his time out of doors, fishing, golfing, and motoring, and that he had paid hardly any attention to what the newspapers were printing. He let the photographers take a picture of him in his garden in a large armchair, and the camera men opened fire, and then Mrs. Carnegie posed by his side.

"That is just where you should be," said Mr. Carnegie, "by my side."

While on the Maine coast Mr. Carnegie became much attached to the yacht El Placita, which he had chartered, and from which he caught the monarch of all haddocks. Now that the yachting season has passed his mind is turned to his Autumn golf playing, which he will shortly take up on the links of St. Andrews, where, at the age of fourscore, he expects to give a good account of himself.

McCORMICK MUST PAY UP.

Wife Tells Court He Reduced Her Alimony to $10 a Week.

Mrs. Frances Busby McCormick, who has been living with her mother in Atlantic City since Oct. 4, when she procured a separation from her husband, Deputy Assistant District Attorney Robert C. McCormick, appeared before Justice Blanchard of the Supreme Court yesterday to complain that her husband has been paying her only $15 a week alimony, instead of the $25 allowed her by the court. Mirabeau L. Towns, counsel for Mrs. McCormick, said that the husband had an income of $7,000 a year.

During the trial of the suit, Mr. McCormick said that some of the time he was absent from home, of which his wife had bitterly complained, he was making speeches in the campaign in which Governor Whitman was elected. Yesterday his counsel, Charles Maas, asked that the question of alimony be postponed until after the present campaign. Justice Blanchard replied that $15 a week was inadequate and set the case down for a hearing on Wednesday next. In the meantime, he said that Mr. McCormick must pay whatever arrearage there was on the $25 a week basis.

THE TURKISH CIGARETTE

Listen again, please!

WHY do so many men smoke about half of their cigarette, and throw the rest away?

Because most cigarettes taste fine when they're just lighted—but by the time they're smoked half-way through, they begin to lose their goodness. They go flat.

NOT SO WITH MURADS.

One of the very greatest things about a MURAD is that its "LIFE" and FRESHNESS last down to the very end.

As one enthusiastic MURAD smoker said:

"A MURAD is perfection when you light it, and it gets better as you smoke it."

RETRENCHMENT OR NEW TAXES?

"Retrenchment first," was the recommendation of the Controller of the Emigrant Savings Bank, testifying before the Mills Legislative Committee on tax reform. "But I understand that is not contemplated here," Mr. PULLEYN hastened to add. He was within the probabilities of the case, as indicated by the difficulty of either State or city in controlling expenses. The city is unable even to reduce a salary account of one hundred millions, a sum which makes proof of extravagance unnecessary. Until expenses are reduced there is no alternative to new taxes, not alternative taxes, or taxes to reduce burdens of present taxation, but additional taxes. The necessity of the case is so strong that it is said the Mills Committee has secured advice looking toward the imposition of a State income tax. The United States has shown the way regarding an income tax, and New York has shown the way toward a Federal inheritance tax. The United States did not restrict itself to its own province regarding the income tax. The State is likely to show equal disregard of the source of income. Thus there is a prospect that Federal and State income and inheritance taxes may supplement each other like State and city taxes. It is a gloomy outlook for the taxpayers. They now are invited to recall the time when they were warned that the Federal income tax was but an entering wedge, and that State taxes would follow the precedent. The Federal tax was passed upon false pretenses. It was said that the Federal Government was merely taking power for an emergency, such as a supposititious war. The tax was collected when we had profound peace, and the Government had ample income on any policy of "retrenchment first." Now we face a State tax, and a similar rejection of the alternative of economy.

It is odd that the income tax is supported by those who in the same breath condemn the personal property tax. It is assumed that both are popular because they reach the rich and relieve the poor. It is said that the poor are taxed on what they must spend to live, and that it is no more than right that the rich should be taxed on the superfluity of what they receive. Accordingly the income tax is at a larger rate on the larger incomes, and there is an exemption of the smaller incomes altogether. Practically, this is wrong in a degree almost rivaling the personal property tax. The same witnesses who testified that the personal property tax is making liars of good citizens ignored the experience that the income tax has a similar effect. The income tax is popular only in nations where it does not exist, and only among theorists and those who think that the rich escape the burdens of their lot. That this rich and peaceful nation should adopt an income tax when there are better sources of taxation is a concession to prejudice against property and a rejection of experience. The earlier income tax was repealed by the United States at the first opportunity, so unpopular was it.

The strength of the case against the income tax is indicated by the proposal of several witnesses to extend it down to the limit where the cost of collection would equal the tax collected, say $500. A tax on the income of laborers has the same argument in its favor as the tax itself. It is good in theory and bad in practice. It is adapted to bring home to citizens their civic responsibilities. Also it is adapted to teach them to shirk the tax by perjury. The State income tax would extend the school for perjury now conducted by the Tax Commissioners of this city for the benefit of some four score of thousands among hundreds of thousands equally eligible for instruction.

Is there no alternative? Mr. VICTOR MORAWETZ, in his letter to THE TIMES, and in his testimony, suggests an occupancy tax. There is authority and experience in support of his proposal to tax occupiers of real estate apart from the owners' tax on real estate. But Mr. MORAWETZ does not state the principle of his proposal, nor indicate the manner in which the tax might be turned to the relief of real estate, instead of being made an additional burden. Simple solutions were offered and rejected in this State forty years ago. Now we are confronted with the same crisis, in more serious form, as that which elicited the good advice which was not taken and which now is springing up again as original growth. It is strange how little there is new in the world of finance that also is good.

INTERNMENT WITHOUT RESTRAINT.

To intern signifies to place under restraint, and it is quite clear that the young German naval officers who went yachting from the Norfolk Navy Yard and did not return were under restraint only in a technical sense. It has been rumored that other officers and some of the men of the two German warships interned at Norfolk have escaped and managed to get back to Germany, and it should be borne in mind that, in such cases, the Government of the neutral country in which the internment has been made may justly be held liable for damages. There can be no objection to German naval officers, compelled by the fortunes of war to place themselves in retirement under our protection until peace is declared, having as good a time as the circumstances permit; but it seems incredible that the circumstances attending their internment at Norfolk should have permitted six of them to hire a yacht and depart boldly for some unspecified port. Moreover, it seems to landsmen and civilians somewhat strange that no notice should have been taken of the absence of these young men until their own commander reported it, after four days, to the Admiral in command at the Norfolk yard. Why did the commander wait four days?

Criticism of the laxity of the regulations governing interned officers and sailors is inevitable. Our own naval officers have had little experience with internments, but it seems that common prudence should require the institution of some system recording the comings and goings of the interned. The responsibility for their safekeeping assuredly rests with the naval officer in command at the place of internment and his subordinates. These Germans have broken their parole and so have the others who escaped in the same way, (if the reports of their escape were true, and they have not been denied,) and our Government may feel it necessary to compel a more rigid scrutiny of the movements of interned sailors hereafter. The freedom of the interned who have not thought of escaping and breaking their parole may be decreased because of their comrades' defiance of the authority of the United States. But it would be much better if that authority could always be effectively exerted when its exertion is called for. Internments should be real and effectual.

DIVERS DEMOCRATS.

The new Constitution fulfills all that demand. Is that why divers Democrats oppose it?

The same platform insisted that the Governor have the absolute power of appointment and removal without the consent of the Senate. As to ten of the seventeen departments of the reconstituted State Government the new Constitution gives the Governor that power. Is it because he is not to possess it in the case of all that divers Democrats oppose the new Constitution? Is a half loaf worse than no bread? Or is partial "bureaucracy" dangerous, while absolute, entire "bureaucracy," to which the Democrats are committed, is desirable?

PELICAN PROGRESSIVES.

Politics are getting interesting in Louisiana. Evidences of dissatisfaction with the long, one-party régime have been accumulating for some years. Mr. ROOSEVELT and the Progressives made the first rift in the Pelican Democratic lute. In 1912, he got 9,323 votes, Mr. TAFT 3,834. In 1914, the Progressive candidate for Representative in Congress for the Third District beat the Democratic nominee by some 1,400 votes. The reduction and proposed final abolition of sugar duties, enacted by the Underwood Tariff, caused intense dissatisfaction among the Louisiana sugar planters. There is a considerable protectionist sentiment in the State, which in the old days of the Whigs used to be strong. The Republican Party, still the scapegoat of the carpetbag and returning board period, has long been handicapped by its past. The Democratic State Administrations, with no opposition to fear, have gone the usual road of irresponsibility. The finances are in a pretty pickle.

The Progressive Party, new, bearing no stigma of the unhappy reconstruction time, has been a hopeful nucleus of the gathering Democratic discontent. JOHN M. PARKER, formerly a Democratic leader, a man of character and force, will be the Progressive nominee for Governor. The Republicans, or "Lily White" Republicans, have just held their State Convention, held it in a hotel where negroes are not admitted. A State Central Committee, composed entirely of whites, was elected, two negroes nominated were hopelessly beaten. The black Republicans will send a delegation to the Republican National Convention. No State ticket was named by the Lily Whites. They will support Mr. PARKER. They didn't formally "indorse" him, because "such action would do his candidacy more harm than good."

The Democratic candidates for the Democratic nomination for Governor that have appeared so far are admittedly weak. Mr. PARKER'S "capacity and popularity," says The New Orleans Picayune, "are readily, if here and there rather grudgingly, admitted." And "every careful observer has "noted the symptoms of popular dis-"content. Stanch Democratic jour-"nals frankly concede it, and have "sounded warnings of their own." Necessity will force the Democratic Congress to retain the sugar tax, which in 1913 simply stood in the way of the sacred, indispensable income tax. Louisiana Democrats, who feel that their interests were wantonly sacrificed or injured, so far as Congress and the President could do it, and with no benefit to any consumer, are not likely to be reconciled by its forced continuance. Serious causes of Democratic discontent are admitted. At present the situation looks cheerful for Mr. PARKER. Without excessive admiration for some Progressive principles, it is to be conceded that any party under any name that can break the one-party rule in Louisiana or any other Southern State will deserve well of the State and the country. Without a vigorous opposition no party will use power and office for the best.

CARELESS NAVAL WORK.

The laying of the keel of the mightiest battleship yet built was an inspiring occasion, and Secretary DANIELS rose nobly to its requirements in his address at the Brooklyn Navy Yard on Thursday. The California is expected to mark the beginning of a new era in shipbuilding. Some of the newer British dreadnoughts use oil as fuel, but none of them is propelled by electric power. The California, with the most tremendous armament of any ship afloat, will have about the same speed as the other great floating forts, but will have twice their cruising capacity because of her combination of oil fuel and electric engines. That is to say, if it turns out, after her engines have been duly inspected and paid for, that they are workable.

The thought of those eleven warships laid up simultaneously because of "engine trouble" must cast a shadow on a patriot's enthusiasm over the laying of the California's keel. On the very eve of the announcement of the biggest budget for national defense to which this country has ever been committed the news of the crippling of those eleven ships, including the new dreadnought Nevada and the destroyer Cushing, is most dispiriting. How can defective engines be accepted by experienced Inspectors? This matter, in connection with the recent discovery of the practical uselessness of a number of our submarines, indicates clearly that all the trouble with the navy has not been due to Congress and the politicians. It's a pretty poor business to have $15,000,000 dreadnoughts fitted with imperfect engines. The Navy Department ought not to take this sort of carelessness or stupidity lightly. If it is to prevail during the carrying out of the new naval program we shall never be "prepared."

SUFFRAGE, EAST AND WEST.

Outside of California, which, according to the testimony of a woman suffrage advocate, adopted woman suffrage in 1911 against the wishes of a majority of the women of the State, and Illinois, where since 1913 women may vote for all offices not created by the State Constitution, the equal suffrage States are mostly sparsely settled. Look at this list:

State.	Population, 1910.
Arizona	204,354
Colorado	799,024
Idaho	325,594
Kansas	1,696,949
Montana	376,053
Nevada	81,875
Oregon	672,765
Utah	373,351
Washington	1,141,990
Wyoming	145,963
Total	5,817,918

Ten States, whose combined population was nearly two millions less than that of Pennsylvania, States whose economic and social conditions are different from those of the East. Is it from this handful of people that these four great States are to learn the art of "ideal democracy" and improved government? Now look at the four States:

State.	Population, 1910.
Massachusetts	3,366,416
New Jersey	2,537,167
New York	9,113,279
Pennsylvania	7,665,111
Total	22,681,973

Kansas, with all its virtues, has had from the first an emotional temperament, a disposition to shudder at imaginary "calamity," to get wild over crank political specifics, to worship and then break grotesque political idols. For many admirable things can the Sunflower State be praised, but not for sound judgment. The peace and orderliness of Colorado and Idaho have not begotten envy in these parts. Nevada as a State is a monument of a supposed political necessity of the civil war. Utah's long devotion to plural feminism is not forgotten. Arizona wouldn't make two New York Assembly districts. Oregon is the experiment station of all sorts of bewildering and bedeviling whimsies.

Now the two Commonwealths of size which have accepted woman suffrage:

State.	Population, 1910.
California	2,377,549
Illinois	5,638,591
Total	8,016,140

Add the population of these to that of the ten other suffrage States and you have in 1910 13,834,056 people in all the woman suffrage States, whereas in the four States which are to accept or reject woman suffrage this Fall there were in the same year more than 22,000,000. A letter in yesterday's TIMES mentioned a few of the blessings which the feminist ballot has brought to California. The character of political candidates has not improved. The legal status of women has actually been made worse. The so much hymned moral benefit has not occurred. The San Francisco women have recalled a Judge and got in his place "a Magis-"trate with very scant knowledge of "the law and of such a weak char-"acter that he would never appeal to "any but women voters." We regret the inurbanity of this saying; in support of it may be urged this correspondent's account of the success of a romantic politician:

> One of the highest honors possible to bestow at an election has been given to a man whose private life is such that he was refused a nomination for a lesser office and practically driven out of politics by male voters a few years ago. He is now a prime favorite among the women who helped to elect him, and not one of them makes any pretext to ignorance of his record.

The equality of the sexes is demonstrated in California by the refusal of the Legislature to pass a law compelling women to serve on juries. Equal rights, unequal duties, the women voters a privileged, exempted class. It should be added that an extraordinary increase of State and county taxation has occurred under, if not because of, woman suffrage. From California, however, the East has nothing to learn except avoidance of radical and half-baked "reforms." On Oct. 23 the Californians vote on a law which practically abolishes political parties for State and local elections, forbids any party designation to appear on the ballot. Ostensibly in the interest of "non-partisanship," the natural result of such a law would be to put the mastery of elections in the hands of strong and perhaps secret organizations. Government without political parties is a form of "ideal democracy" which will hardly commend itself outside of Utopia and Hiram-Johnsonia. But perhaps to oppose it is to be a "Tory," as every opponent of woman suffrage is, according to our sage contemporary, The World. THE TIMES is "Tory" enough to oppose the initiative and referendum and the recall of judicial decisions so beloved in some of the suffrage States.

Illinois remains the only "equal suffrage" State where anything like a parallel environment and conditions to those of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts exist. What advantage to the public weal has woman suffrage produced there? If the woman suffrage coterie in the East were as rich in judgment as it is in enthusiasm and the passion for decorative campaigning it would have waited until time has ripened and careful observation examined the good, the evil, or the indifferent effects of the Illinois experiment. Instead, and when the public mind is occupied with problems much more vital and engrossing, the suffragists seek to drive their obsessing idea through in four great, populous, complex Eastern States before there is down upon its chin in Illinois. Wait and weigh. Don't thrust upon the East a still doubtful speculation in government.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Revenge Poor Policy.

That in a city the size of London there should be a considerable number of people sufficiently hot-headed and injudicious urgently to advise and vehemently to demand revenge for the Zeppelin raids from which the British capital has suffered—that is not surprising. That such should be the case was indeed inevitable, and made so by the provocation which this particular phase of German warfare has given. The provocation was indeed great, for the taking of lives and the destruction of property which have been thus effected have had no measurable effect as a military operation and there is much justification for regarding them as crimes rather than as a part of the stern business of war.

That reprisals in kind, however, would be unwise practically, as well as wrong morally, is almost beyond dispute. Their only excuse would be the existence of a rather high probability that thus the Germans could be scared into stopping the raids. But Germans are not so easily frightened that there is much more than a remote possibility that return attacks of the same detestable sort would result in anything better than a long competition in barbarity. In that the prospects that the British would be outdone are in direct ratio to the accuracy of their claims to superior respect for the laws of war and the standards of humanity.

Already it is possible for the Germans to retort that the British and French have dropped bombs in German cities as "open" as London is—in Karlsruhe, for instance—and they can charge with a certain reasonableness that if the resulting damage was trivial in comparison with that just done by themselves, the difference was due to smaller efficiency rather than to better morals or fewer compunctions in regard to incidental killing of women and children.

The obviously and indubitably best thing for the British to do is so to organize their defense against hostile air craft that none of them will dare to cross or even to approach the English coast line. The French seem to have protected Paris in this way, for it is a long time, now, since German aviators have assailed that city, short and easy as is the journey to it, and presumably desirous as the Germans are to treat it as they do London.

A Worthy Son of New England.

Medical science, after gaining what had seemed to be a victory, has failed in the case of GEORGE F. STACKPOLE, the Long Island lawyer who, in spite of carrying the burden of many years, had made so brave a fight against the death he faced so calmly. It has failed in that the measures of protection it devised did not in the end save the life of this sufferer from a rare and dreadful infection, but the defeat was not complete. Much has been learned from it.

That Mr. STACKPOLE survived as long as he did—that hope and something of confidence were revived after his malady had progressed, in a man of his age, as far as it had done before the new serum treatment was started, is enough to justify the belief that its prompter employment for patients less heavily handicapped will have the success in this instance so narrowly and so pitifully missed. The serum gave Mr. STACKPOLE several days' respite from his doom, which is no small achievement, and it also gave him the chance of recovery which otherwise would have been absent, and that is a triumph for science of great importance, considering that anthrax in human beings has hitherto been regarded as nothing less than a sentence to speedy death.

Modest and retired as had been the life of Mr. STACKPOLE, the expressions of regret for his taking off are not only many, but they are marked by a notable sincerity. He was by birth and training, and even more in his daily walk and character, a New Englander of the oldest and best type. A certain rusticity that is only affected and capitalized by some other men, including several of prominence and even distinction in the political world, was his by nature. It made him at once simple and shrewd, and won for him trust and liking. A man of education and ability, he was more at home in a village than in a city, and most highly appreciated by those who knew him best. His life was as well lived as ended.

An Ancient Animosity Vindicated.

On the high authority of England's Lord Chief Justice those of us who have been wont to view "the law" a little askance as a system in which technicalities and formalities were treated with undeserved seriousness can now hope—or even believe—that in this country, as in England, the courts are more and more escaping from the slavery of precedent and more and more seeking to administer essential justice rather than to maintain iron rules and artificial distinctions.

Something of this beneficent change has been visible of late years to careful observers, but to few laymen has it seemed yet to have gone as far as Lord READING claimed in his Bar Association address. With or without reason, we have suspected that "the law" too often took itself for an end rather than the means we thought it ought to be, and we have not hesitated, in our more reckless moments, to deride or denounce what we thought or imagined to be its departures from the common-sense way of reaching decisions.

We knew very well that in the ordinary conduct of our private affairs we used arguments and relied on evidence which "the law" either scorned or condemned, and we have been conceited enough to contend that our short cuts to our little verdicts were saner and safer than the devious and stately progressions made in the courts. In seeming, at least, Lord READING vindicated to some extent these lay criticisms of judicial methods. By rejoicing over their change he admitted that they needed alteration.

It is not without significance that for ages and everywhere the Wise Ones have warned their neighbors against entering into litigation—against going to court with troubles and disputes that by any possibility could be settled elsewhere. That came near to proving that there was something radically wrong in "the law" or in its administration. And Lord READING said there was!

The Call of the Woods.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The glories of the Autumn foliage and the crisp, bracing air with its touch of frost are with us once more and the dwellers among city walls again feel the call of the woods and open fields. Thousands of New Yorkers would be only too glad to avail themselves of the opportunity for week-end trips to Orange and Sullivan Counties and the Catskills, if the railroads would only reduce the cost of travel to these recuperative havens.

The press of Summer traffic is over and the roads are all complaining of poor passenger traffic, which falls each year to increase as it should. Why not adopt the liberal system of the British railways which has been so successful? In London cheap tickets are issued to people leaving on Friday's or Saturday's trains and returning not later than Monday night at fares of about one and a quarter for the return journey. G. SHARP.

Words Hard to Shout.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The question is asked: "Why not substitute right and left for starboard and port? A sufficient answer is that right and left are hard to shout in a gale of wind. This was brought out by Lieutenant W. J. Henderson, author of a well known book on navigation and also an acknowledged authority on singing. It was further indorsed by Admiral Winslow when Secretary Daniels tried to change the old terms.

FROM A WAR NURSE'S NOTE-BOOK.

In the night he died
As I watched by his side
'Neath the shaded light
Of the hospital room,
Where his face shone white,
Like a star, in the gloom.

He was English and young,
And his fingers clung
To mine with the wild
Half-fear of a child.
I was only his nurse,
But he called me "Mother!"
Then, as clouds disperse
From the sun they smother,
Broke his smile—but one!—
And his fight was done.

Now I stand in the dawn
With the grief to hide
Of a creature torn
From a dream that was good.
He called me "Mother!"—
Who had denied,
Long ago to another,
My motherhood!

SPIRITUAL VALUE OF WAR.

University of Breslau, Germany, Sept. 21, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There are many intelligent persons who believe that the present dreadful war has no true advantage for any one. Perhaps they are right. But they overlook one thing. In these holidays wandering through a very Catholic country, my Protestant mind had a deep impression of the holy symbols by which all ways are filled here. The Saviour murdered for the sins of other people and His mother with the sword in the heart recalled in my mind the many friends and the many mothers who had a similar fate in the last year. So I understood that the Holy Gospel tells not only of a tragedy passed in old times, but is also a true portrait of the human life in all times.

The diabolic qualities of the human heart are so strong that they must be compensated by innocent sufferings for ever and ever. Life is no comedy; its principal character is a tragic one; although from time to time happiness can prevail, as well as in Shakespeare's plays, we find a continual change between earnest and gay scenes. But the modern tendencies forgot more and more this fact. They would free the whole life from sacrifices as much as possible. So they favored the greediness of pleasure and gain. But this war recalled people to the sense of life, which obliges us to regard our existence as a continual duty to self-sacrifices. This was necessary also for the regular visitors of the church, who sing like Christians and think like pagans.

Even now the misery seems not to have been strong enough for the obstinate minds, who do not wish to see the truth. So the lecture must be continued.

But every one who understands the sense of the general disaster can have beforehand an interior peace, which has more value than all conquests of the world. This peace is the very root of the German successes. But also on the other side surely similar feelings exist. That is the only sure gain from the general disaster: a human dignity increasing by continual sacrifices.

Anthrax from Shaving Brushes.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Having read of two cases of anthrax in New York last week, the cause of which could not be discovered, it seems a somewhat remarkable coincidence that in perusing a journal just received from London—The Chemist and Druggist of Sept. 25—my attention was attracted to a report of two cases of anthrax which occurred in Ireland. On account of the importance of the subject the last-mentioned notice (index folio 424) may be quoted verbatim:

> The Barbridge Urban Council has been informed by the Local Government Board for Ireland of a recent occurrence of two cases of anthrax, traced to infection from shaving brushes. One of the brushes, as well as some of the material from which the brushes were manufactured, and which was delivered from China, had been found to be infected with anthrax spores. A dozen of the brushes in question, added the board, had been distributed to a firm in Barbridge, and the medical officer should take steps to prevent their sale. Dr. Martin, M. O. H., has informed the Council that, together with the sanitary sub-officer, he interviewed the firm referred to, and it was found that the shaving brushes in question had arrived the day previously. Fortunately none had been sold, and the entire lot (two dozen) was handed over to the sanitary sub-officer for destruction.

It is naturally quite as likely that shaving brushes may be a source of anthrax infection in this country as in Ireland, and it therefore seems desirable that knowledge of this fact should be brought to the notice of both the general public and the medical profession.

Count Apponyi's Logic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Count Apponyi's letter is an interesting revelation of the Germ nic manner of thinking when he writes: "Show me a single fact through which Germany ever threatened the safety or the legitimate interests of any other nation; such a fact has never been made out, for the simple reason that no such fact and no such intention exist." Has he overlooked the war against Denmark when Prussia took Schleswig-Holstein; the war of Prussia against Austria; the seizure of the Kingdom of Hanover, or, to come to recent days, has he forgotten that Germany stood in "shining armor" by the side of Austria-Hungary when that country, tearing up the Treaty of Berlin, annexed Herzegovina? Has he forgotten the Agadir incident, when Germany was bought off by a large slice of French Africa?

No, he has overlooked, forgotten nothing. He knows these facts well. The explanation lies in the twist to be given the meaning of "legitimate" in the above sentence. If one understands that the interests of another country when they conflict with the interests of Germany are never legitimate, the Count's statement becomes at once understandable, his position beautifully logical.

The Trouble with Mr. Gaffney.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am sure it will be quite to the advantage of the United States Government to remove T. St. John Gaffney, Consul General at Munich from the Consular Service for all time. A few years ago on the occasion of celebrating the Fourth of July, while he was Consul at Dresden, he publicly announced that he did not wish the presence of any English people at the celebration. At this time there were a number of English and American girl students at Dresden, and the American girls, numbering probably twenty or more, remained away, as did many other Americans, who could not bring their English friends. He was never popular at Dresden. He was much given to criticising Americans unless they were German-Americans or Irish-Americans. The trouble with Gaffney is that he is a professional Irishman.

Older Yet.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

My grandfather died in 1855. At his home one day, when I was a very small child, there came three German Jews. I distinctly heard them sing:

> Queen Victoria's very sick,
> Napoleon has the measles,
> Sebastopol's not taken yet,
> Pop goes the Veasles.

Now to the best of my memory this was about 1853, or over sixty years ago. Where did this song originate? This memory places it over ten years older than any of your previous references.

The Monkey's Master.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I also lift up my voice in defense of the poor little monkey doomed to be dragged around on the end of a chain—so hot and uncomfortable, if not suffering. I saw one at Spring Lake this Summer, one very hot day, dressed up in those tight, heavy woolen clothes. It looked so pitiful, as though begging protection. I should think any self-respecting man would be ashamed to go around grinding an organ and allowing a poor little creature to get pennies for him, while there are plenty of jobs fit for a man to do.

How Can a People, Held Captive in Their Own Land, Terrorized, Tortured, and Impoverished, Forget or Forgive?

By One Who Writes Authoritatively and Signs Himself "A Sympathizer with Belgium."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Immense stupefaction has been caused in this country by the article "How I Found Belgium Under German Rule," by George B. McClellan of Princeton University, which appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Sunday last. It appears manifestly that, except his talk with a flower woman and a barber, he has spoken only with the Teuton invaders. It is a pity that, during his stay in Germany, his birth-country, before going to Belgium, he did not make a call on Burgomaster Adolphe Max of Brussels, who eight months ago had been transferred to Germany and is detained there in a cell, because this noble man refused to co-operate with the occupants of Brussels in their military purposes; on the thousands of Belgian manufacturers and skilled laborers who have been arrested and sent to the German prisons for having refused to work against their country and to become accomplices in killing their own brothers and relatives fighting on the Yser battlefront, where for a year they have stopped all efforts of the Kaiser's troops to march on Calais.

He could have called at the same time on Mrs. Henry Carton de Wiart, (the wife of the Belgian Attorney General,) who was arrested in Brussels, court-martialed and sentenced to three months and a half imprisonment in Germany, separated from her five young children (the youngest only one year old) and sent to a cell at Moabit Prison in Berlin among the murderesses and thieves.

He could have called also on Mr. Leon Teodor, the Chief of the Brussels bar, who, in the name of the 900 jurisconsults of Brussels, has eloquently protested with all the staff of the corporation against the most inhuman, unjust and barbarous courts-martial inaugurated by the Germans in Belgium, sentencing the civilian citizen without the slightest form of justice or legal defense and recalling the most ignominious times of the Middle Ages and of the French Revolution of 1789, when every day hundreds of innocent people were sent to death on the scaffold.

These inquiries should have been much more interesting for Mr. George B. McClellan, for it is said he is a lawyer and a professor of law at Princeton, and thus ought to have printed in his heart the cult of this principle of justice, the common law of all civilized people.

He could have called at the same time on the young Viscountess Helen de Jonghe d'Ardoye, sixteen years old, who was sentenced a few weeks ago to six months' imprisonment in Germany, and on her old grandmother, who was sentenced to weeks in prison, both for offending German officers.

Mr. McClellan says he has visited Malines. Why did he not make an inquiry of Cardinal Mercier, who lives there in the remains of his palace, three times shelled by the Germans, when not one soldier remained in the city—Cardinal Mercier, who has deserved the admiration of the whole world for his noble attitude among the enemies of his country and his magnificent pastoral letter?

Cardinal Mercier would have told him of the ninety priests, among whom many old and invalid; of the thousands of undefended citizens, women and children murdered in the most barbarous way by the cruel invaders—at Dinant (800 civilians killed), Tamines (650), Andenne (300), Ethe (300), Louvain (176), Aerschot (155), &c., and of the truth about the burning of hundreds of houses in Louvain and the destruction of her celebrated university, and of the thousands of poor civilians sent over to prison in Germany.

On the 24th of January, 1915, Cardinal Mercier wrote an open letter to Colonel Count Wengersky, Chief of the District of Malines (Kreischef), who had asked him for information, giving the names of the victims and proposing to appoint an arbitration court of inquiry, composed of an equal number of German and Belgian Magistrates, the Chairman to be chosen by a neutral country, and proposing the American Ambassador in Brussels for this mission. Cardinal Mercier never has received any answer from the German Kreischef, Count Wengersky.

It is a pity also that Mr. McClellan did not make an inquiry at the Arsenal of Malines, a big manufactory of the former Belgian State Railways, where thousands of laborers have been put on the verge of starvation for refusing to work for the German occupants; at Luttre (Hainaut) in the black country and other big railway plants, where the skilled laborers, for the same reasons, have been arrested and sent to the prisons of Germany; at Sweveghem and Courtrai and many other places in Flanders, where the employers and employes of the big weaving manufactories, always for the same refusal, have been arrested, sent over to Germany and there condemned to hard labor for the benefit of the Germans.

And, owing to the traveling facilities given to him so generously, why did Mr. McClellan not make a trip to Roubaix (northern France,) near the Belgian border, where 120 manufacturers, the most prominent citizens, all well known here in the States for their trade, have been sent to the German prisons for having refused to work for the German occupants?

It is pitiful also that Mr. McClellan, who is a jurist, has nothing to say about all these endless violations of The Hague conventions, signed by Germany herself, nor about her violation of Belgium's neutrality, which she had solemnly promised not only to respect but even to defend against any invader. But treaties and conventions, it is known, are only "scraps of paper" for the Teutons.

Mr. McClellan has heard nothing about the monstrous requisitions of all kinds, amounting to a value of several billion francs, made by the Germans in Belgium; nothing about the high levies made on many cities and towns to punish the inhabitants for some private offense; nothing about the 40,000,000 francs which the stricken Belgians have to pay every month to their invaders; nothing about the seizure of all raw materials, of the machinery itself of the industrial and agricultural plants of all kinds, and paid by them with "bons de requisitions," often without any value and at a price fixed arbitrarily by the invaders themselves. For instance, in Antwerp alone they had seized goods, until three months ago, to the value of 85,000,000 francs, besides high fines levied on that city.

In all its reports the Chambre de Commerce of Antwerp protests in the most energetic way against the economic ruin caused in Belgium by the German occupation, the situation and the sufferings of the people becoming worse and worse every day.

All communication with the outside world is forbidden; only through the German post office of Aachen open postcards are allowed to be sent from five cities to Holland; thus no American can send any mail of any kind to Belgium. Three lines of entanglements, charged with electricity, guarded by an uninterrupted line of German soldiers, cover the Dutch border. Nobody is allowed to get out of Belgium; very seldom some people may go by exception to Holland.

In the interior, a caricature of post service between few cities, no telegraph, no telephone; even to move from one place to another a paid free pass must be obtained from the military authorities. Already 800,000 skilled laborers are idle. The truth is that the 7,000,000 inhabitants of Belgium are prisoners, and nobody is sure to live one day more without being molested by the German rulers.

How is it possible under these conditions to urge the Belgian refugees abroad, many of whom have had their homes destroyed, to go back to their country to live there under a régime of terror and tyranny?

THE REDUCTION OF POVERTY

It May Be Hastened If Critics Stop Nagging the Workers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is utterly impossible for any group of charitable agencies like the combined churches to cover the field in Manhattan. Especially is this true during a period of distress like that of the past year. Every wide-awake minister is assured of this fact and has long recognized the impossibility of obtaining regular funds which will enable him to meet the situation in his parish. If the work is done satisfactorily, it is a highly skilled task. Few churches are equipped with skilled visitors, with proper methods and funds to wisely assist any more than their members and regular attendants. The societies mentioned in your letter have been handling this difficult service every day of every month for years. They have shown sympathy, skill, and efficiency. They have also a continuing policy with individuals and with families instead of an emotionalism which is unwise and "a flash in the pan."

The writer speaks from intimate knowledge of conditions among the tenement dwellers. He has served as worker and pastor for seventeen years in the heart of the east side in a church which is noted for its efficiency and its administration of trust and relief funds among the poor. This church has joined with the settlements and neighborhood institutions in the support of the societies mentioned in your article and has laid down as a policy the necessity of hearty co-operation. This church in common with many others recognizes the absolute necessity of skilled assistance of such societies as the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the Charity Organization Society, the St. Vincent de Paul, and the United Hebrew Charities. The sooner criticism of the nagging sort ceases and cordial recognition begins, the more quickly will the problems of poverty be met.

The Barge Canal Referendum.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When we ask you to tell the public that the canal referendum under the caption "Proposition No. 1" is not part of the proposed Constitution, we do it because we are deeply interested in everything that means progress in waterways. It may be that the only thing that will defeat the canal referendum is lack of understanding on the part of the public that it is a separate and distinct proposition and is not related to any other "proposition" or "amendment" on the ballot on which it is printed. It looks as though we may be able to have it printed on a separate ballot in the boroughs of Greater New York, but that is not certain as yet. In many of the counties up State the ballot is already printed, and "Proposition No. 1" is at the bottom of the ballot.

We believe that it is good business to issue long-term bonds to get the $27,000,000 needed to complete the canal. If you can aid this we believe you will be doing a good thing.

THE AMERICAN NILE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A national economic problem of great importance concerns the people who reside in the section better known as the Mississippi River basin. Great losses by river floods and neglected water transportation impose a burden that can hardly be realized by the citizens who reside in more fortunate localities. Consequent losses of life and property amount to hundreds of millions of dollars each year. Manufacturers and farmers contribute monthly over $12,000,000 in freight charges in order to get their products to the seaboard by rail. This can be saved by water transportation located at their door permitted to be unavailable by Congressional inaction.

The improvement of the national waterways made by furnishing an outlet to the Gulf and at the same time to protect the lands from overflow will be one of the subjects introduced at the next meeting of Congress. There will be those who will advocate the expenditure of millions to protect the country against a possible invasion. The world will hardly be ready for another war for many years to come after the present conflict will have been settled. The internal commerce of this country requires immediate protection. It can only be met by Congressional action.

The Democratic platform of 1912 has not been forgotten:

PRESIDENT TAKES NEW JERSEY ESTATE

Will Spend Summer at Shadow Lawn, but Desires to Pay Rental.

DELEGATION OFFERS PLACE

Governor Fielder Urged Acceptance —Wanted President to Receive "Glad Tidings" in Home State.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—President Wilson has decided to spend next Summer at Shadow Lawn, the estate of the late John A. McCall, at Elberon, near Long Branch, N. J., which is now owned by Colonel J. B. Greenhut. The President today, addressing a delegation from New Jersey, asked that those who arranged to get the McCall estate for him should permit him to pay as rental the amount he paid for the house of Winston Churchill at Cornish, N. H., which the Wilson family has occupied for the last three Summers. If the committee pleased, he said, it could give the amount to charity.

It is understood that the President consulted his fiancée, Mrs. Norman Galt, before deciding to accept the offer of his New Jersey friends.

Representative Scully was at the head of the delegation which called on the President. Governor Fielder was unable to be present. Mr. Scully brought a letter from him in which he urged the President to spend next Summer in New Jersey to receive "the glad tidings" of his renomination. The President only smiled when that was mentioned. When Mr. Wilson announced that he would accept the invitation he was warmly applauded and all the delegation insisted on shaking hands with him.

Shadow Lawn was built by James Carly of Long Branch in 1902 for John A. McCall, the insurance company President, at a cost of more than $500,000. The house stands on a knoll about fifty feet above the level of the ocean, which is less than a mile away. About it are fifty-two acres of rolling and wooded land of rare beauty.

The house is three stories high and contains thirty-two rooms, which are richly furnished. The interior has not been caanged during the various changes in ownership since the place was originally built for Mr. McCall. A runner for one of the seventy-five-foot halls was bought abroad at a cost of $50,000.

Two flights of stone steps run up the terraces to the top of the rise of ground on which the house is built. The entrance is guarded by a large dome level with the roof of the second floor, supported by eight columns. A porch about 250 feet in length runs about the north, east and south sides of the house, commanding a view of the ocean and of beautiful country. The building is of wood and painted white and of stone.

There are on the estate three conservatories, which supply grapes, peaches and pears in Winter and Spring and fruit and vegetables of all kinds out of season. One of the hot houses has a great output of flowers. When J. B. Cleet but first took the property he employed a permanent staff of twenty-seven men on the grounds.

There is a small lake at the south end of the estate. The house is about three-quarters of a mile from the West Long Branch railway station.

The property remained in the hands of John A. McCall only a short time. Its next owner was Abraham White of New York. It passed next into the hands of Myron Oppenheim, who sought for a while to establish it as the country estate of an exclusive club, but in April, 1909, it was acquired by J. B. Greenhut.

MRS. GALT GOES SHOPPING.

Visits Washington Stores with the President's Niece.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Mrs. Norman Galt, the President's fiancée, today made a tour of the shopping district in a White House automobile with the President's niece, Miss Helen Woodrow Bones. Mrs. Galt gave also considerable attention today to the various photographs of Shadow Lawn, the house at Elberon, N. J., which will be her home next Summer. The President submitted these photographs for her opinion and approval.

Mrs. Galt has returned the calls of the Cabinet hostesses. Mrs. Lansing made a call immediately after the announcement of the engagement, as did Mrs. Lane, who has enjoyed a personal acquaintance with Mrs. Galt for several years. All the Cabinet matrons in Washington have now paid their respects to the future mistress of the White House, as have most of the women of the Congressional set, who are in town. One of the first of the Congressional matrons to pay this compliment to the President's bride-elect was Mrs. Nicholas Longworth.

These exchanges of courtesies have been entirely by card, as none of the Cabinet hostesses as yet is keeping her day at home. Mrs. Galt is rarely in during the afternoon, and thus far has not had any opportunity of meeting the important circle of women whose leader she will be after her marriage to the President.

The coming of a woman of Mrs. Galt's type to the White House is a matter of very general congratulation among resident Washingtonians. Genuine Washingtonians, so called, are not of the official circle which of necessity changes its personnel with each Administration, and yet is always of first importance in the country at large, or to the small set of Winter residents of great wealth who come to enjoy the advantages of the national capital.

Miss Edith Bolling came to Washington twenty years ago from a Virginia country town, and later as Mrs. Norman Galt was the centre of a cultured circle of men and women whose fathers were the pioneers of the District of Columbia, men of intelligence, industry, and of wealth, who stayed in Washington. It is from this portion of society that the coming season is likely to bring a totally new element to the White House, as Mrs. Galt is said to be a woman who will not forget her old friends. In this particular she will not only follow her own desires and heart, but also will be conforming to the policy which President Wilson prescribed on the arrival of his family at the White House. While giving attention to all courtesies and even before the Spring season of 1913 returning the courtesies with a dance at the White House, the President's daughters selected their Washington friends entirely for personal reasons. They were surrounded by clever, earnest young women.

Mrs. Galt is quite of the Wilson type, plus the Virginia manner and the Southern love of life which is something quite different from the love of society as Washington knows that phrase.

The Galt family of Washington has been on visiting terms at the White House before. In the first Administration of President Cleveland, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Galt, whose home was then on Dupont Circle, were among the closest personal friends of the President, and were among the few invited to the wedding of the President and Miss Folsom.

William M. Galt later was one of the resident matrons in the close confidence of Mrs. Cleveland in both Administrations. Miss Gertrude Galt, now Mrs. Richardson of Columbus, Ohio, practically made her début in the White House as a protegée of Mrs. Cleveland.

MRS. GALT PURCHASES GOWNS OF TROUSSEAU

Her Going-Away Suit and Afternoon Frocks Sent to Her from Baltimore.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 15.—Mrs. Norman Galt, the President's fiancée, like his daughters, Mrs. Francis B. Sayre and Mrs. William G. McAdoo, is buying much of her trousseau in this city. Her afternoon frocks, a going-away suit, and several separate blouses have been sent to Washington from a shop on Lexington Street. The frocks and the suit were ordered for her on Saturday and Monday by friends who are helping Mrs. Galt in the selection of her trousseau.

The suit which it is understood that Mrs. Galt intends to wear on the wedding journey is a striking model in dull green duvetyn with a Chin-Chin collar and cuffs of beaver. The top of the coat is cut to fit the figure rather closely. There is a flare measuring four yards and a half at the bottom of the coat, edged with a wide band of the beaver. The coat buttons straight down the front, and is worn with a very simple slightly flared skirt.

The prettier of the two afternoon frocks which Baltimore is contributing to the trousseau is a model in crêpe Georgette and taffeta of the same rich dull green as the suit. The model shows a strong Chinese influence. The skirt has five narrow flounces of crêpe Georgette, banded in taffeta, finely pleated and mounted on a crêpe underskirt. There is an underbodice of taffeta, covered in rich passementerie, over which falls a Chinese sleeveless jacket of crêpe Georgette exquisitely embroidered in self-colored beads. The lower edge of the jacket is cut with several points which are weighted with tassels of the green beads. There are sheer sleeves of crêpe to the model.

The second afternoon frock is a combination of crêpe chiffon and crêpe Georgette in seal brown. There is a very wide box-pleated skirt with bands of plain chiffon in a lighter shade of brown set in at intervals above the hem. To this model also there is a slip-on overjacket embroidered with threads of silver and gold. The bandings on the skirt are also outlined with silver and gold.

The blouses ordered for Mrs. Galt's trousseau are largely models of crêpe Georgette, chiffon and lace.

There are two seamstresses engaged constantly at the Galt home in Washington, but it is said that most of the trousseau is being obtained on rush orders such as those Baltimore has filled.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—Edward H. Townsend, son of Mrs. James M. Townsend of New York, will marry shortly in Paris Yvonne Terlink, member of a well-known Brussels family. Mr. Townsend has been engaged for several months in ambulance work for the French-American-Belgian Red Cross and met Miss Terlink this year at Lapanne, where she was a refugee. A month ago he went home to obtain his mother's consent, returning with his sister, Virginia, to chaperon his fiancee, who just arrived in Paris.

Mr. Townsend hoped to be married immediately, but formalities of the French law are causing delay.

Mr. Townsend is a son of Mrs. James M. Townsend and the late Mr. Townsend of 535 Park Avenue. He went abroad last November to work for the Red Cross in the war zone.

Late in August he returned to this side to make preparations for his homecoming with his bride and sailed for Paris about three weeks ago accompanied by his sister, Miss Virginia C. Townsend, who is to act as chaperon for her brother's fiancée. His mother is still at her home in Westport, N. Y. Mr. Townsend is a graduate of Yale University, class of '12, and belongs to the Squadron A Club. He is a brother of Mrs. William Lawrence Bottomley, James M., Jr.; John Campbell and Donald Townsend. His father, who died in November, 1913, was prominent in this city as a corporation lawyer and was a member of the University and other well-known clubs. The family trace their descent in a direct line from Sir Roger Townsend of Ludlow, County Shropshire, England.

FAMOUS OPERA HOUSE FAILS

New Orleans Association Bankrupt Because of War and Hurricane.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 15.—Financial difficulties, to be traceable directly to the European war and to the damage done by the recent coast hurricane, resulted in the appointment in the Civil District Court today of a receiver for the French Opera Association, Ltd., which owns the historic French Opera House here. The proceedings were voluntary.

For many years the French Opera House has been regarded as a landmark, and was long the centre of the city's social activities. The main part of the building was erected about 150 years ago. Until the outbreak of the European war opera was sung there each season by noted artists. The Mardi Gras balls also were held there every year. When the war began the opera performances were discontinued owing to inability to obtain singers.

The Directors, in their petition for a receiver, stated that they were unable to lease the house for opera purposes on account of the war, and were without means to pay the running expenses, to repair the storm damage or to safeguard the property from further harm.

TREE'S PLAYS TO BE FILMED.

This to be a Feature of His Coming Visit to This Country.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, who was interviewed today by a representative of The Daily Telegraph concerning his American tour, said:

"I intend to start immediately after the production of 'Mavourneen' next Sunday week. My first stopping place is New York. My design is not only to submit to the American public some of my Shakespearean productions, but also to secure for these a lasting endurance by means of the cinematograph.

"My sojourn in America must depend largely on what turn events take at His Majesty's Theatre. In point of fact, my contracts, being of a fairly elastic description, leave me considerable freedom of action. I cannot yet give you any particulars as to the pieces which are to be filmed, but I have several rather big ideas on the subject, and it is more than probable that I shall draw on sources altogether outside of my London répertoire. During my New York season I shall, of course, be surrounded by my own West End company, and among the plays which I shall certainly do there is 'Henry VIII.'"

Sir Herbert expressed the view that the cinema was destined to play a great part in the future life of the world both for instruction and for entertainment, but, he added:

"Do not suppose, however, that the cinema is likely to cold shoulder the drama out of existence. No, that, I firmly believe, will prove a most momentous factor in the cinema's ever-growing development, just as it has already become the cornerstone of the variety theatre. These two industries are, in truth, only branches of the legitimate theatre, which must inevitably and always hold the leading position it now occupies. I go even further, and affirm that these two newcomers in the field of entertainment can only sharpen the edge of people's appetite for the drama."

MOVIES LURE ANNA HELD.

Anna Held, who arrived Thursday on the St. Louis from Paris, signed a contract yesterday with Oliver Morosco to act for a motion picture under his direction. The French actress is to receive $25,000 for her services, $5,000 of which has already been paid as a guarantee. She will leave early next month for California, where the picture will be photographed. The contract also specifies that Mr. Morosco will try to secure a musical play in which to star Miss Held upon her return to New York.

When the motion picture producers read in yesterday's papers that Miss Held was in the city, she was immediately besieged at the Savoy with offers.

Miss Davis's Piano Recital.

Miss Alice Virginia Davis started ambitiously in her first appearance as a pianist in New York, which she made yesterday afternoon at the Princess Theatre. Her program included works by Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt, MacDowell, Stojowski, Moszkowski, Debussy, and Rudolph Ganz, who is said to be her teacher. Her start was, indeed, too ambitious, and her treatment of Beethoven's sonata in E flat, (Op. 31, No. 3,) long before she had finished it, showed that she is not yet ripe for appearance here as a public performer. Seriousness, ambition, and a high purpose may be ascribed to her, but they must result first in a considerably greater mastery of the technique of her instrument, and then in a deeper penetration into the significance of what she plays, before they can be efficient for her salvation as an artist.

Herbert to Give Concerts on Coast.

Victor Herbert will leave today for the Pacific Coast, where he will conduct a series of concerts. He has been invited to give some concerts at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco under the direction of Will Greenbaum. These will be similar to the concerts Mr. Herbert used to give here Sunday nights. After San Francisco, Mr. Herbert will visit Los Angeles, Portland, and Seattle, in each of which he will conduct at special concerts.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Arthur Hammerstein has engaged Franklin Ardell as leading comedian for the new Hauerbach-Friml operetta, "Katinka." Mr. Ardell appeared as the vaudeville player in "The Family Cupboard."

James K. Hackett will return to New York about Nov. 1 to begin rehearsals of his production of "Macbeth." Following that production, he will present a new romantic play, entitled "MacNeill of MacNeill, V. C." The scenes of this drama are laid in Scotland.

Arnold Daly has chosen the players to appear with him in "The Angel of the House," in which he will appear in the role of Hyacinth Petavel. They are George Giddens, Robert Elliott, Effingham Pinto, John Burridge, Alma Tell, Lorraine Frost, and Hilda Spong.

The Theatre Assembly of the Arts Society held its first meeting of the season yesterday afternoon in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor. The program included the second act of "Rolling Stones" given by the company that is appearing in the comedy at the Harris, a pianologue by Willa Holt Wakefield, and solos by Peggy Wood.

Betty Callah, who was last seen here in "The Laughing Husband," has been engaged for an important role in Oliver Morosco's production of Avery Hopwood's new play, "Sadie Love."

A new playlet by Ben Barnett, entitled "Helping Daddy," will be given its first performance Monday in the Harlem Opera House. Maurice Booth will play the leading role of a Federal detective.

Job E. Hedges has been added to the list of speakers who will add to the gayety of the Friars' dinner in honor of William A. Brady a week from Sunday night.

The members of the Miramba Band will visit the Globe Theatre tonight to hear the song "Good-bye, Girls, I'm Through," so they can add it to their program at the Hippodrome.

WHITE RATS BEGIN CRUSADE

Will Fight for Reforms in Small-Time Vaudeville Theatres.

The White Rats Actors' Union, better known as the White Rats Club, is about to begin a crusade against certain small-time vaudeville houses in and around New York that make a practice of canceling the bookings of performers without due notice and that take advantage of performers in other ways. A meeting has been called to be held Tuesday night after theatre time in the clubhouse in West Forty-sixth Street.

At this meeting Harry Mountford, international organizer of the White Rats, will be the chief speaker. Several years ago Mr. Mountford, who was then active in the economic affairs of the club, incurred the displeasure of the vaudeville heads, who finally succeeded in having him deposed. Now Mr. Mountford has been restored to his former position as labor organizer of the union, which is made up largely of vaudeville players, and he will lead the fight against the abuses that have sprung up.

to hundreds of men, women, and children. In the stifling tenement in Summer, the consumptive grows hourly weaker, the terrible cough stronger. One writes that he was "threatened" by the promise from THE HOSPITAL AND HOUSE OF REST FOR CONSUMPTIVES, at Inwood-on-Hudson, New York City, that his name would be placed on the waiting list for the first possible vacancy.

Applications do not lessen in number; the grim fight with disease in its worst form goes on. This hospital holds out every hope for the incipient by giving him the weapons needed in his battle for health. You can aid in providing.

EX-POLICE LIEUT. MULVEY.

Veteran Who Drew Two Salaries from New York City Is Dead at 66.

Former Police Lieutenant Thomas Mulvey died on Thursday night at the Bensonhurst Hotel in Brooklyn at the age of 66 years. During his active career on the force he had the unique experience of drawing two salaries from the City of New York as a member of the department.

He was born in this city in 1849, and was appointed a member of the old City of New York Police force in 1870. In 1893 he was retired with the rank of Detective Sergeant on a pension of $1,000 a year. He then removed to New Utrecht, which at that time was a separate community, and became Captain of Police. In 1898 New Utrecht was made a part of Brooklyn, but Mulvey held his job on the force, together with his pension. Later, when Brooklyn and Manhattan were consolidated, he again became automatically a member of the New York City Police force.

In 1913 he was retired for the second time with the rank of Lieutenant, and a few months later he began an action to have his old pension as Detective Sergeant continued and a new one as Lieutenant awarded. The ruling of the court was that he could not draw two pensions.

Mr. Mulvey was well known as a member of the team of detectives, Mulvey and Fogarty, under Inspector Byrnes. He was a member of the Lieutenants' Benevolent Association of New York, the Old New Yorkers' Society and New Utrecht Council No. 1,332 R. A. He is survived by three sons and a daughter.

IMPORTANT BATTLES ON MANY GRIDIRONS

Harvard, in Weakened Condition, Will Struggle Against Strong Virginia Eleven.

Chief among the gridiron battles which will be played this afternoon stands the contest at Cambridge between Harvard and the University of Virginia eleven, which two weeks ago humbled Yale. Of the other struggles which will interest the football world those which stand out as furnishing real tests, and which may cause upsets, are Pennsylvania at Annapolis, Lafayette at Princeton, Colgate at West Point, and Springfield Y. M. C. A. College at New Haven.

There is particular interest in the game between Harvard and Virginia, not alone from the fact that it furnishes the first basis of comparison between Yale and the Crimson, but because there is a lurking fear at Cambridge that Virginia may develop an attack that will humble Harvard as it did Yale. The Cambridge men are in far from the best of condition for such a struggle, injuries and a lack of cohesion in the eleven due to the frequent changes in the line-up, having left the Crimson team in peril. Even though one of the touchdowns which the Southerners made against Yale may have been lucky still there was a well-earned field goal, and Harvard has due respect for the ability of Thurman of Virginia, who is dangerous within even a long distance of his opponents' goal. If Harvard can only come out of the struggle with but a slight margin of victory Coach Haughton will no doubt be satisfied and thankful.

Yale may have difficulty in defeating the Springfield eleven. The Blue team has had one defeat already by Virginia and last week just managed to scrape out a victory over Lehigh by a margin of one point. This hardly indicates that Yale will score an easy victory, even though there is not much knowledge of the strength of Springfield. The latter eleven has played a decidedly open game for the last two years, and that will be matched no doubt against line plunging tactics by the New Havenites. The possibilities of the well developed open game have, however, been so well demonstrated that there can be no certainty against a team which successfully follows such a policy.

At Annapolis the navy will line up against Pennsylvania. Coach Ingram has not been defeated, the Navy having not scored one victory while the Quakers were beaten last week by the Penn State eleven. The Middies this season have been a disappointment. The men have not rounded into form even so far that a definite personnel of the team have been chosen. Still the middies are noted for an ability to suddenly reach their top form, and it may be that they will fight their best battle against the Quakers. The latter, however, on the playing form thus far appear to be the logical winners.

Princeton has been fortunate this year. The coaches have just managed to keep the team a few points ahead of its opponents, and with Syracuse defeated last week and Rutgers in the game before that, it hardly seems probable that Lafayette will worry the Tigers. Princeton's greatest asset is a defense that is perfect. It has turned aside defeat in the previous games when the offense was woefully ineffective and Lafayette will have to provide more formidable backs than any that have heretofore tried to break the Tiger line if the team is to win. On the other hand, Princeton is gradually working up an attack, in fact, is showing more rational development than any other of the big elevens.

Since the Army has always had an opponent difficult to defeat and this year promises to be no exception. The Army could do no better than tie with Holy Cross, and though Colgate has met no such opponent the scores that have been run up in the two games played indicate an eleven with a powerful offense.

TIGERS' LINEUP IN DOUBT.

Expect to Strike a Tartar When Lafayette Clashes with Them.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 15.—Princeton expects to meet a tartar tomorrow. Lafayette is coming to town with a record that is not too promising, but the Tiger authorities feel that the visitors are holding something up their sleeves. Coach Rush hopes to win, but that feeling seems to forecast a battle before the result is decided. Lafayette is bringing a large crowd of rooters to town, the delegation being headed by the student band, and the stand at University Field will probably be well filled when the whistle blows for the start.

Practice today was light but snappy. Various features of the game came under the personal attention of Rush, but the greater part of the afternoon was spent in merely running through plays, with the emphasis laid chiefly upon the forming of interference. The line had the heaviest work out, and some time was spent in coaching them to break through and charge to better advantage.

The line-up at the start of the game tomorrow is rather uncertain. Coach Rush did not know which men he would call upon. The tackle positions and the backfield present problems. The other places are fairly definite. Higbie, Reay and Brown will start at ends, and McLean will be at one tackle. Nourse and Hogg will be the guards, and Gennert will take care of centre. Glick will be at quarter back, Shea at half back position, and Driggs at full back. The one tackle and the other half back place have not been filled. Whether Halsey or Kaufman will start at tackle is the problem. Halsey is new and inexperienced, but Kaufman has not been showing up well. Either may start, but Kaufman is likely to be favored. It was not known whether Tibbott, who has been all of Princeton's points, was in good enough condition to go in, or whether a new man would be tried at half back. Eddy may start. Brown is not in the best shape and will probably be supplanted by Merion Wilson soon after the start.

CORNELL NEEDS A TEST.

Bucknell's Light Team, However, Not Likely to Provide It.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 15.—The Cornell football team sought the seclusion and artificial light of the baseball cage this evening in its final practice for the Bucknell game tomorrow. Every Varsity man was in his position, and Dr. Sharpe said that all of the regulars would start tomorrow. The only doubtful man was Jamesqn, left tackle, who has been out of the line-up for a week. He did not play in the Williams game last Saturday. Dan Reed has determined to send him into the game for a while, but proposes to give Fisher, a promising new tackle, a chance before hostilities have progressed far.

The Ithaca eleven is in good shape, many of the 'Varsity men being refreshed by the comparatively easy week's work.

The Bucknell team, which arrived tonight, is lighter than Cornell. The Ithacans' backers, however, are hopeful that it will play a hard game, because Cornell's defense is in need of a real test.

COLUMBIA'S HARD TRIAL.

Famous Old Players Hurled at Morningside Heights Team.

Columbia's football squad had the hardest drill of the season yesterday afternoon. A short and snappy signal drill led off the afternoon's work and then the 'Varsity and scrub elevens were ordered into a fifteen-minute scrimmage. Then followed a short scrimmage with the freshman team, and after that the 'Varsity men got a rest for the final scrimmage, while the scrubs and freshmen battled on the turf.

Coach Metcalf pulled a surprise on the first string eleven by lining them up against a makeshift aggregation of real football players. For about twenty minutes the Blue and White received training on the defense against a harder team than they will meet all season. The ends were Metcalf and Assistant Coach Ike Feifer, former Dartmouth star, Paul Withington, who played on the Harvard teams in 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911, and who has been helping the Columbia team for the past few afternoons, took one guard position and the other was filled by Harry Kersberg, also a Harvard lineman in 1904, 1905, and 1906. Columbia substitutes filled in the vacant positions on the line and at quarter back, and then Coach Metcalf trotted out his back field. Stimson, one of the assistant coaches and a former Oberlin College player, took one half back position and Fisher, coach of the freshman squad, assumed the other. The full back was Tom Thorp of the 1904 and 1905 Columbia teams.

The Varsity team was slow accustoming itself to such a squad of invincible opponents, but in a few minutes it found its stride and allowed but one touchdown. Tom Thorp on a fake kick formation took a forward pass and ran about fifteen yards to the goal line. After this one score the Varsity took a brace, and its defense, which has been generally regarded as the one weak point, showed exceptional strength. Time and again Thorp, Stimson, and Fisher were thrown for losses, and for the last few minutes of the scrimmage their gains were few or none at all.

Dartmouth to Play Fast Team.

Special to The New York Times.

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 15.—Dartmouth is ready for a hard proposition tomorrow, when they play the light, but fast, Vermont eleven. As Vermont has shown its greatest strength in end runs, Dartmouth's weakest point, the Green will have a real test before its journey south to play Princeton next week. The Dartmouth line-up will be: Dussell, left end; McAuliffe, left tackle; Merrill, left guard; Gile, centre; Spears, right guard; Cotton, right tackle; Emery, right end; Holbrook and Worthington, quarter back; Gerrish, left half back; Duhamel, full back; Thielscher, right half back. Today was spent in going through the rudiments of the game, such as tackling the dummy, falling on the ball, and running down punts.

Stevens Tech Team Rests.

For the first time in five weeks the Stevens Tech Football squad did not don their uniforms yesterday. Coach Rodgers decided to let the men have a day of rest before playing Haverford this afternoon at Castle Point, Hoboken, and devoted an hour or so to lecturing them. The rest was especially welcome to the Varsity line, several of whom are not in good shape, and it is probable that some second string men will be seen in the line today. Marshall, who has been playing left end all season, has been shifted to halfback and his place will probably be filled by Hopkins. This change is expected to strengthen the offensive, and as the scrubs have been using Haverford plays all week against the 'Varsity Stevens hopes to keep its slate clean by not having its goal line crossed this afternoon.

Lafayette Rehearses Signals.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTON, Penn., Oct. 15.—The final touches in the preparations for the game with Princeton were put on the Lafayette team by Coach Crowell this afternoon. He ran his proteges through the signals of the plays that will be used against the Tigers on University Field tomorrow. He gave them a short talk on the kick-off play from both points of view, and after a short run he dismissed them for the night. They will leave for Princeton in the morning, feeling that the practice of the week has been well worth while and should enable them to play better ball than they did one week ago. The team will line up as follows: Centre, Captain Luhr; guards, Gulick and Mummert; tackles, Livezey and Ryon; ends, Blackburn and Lowe; quarter back, Taylor; half backs, Scott and Weldon; full back, Lake.

How Rutgers Will Line Up.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Oct. 15.—Coach George Foster Sanford put the Rutgers eleven through light practice this afternoon in preparation for the game with Muhlenberg here tomorrow. The back field consisted of Talman, Bracher, Elliott and Scarr. Wittpen may start, but he is bothered by a bad knee. The return of Miller, the husky centre, who has been out of the game for the past two weeks, will probably result in shifting Mason to guard. Garrett will play the other guard position. Nash and Rendall are slated for tackles and Rockafeller and Austin for ends. It is rumored that Muhlenberg has been pointing toward this game and that they will come to New Brunswick confident of victory. This is Rutgers's last home game of the season.

Indians to Play Warner's Team.

Special to The New York Times.

CARLISLE, Penn., Oct. 15.—The Carlisle Indian football squad of twenty-four players and coaches left Carlisle this evening for Pittsburgh, where it will play the University of Pittsburgh tomorrow. The players, with the exception of Tackle Weimas and Quarter Back Floor, are in the best of physical condition and expect to put up a hard fight against Glenn Warner's eleven on Forbes Field tomorrow. The redskins held an extensive signal practice on Indian Field this afternoon and the new plays and formations are now working smoothly. Carlisle's probable line-up tomorrow will be: Left end, Pratt; left tackle, Williams; left guard, Lassa; centre, Norrin; right guard, Hawkeagle; right tackle, Martel; right end, Looksaround; quarter back, Dickerson or Henry Broker; left half back, Crane, Wofford or White; right half back, Fred Broker; full back, Captain Calac.

Stuyvesant Soccer Victory.

Stuyvesant High School took the measure of Horace Mann School on the soccer gridiron at Van Cortlandt Park yesterday afternoon, emerging victor by the score of 3 goals to 0. At half time Stuyvesant led by 2 to 0, the result of a goal shot by Barundin and a penalty kick by Smith. In the second half Captain Mezoglioni scored from another penalty. The line-up:

Stuyvesant.	Positions.	Horace Mann.
Curatola	Goal	Dolball
Mezoglioni	Right back	Brown
Hiawitshka	Right half	Cunzman
Smith	Centre half	Woodbury
Larzer	Left half	Stone
Greenfield	Outside right	von Hoffman
Barudin	Inside right	Ferns
Jackson	Centre	Winston
Dobkin	Outside left	Colby

YALE EXPECTS TO STRIKE ITS GAIT

Legore to Play Full Back and Capt. Wilson Will Run Team Against Springfield.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 15.—The Yale eleven will make another effort tomorrow to strike its gait. Beaten 10 to 0 by Virginia and held to a 7 to 6 score by Lehigh, Yale's pace has been slow all season. The rapid improvement in attack and the success of the defensive coaches in bracing up the rush line the past week have caused the undergraduates to feel that the team is emerging from its slump and will tomorrow show high standard football against Springfield Y. M. C. A. College. The team has improved fast the past week, and two experiments will be put into effect in tomorrow's game. The veteran, Harry Legore, will start his first game of the season at full back and Captain Alec Wilson will play his first game this fall in his old place as quarter back.

The absence of the five first string men, who were injured by Lehigh last Saturday—Black, Baldridge, Betts, Thompson and Guernsey—will compel Yale to present several substitutes, but Yale possesses a wealth of rush line material, and Springfield is not especially feared. The Massachusetts team defeated Holy Cross last Saturday, 7 to 0, and tied West Point two weeks ago, 14 to 14. It is light and lively and is said to have a remarkable half back in "Dutch" Miller. A clever demonstration of the forward pass is expected from Springfield, and unless the Yale end rush play proves better than it has been it is likely that Springfield will score through this attack.

The Yale team has shown more driving, straight-away football in practice this week than at any time since Coach Hinkey took charge of the squad, but Hinkey has not abandoned the lateral pass and a variety of attack, including the plunging and end-running game. The lateral and the forward pass are ready for the artillery drive at the Springfield team.

Today only signal practice was ordered for the 'Varsity and second teams during the hour spent in the Yale Bowl. A new graduate coach arrived in the person of Tad Jones, one of Yale's most famous quarter backs. Jones looked over the quarter back candidates, all of whom except Captain Wilson are below par. He will bring the Exeter Academy eleven here to play the Yale freshmen tomorrow.

Only a single eleventh-hour change in the lineup is contemplated by Yale. It is now likely that Wilson will start the game, doing brilliant work at half back for the second eleven, will start the game in place of Scovil at right half back. Church and Blodgett, the second string ends, will be used fully half the game as regular frontier men. The probable lineup: Left end, Moseley; left tackle, C. Sheldon; left guard, Von Holt; centre, Way; right guard, Jim Sheldon; right tackle, Gates; right end, Allen; quarter back, Captain Wilson; left half back, Smith; right half back, Neville; full back, Legore.

The Yale-Springfield officials will be: Referee, Laurence Bankart, Dartmouth; umpire, William Okeson, Lehigh; linesman, Percy Carpenter, Amherst; field judge, F. A. Godcharles, Lafayette. It is planned to play four thirteen-minute periods.

ARMY EXPECTS HARD GAME.

Coach Daly to Start Best Men Against Colgate Eleven.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 15.—Undaunted by the heat, which was of mid-Summer temperature, the coaches had the Army eleven out for a snappy signal drill this afternoon on the "Plains" as the last preparation for tomorrow's game with Colgate. As Head Coach Daly expects a good fight he intends to put the best men into the contest at the outset. Bob Neyland will pilot the Army eleven for the first time since the Holy Cross game two weeks ago. Neyland has been working out in the drills this week and is in good condition again. With Britton again at end, it is likely the coaches will use several flankers in tomorrow's battle. Britton will surely get a chance at some stage of the game. The new man, Cole, will probably get into the game in the back field, but it is unlikely that he will start the game as Ford, Mitchell, and Coffin are slated to carry the Army's attack in the running game.

Coffin's punting in the signal drill today was all that could be desired. The new plays tried out today went off smoothly, both Neyland and Murrill driving the Varsity at quarter back. Tully was hurt last evening during the scrimmage, and is unlikely to take part in the game tomorrow. Several shifts in the makeup of the forward wall will be made.

Navy Team Rearranged.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 15.—Though the team is crippled and the failure of a number of old men to approach last season's form has made necessary an unexpected arrangement of the Naval Academy eleven for the game against the University of Pennsylvania tomorrow, the Navy coaches are expecting to see more of the old fighting spirit of the Navy than in the previous games this season, and are hopeful that a good showing will be made. Head Coach Ingram announced the following line-up: Left end, Kenworthy; left tackle, Ward; left guard, Holtman; centre, H. S. Jones; right guard, Blodgett; right tackle, Gilman; right end, Blodgett; quarter back, Miles, (Captain); left half back, Martin; right half back, Westphal; full back, Broadfoot. Holtman is a newcomer. Blodgett and Martin are new in their positions, the experience of the former having been in the back field and of the latter at end. Broadfoot and Kenworthy have had slight experience on the first team. Seventy-five Pennsylvania men will be the guests of the Midshipmen for the game and the hop which will follow. The Pennsylvania squad remained in Baltimore tonight and will come to Annapolis tomorrow morning.

More Seats for Army-Navy Game.

With the baseball season past, the Polo Grounds is being converted into a football gridiron. New stands are to be erected especially for the Army-Navy game, which will be played there Nov. 27, and it is expected that the seating capacity will be about 1,500 more than in 1913, when the last game between the two institutions was played in this city. The distribution of tickets will be identical with the system of 1913. The Army and Navy allotment is exactly the same in number, and both the Army and Navy have the privilege of purchasing additional tickets. Both academies will exercise that option. They also have the right to first call upon 8,000 other tickets. In other words, their written orders for these tickets will be accepted prior to any public sale. This arrangement gives the Army and Navy over 35,000 seats in their control. The remaining seats, which will be in the east and west sections as they were in 1913, will be sold through the New York Baseball Club. The club will also have a limited number of boxes for sale. Each box holds four persons and the prices will be as in 1913, $50 and $100 each, depending upon location. Mail orders for boxes or seats may now be addressed to the New York Baseball Club, 200 Fifth Avenue. These orders must be passed upon by a committee, which reserves the right to reject any it wishes to. The seats are $3 each, and each person is limited to four. Certified checks must accompany the requests for single tickets and boxes. Applicants must also send stamps for return postage and registration.

Lawrenceville Plays Tome School.

PORT DEPOSIT, Md., Oct. 15.—The most important game of Tome School's schedule comes tomorrow when Lawrenceville lines up against the local eleven. The Tome team has greatly improved recently and is in excellent condition for the big game.

HARVARD DEFENSE BETTER.

It Will Get Severe Test, It Is Expected, Against Virginia Today.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 15.—While there was no real scrimmaging on Soldiers' Field this afternoon for the Harvard football squad the men were drilled hard in their plays for tomorrow's game with University of Virginia, which, because of its 10 to 0 victory over Yale two weeks ago, comes here regarded as a dangerous opponent.

Harvard, which has been weak on defense all Fall, has been subjected to a hard week's drill on this essential and should enter tomorrow's match considerably stronger than it was a week ago. The team will present practically the same rush line as that which started against Carlisle, but the backfield will be much better than it was last week. Both Mahan and King will be in the line-up, while Rollins, a fast and effective end running back, will be in McKinlock's place. The Crimson's offense, with these three men in charge of Quarter Back Willcox, should be better than in the Colby, Mass., State and Carlisle games, but on the defense the problem is considered difficult, as Virginia is much heavier than Carlisle, which was able to gain nearly 300 yards last week by virtue of its line attack.

Neither Parson nor Gilman, the regular tackles, will be able to play tomorrow, but Taylor has been shifted to centre, between Dadmun and Cowan, and the guards have made great progress this week the middle line defense would show a real improvement over anything yet seen in the stadium.

The regulars probably will be kept in the line-up throughout the game unless a big score develops, as next week Harvard plays Cornell, and this game will be one in which Harvard will need its very best men.

Percy Haughton went to New York today and did not see the drill, but he is expected to return to direct his team tomorrow. Leo Leary, who recently resigned from the regular staff of coaches, has reconsidered, and hereafter will be out on the field every day.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Oct. 15.—In its game tomorrow with Harvard Virginia will be without the services of Bratton Stuart, whose work featured in Virginia's defeat of Yale two weeks ago. He is out of the game with several broken finger bones as a result of scrimmage work. When the team left today for Cambridge, however, the coaches said all the other regulars were in fine condition.

Lehigh in Trim for Albright.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., Oct. 15.—Lehigh finished its preparation for the Albright game tomorrow with a light practice. No scrimmage has been held this week. One was prevented today because it was exceedingly warm and showers made the field very slippery. There was a spirited practice, however, and the men showed lots of life. The same line that started against Yale in last week will oppose Albright tomorrow, but the back field will be entirely different. Much of today's practice was spent in working out back field combinations with Cassat at quarter back. Magargee will be shifted from full back to left half back, in Cahall's old place, and Boland will take Keady's right half back position. Full back will be taken care of by "Ty" Halstead. It will be the latter's first game this year, due to early season injuries. While the 'Varsity was going through its hard signal drill the second team was being whipped into shape for the contest tomorrow with Mercersburg Academy.

Colgate Team Weakened.

HAMILTON, N. Y., Oct. 15.—The Colgate football team left this morning for West Point, where it will face the Army team tomorrow. Coach Bankart has been handicapped this week by an unusually large hospital list. Coach Bankart has been working hard all week to develop a new combination to use against the Army. Carroll, who played right tackle against Rochester, has been shifted to centre; Horning, from tackle to guard, and West from half back to left tackle. Captain Abell and Goode will play right tackle and right guard respectively. Stewart and Neilan will be the ends. In the back field Anderson at quarter, Gillo at full back, and Hubbell and Roberts half backs will be the choice.

Penn State Will Start Regulars.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., Oct. 15.—Penn State's 'Varsity squad is well primed for the fray to be staged here tomorrow with Gettysburg. Coach Harlow gave the linemen a thorough drill in blocking and breaking through, while "Bud" Whitney tutored his forward passing squad. State's full strength will be used in the first stages of the contest, but if Captain Wood and his team mates obtain a reasonable lead, second-string players will appear in the Blue and White line-up. The following Penn State regulars will start the game: Higgins and Swain, ends; Captain Wood and Czarnecki, tackles; Miller and McDowell, guards; Painter, centre; Ewing, quarter back; Berryman and Yeager, half backs, and Clark, full back.

Union's Team for N. Y. U. Game.

S. Cohen of the Sophomore Class won the annual freshman-sophomore cross-country run, over the 155th Street course, at the college, yesterday. His time was 17:44—fair time for the 3¼-mile course. He led from start to finish. J. Landis, a team mate, held the second position for three-quarters of the way, but had to give way to Natapoof of the lower class. After a hard contest Landis finally began to lose ground about half a mile from the finish. The sophomores won the run by the score of 26 points and the freshmen were only three points behind them. The times of the first ten men to finish were:

S. Cohen, 1918, 17:44; Natapoof, 1919, 18:10; J. Landis, 1918, 18:36; H. Alchorn, 1919, 18:56; S. Siegel, 1918, 19:10; S. Greenberg, 1919, 19:30; B. Wolf, 1919, 20:10; S. Nierenberg, 1918, 20:30; W. Jones, 1918, 21:00; I. Perper, 1919, 22:00.

Sophs Beat Freshmen in Flag Rush.

The sophomores successfully defended the flag in the annual flag rush at the College of the City of New York on Jasper Oval yesterday. At the start of the rush the freshmen divided into four squads. As each squad came in to rush the "strippers" of the sophomores they broke their formation. Only once did the freshmen get a man to the pole, and he was pulled down before he could climb out of reach. The winning of the rush gives the sophomores a clean slate in all the lower class events so far. They won the track meet, the cross-country run, the tug-of-war, and the flag rush.

Allie Nack Coming Along.

Allie Nack, the ex-amateur 125-pound champion, makes his fourth appearance as a professional in the main bout of ten rounds at the Broadway Sporting Club of Brooklyn on Monday afternoon. Nack, in his three former professional bouts, knocked out Bobby Gair in two rounds and outpointed Josh Matthews and Gene Oliver in ten rounds. Both Willie Ritchie and Mike Gibbons, who engaged Nack as one of their sparring partners, have declared him to be one of the fastest boys with a punch they have seen in some time.

Notes for the Boxers.

The Broadway Sporting Club will stage three ten-round bouts to-night., Kid Taylor is matched with Knockout Eggers. Battling Lahn will engage in a return engagement with George Thompson of California, and Young Ketchell and Joe Daly will furnish the curtain raiser.

Sixty-eight rounds of boxing is scheduled tonight at the Fairmont Athletic Club in the Bronx. Two bouts will each be ten rounds, while twelve fours will complete the programme. Buck Crouse and the "new" Al McCoy are slated for the main attraction, and in the semifinal George Raynor of Ridgewood will oppose Al Ring.

Manager Weismantel of the Broadway Sporting Club offers a grand attraction for his weekly matinee on Monday afternoon. Chick Simler of Scranton, and Al Schumacher of New York will do business in the ten-round feature. Allie Nack, former amateur champion, and Josh Mathews of Ridgewood are down for the semifinal. There will be a number of semiprofessional tryouts.

Willis Astey and John Daly will battle ten rounds as the headliner of the weekly show of the Olympic Athletic Club on Monday night. There will be two other good ten-round bouts between evenly-matched boxers.

FORDHAM TO OPEN FOOTBALL FIELD

Union College Will Be Opponent of N. Y. U. at Ohio Field Today.

Fordham will open its home football season this afternoon, when the Maroon Warriors play the Connecticut Aggies eleven at Fordham Field. The game will mark the opening of the Maroon's new gridiron and a record opening game crowd is expected. Work was still progressing yesterday on the new grandstands, but the contracts call for their completion by noon today. A special stand has been built behind the players' bench for the use of the Faculty and the invited guests.

The Fordham squad found no let-up in the practice yesterday. Although a hard game is looked for today, Coach Vaughn kept the men busy for two hours. A surprise was sprung when a last minute scrimmage was ordered by the coach. The scrub team was mixed up with the 'varsity, the regulars from the left side of the line being opposed by their teammates from the right. The second string men were also separated in the same way, so that while there were two elevens clashing, the 'varsity players were able to get a better idea of their own strength.

The line-up for today was announced after practice. As a result of injuries during the past week, Treanor will be unable to work at center, while Jim Morcaldi will be absent from the quarter-back position. Both players started at Union a week ago, but were injured in Monday's scrimmage. As a result Delehanty, a former Brooklyn Prep youngster, will be over the ball, Captain Dave Dunn shifting from left half to the pilot position. Cantwell will be tried out at left half back.

UNION GOAL IN DANGER.

N. Y. U. Feels Confident of Crossing It Today on Ohio Field.

New York University football team will have its first real battle of the season this afternoon on Ohio Field, where it will play the Union College eleven. Although the up-State team has not had its goal line crossed this season, the local players have every intention of accomplishing the feat this afternoon, and furthermore, feel confident of removing the sting of last year's defeat when the Union collegians scored a touchdown and a field goal against their blank record.

The Violet eleven had its final workout yesterday afternoon, when Coach Reilley put the 'Varsity through a long signal drill and practice in taking kick-offs. The afternoon's program also included some work in punting for the New York backs and a rudimentary practice in passing the leather, but no rough work in tackling nor scrimmage was attempted by either the 'Varsity or scrub teams. The latter eleven is to play the Morris High School eleven this morning, and on that account it came in for a large share of the instruction.

Coach Reilley devoted most of his attention to the regular men and followed the details of every play with the idea of perfecting the rough-and-tumble of the Violet's clash with the Union team. The scrub players worked for the greater part of the time under the direction of Assistant Coach "Rudie" Gorsch, and experimented with a variety of the workouts and formations.

When the Violet lines up for today's contest it will have in its make-up a powerful backfield, which is expected to spell defeat for the Union players, providing the line is able to resist the efforts of the Schenectady backfield, which also has a reputation for consistent offensive work. The New York eleven is expected to employ its usual tactics, which consist of a variety of open plays and ordinary workouts, such as it used successfully against the R. P. I. and Hamilton players in its two previous games. Cann will be depended upon for the kicking side of the game, and from the demonstration that he gave in yesterday's practice, the Union collegians will have to show something good if they are to defeat the Heights players on these tactics alone.

Frank Moran, the ambitious heavyweight, who will try to beat up Jim Coffey at Madison Square Garden next Tuesday evening, is training at Dal Hawkins's road house in Westchester, and the best mascot he has is little three-year-old Colin Bell, Jr. This lad with his long shock of golden curls, watches Moran while he trains and is his constant companion.

Moran is very confident of beating Coffey. He said yesterday, without a bit of boasting, that next Tuesday night would be one of bitter disappointment for all the motormen in New York. In fact, Moran got very glib of tongue, and asserted that next Tuesday evening Coffey would be where he ought to be on the bill of fare—last.

Moran did a lot of shadow boxing yesterday, and was quick for a big fellow. He also skipped rope with the agility of a school girl, and then had three hard, rough rounds with Bartley Madden of the west side. Moran is in his best condition, and yesterday weighed 202 pounds.

Since he boxed a twenty-round bout with Jack Johnson in Paris Moran has had a successful career in England. He defeated Bombardier Wells, Sims, Jack Bennett, and Sergeant Ragon, all by knockouts. He expects to give Coffey the same kind of a reception Tuesday night.

A guarantee of $10,000 awaits the winner of the Coffey-Moran bout for a contest with Jess Willard, Billy Gibson stated last night. Matchmaker Gibson is confident he can successfully negotiate with the managers of Willard, allowing

WOOL ASSOCIATION GOLF AT BALTUSROL

George H. Williams Captures Cross Score Honors—Fine Shot by Newkirk.

The third and largest tournament of the Woolen Golf Association was held yesterday at the Baltusrol Golf Club with more than sixty players competing. J. W. Newkirk furnished the most spectacular performance when he holed a midiron shot from sixty yards off the eighteenth green for a two. This was about the third time this trick has been accomplished there.

Gross honors went to George H. Williams for his 91, while the President's Cup, offered by Richard A. Strong, was won by C. J. Wilson with a card of 93, 20—70, the prize going to the man making the lowest net of the entire field.

Three classes were provided, with first and second net awards in each, the list being complicated somewhat by the rule that no player could take more than one trophy. In Class A first prize went to J. Clough for his 98, 13—83, second falling to H. Reeve Stockton with 95, 9—86. In the second division the winner was R. K. Taylor, 100, 24—82, and second, A. H. MRS. FAITH GOLF LEADER.

Takes Gross Prize in One-Day Tournament at Siwanoy.

Mrs. William J. Faith of Wykagyl easily led a large field in another one-day golf tournament over the links of the Siwanoy Country Club yesterday. The leader made the round in 94, and with her two-stroke handicap had first claim on both the gross and net score prizes. As is customary in such cases Mrs. Faith accepted the gross trophy. That left Mrs. A. S. Rossin of Century and Mrs. Irving Brown, a Haworth woman, tied for low net. The first named returned 99, 3—96, and the other 105, 9—96. A three-hole play-off was agreed upon and Mrs. Rossin won.

An official of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association stated at Siwanoy yesterday that the date for the one-day tournament scheduled for Hackensack had been changed to Monday, Oct. 25. The leading scores follow:

BIDDLE DEFEATS INMAN.

Philadelphian Wins Hot Springs Tennis Championship.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 15.—A gallery of 500 people turned out this afternoon to see Craig Biddle, Philadelphia, play Fred C. Inman, New York, in the challenge round of the fourth annual open lawn tennis tournament of the Hot Springs Golf and Tennis Club. The tournament has been remarkable for its evenly balanced field of players and has been the most brilliant ever held here.

Biddle came through a field of thirty-six players, proving his right to challenge Inman for the trophy which he has held twice. Wallace Johnson, Philadelphia, also holds one leg on the trophy.

The first set was very close, only five points separating. Inman, in the second set, led at 5—3, and should have won, but through nervousness, finally lost the set and match, Biddle winning 6—4, 8—6, 6—1. Biddle played a very steady game, his handling and control of Inman's break service and smashing drives being particularly good and they drew frequent applause from the gallery through their remarkable gets of one another's placements.

The finals in the women's doubles were played this morning between Miss Marion Fenno and Miss Eleanora Sears of Boston against Mrs. Rawson Wood of New York and Mrs. J. H. Williams, Detroit. Although losing the match to Miss Sears and Miss Fenno with a score of 6—3, 5—7, 6—2, Mrs. Wood and Mrs. Williams played very good tennis. Mrs. Wood was effective at the net and scored many a point through her placements and volleying. It was the team work of Miss Fenno and Miss Sears that won the match.

Two semi-final rounds were played off in the mixed doubles in which Miss Fenno and Bernon S. Prentice defeated Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Williams, 6—3, 6—4, and Miss Sears and Biddle defeated Mrs. Wood and Edgar Scott of Philadelphia, 6—3, 6—love.

The finals in men's doubles will be played off tomorrow morning between J. A. Allen and McKee Dunn, and Mrs. Biddle and Mr. Scott. The finals in mixed doubles will be played in the afternoon.

WEST SIDE TENNIS ENDS.

Mrs. Wallach Win Singles Title from Miss Vanderhoef.

The West Side Tennis Club of Forest Hills, L. I., closed its season yesterday with the final rounds of the club championships in women's singles and doubles. In the former event Mrs. Barger-Wallach defeated Miss Marion Vanderhoef after three hard sets at 6—2, 5—7, 6—3, and in the doubles Mrs. Spencer Fullerton Weaver and Mrs. R. A. Pope won from Mrs. J. L. Blanchard and Mrs. G. de Gersdorf at 6—1, 6—3.

The contest in the women's singles brought out some of the best playing of the tournament and was watched by a big gallery. The struggle was a lively one and Miss Vanderhoef made a fine stand by a brilliant series of rallies at close range and won the second set of the match when she was making a plucky uphill struggle, but Mrs. Wallach reeled off her best assortment of crossing shots and scored at the net. There were no sensational gets, as both women played consistent tennis, but Mrs. Wallach cleverly worked Miss Vanderhoef out of position for winning shots, and always scored prettily.

In the doubles the concerted action of Mrs. Weaver and Mrs. Pope was always in evidence. The winning pair took steadier, however, showing superior speed and skill in picking the openings for passes. The summary:

Women's Doubles.—Final Round—Mrs. Spencer Fullerton Weaver and Mrs. R. A. Pope defeated Mrs. J. L. Blanchard and Mrs. G. de Gersdorf, 6—1, 6—3.

TENNIS AT BEDFORD PARK.

Invitation Tournament Expected to Close This Afternoon.

The invitation tennis tournament at the Bedford Park Lawn Tennis Club was advanced to the final stages yesterday and with fair weather the tournament will close this afternoon. Mrs. Percy Wilbourne and Miss Margaret Grove advanced in the women's doubles through a victory over Mrs. F. W. Jenkins and Mrs. W. H. Voss, at 6—3, 2—6, 6—3, and Miss Marie Wagner and A. J. Ostendorf scored an easy victory in the mixed doubles over Miss Marion Foster and Elliott Binzin at 6—1, 6—3.

Principal interest was centred in the showing made by the youngsters, Miss Foster and Binzin, against their more experienced opponents. Binzin, although only a school boy, is champion of Fordham, and created a favorable impression in their recent Junior Metropolitan Championship. Miss Wagner and Ostendorf were not required to show their best form to win, although the young pair made a plucky effort to take the second set, but when pressed hard they wavered and were unable to recover the lost ground.

Mrs. Wilbourne and Miss Grove found unexpected opposition in the doubles and were compelled to play an extra set before eliminating Mrs. Jenkins and Mrs. Voss. The strength of the winning pair was, however, developed in the third and decisive set. The summary:

Benford Park Lawn Tennis Club, Women's Invitation Doubles.—Second Round—Mrs. Percy Wilbourne and Miss Margaret Grove defeated Mrs. F. W. Jenkins and Mrs. W. H. Voss, 6—3, 2—6, 6—3.

Mixed Doubles.—First Round—Miss Marie Wagner and A. J. Ostendorf defeated Miss Marion Foster and Elliott Binzin, 6—1, 6—3.

Women's Singles, Consolation.—Second Round—Mrs. Percy Wilbourne vs. Miss Ruth Schwab, 8—0, 5—6, unfinished.

COLLEGE SWIMMERS TRAIN.

Columbia Appears to Have Best Team, Though Lacking Divers.

Among the members of the Intercollegiate Swimming Association, Columbia University appears to have the strongest swimmers in the college ranks this year. Her superiority will be offset in part, however, by lack of plungers and fancy divers. Herbert Vollmer, the New York Athletic Club star, will be the best man on the team. He won the 100 and 220 yard intercollegiate events last winter, and will swim in the 50-yard title this year. Captain Lee, Vollmer, Herbert, Walker, Davidow, and Cohen will be candidates for the relay team. In Muller, Frankel, Willlard, and Benson Columbia has good second-string men for other races. Noble, Levi, and Bridges will enter the plunging contests. Wilson, Burghardt, and Fowler will do fancy diving.

Yale must depend upon new men to fill her team. The fancy diver, Benjamin, appears able to take McAleenan's place, and Tom Fitzgerald, the recruit from Andover, may cover the loss of Hoadley, the sprinter. There is no plunger to replace Smith, Yale's most reliable point winner. The absence of McLeish, Marr, and Summers leaves other weak spots.

Pennsylvania has a squad of veterans. Swimmers Shryock, Masten, Kaiser, Shrieber, and Simonton, and divers Coons, Leopold, and Evans, and plungers Lehman and Brown have reported for practice. Coach Kistler has a dozen promising freshmen at work.

In Princeton's sophomore class are several good waterspuds. The list of candidates includes Selby, Burchenal, Madden, De Lacey, Lester, Norris, Green, Fisk, and McCaddon, swimmers; Brereton, Friesell, Kasanjian, and Cary, fancy divers, and Simon, Shipman, Burkeiman, and Baker, plungers.

Escapes Shrapnel, Hurt Hunting.

That "irony of fate" we hear about loomed up singularly in the case of Prince Ranjitsinhji, otherwise the Jam Sahib of Nawanagar, the East Indian Prince, who made quite a name for himself as a cricketer, tennis and polo player while a student at Cambridge University in England. Ranjitsinji offered his services as a volunteer with the allied troops operating in Northern France and was appointed as Aide-de-Camp to the staff of General Sir John French, and has been actively operating in that capacity for some months. Late in August he secured a leave of absence for a visit to England, and the first week of September was spent in shooting on the Yorkshire moors. While after grouse one of the shooting party of which he was a member mistook the Prince for a bit of game, and the Jam Sahib received part of the charge of shot in his right cheek, some of the pellets injuring the right eye so that at last accounts he was in danger of losing the eyesight.

COLUMBIA'S SPORTS SHOW A DEFICIT

Pacific Mail Official Denies Its Ships Were Sold Because of High Prices Offered.

Baseball and Basket Ball Only Games That Are Profitable at College.

One major and one minor sport are the only two paying propositions at Columbia University, according to the annual report of the Athletic Association made public yesterday by Harry A. Fisher, graduate manager. Baseball turned over a balance of $351.46 and basket ball, although regarded as a minor sport, has been popular at Columbia for years, and netted $966.78 for the association's treasury. All other sports were operated at a deficit, from $20.25 for that of the freshman sports, to $4,000 for crew. The total year's deficit for the athletic association ending June 30, 1915, was $996.07, in contrast to a credit balance of $8.65 for the previous year.

This general deficit is due principally to a decrease of $670 in student and alumni dues and to a decrease of nearly $200 in team balances. There was also a large increase in expenditures for three minor sports, hockey, fencing, and gymnastics.

Whereas the total receipts for the year were $9,732.53, the cost of operating eleven sports at Columbia in addition to freshman athletics, was $10,728.60. This is exclusive of the few incidental expenses made necessary in connection with the return of football, so that this year, with the gridiron sport again included, the figures will be probably doubled.

More than $800 was saved this year in salaries and administration of the association, which consumed $2,047.31.

The receipts of basket ball, consisting only of gate receipts and guarantees, amounted to $5,713.97, and the disbursements were $4,747.19. The credit balance of $351.46 in baseball constitutes the difference between total receipts of $4,862.45 and expenditures of $4,510.99.

In crew, which lost more heavily than any other sport, the receipts were $4,960 and the expenditures $8,960. Track cost Columbia $1,082.70, whereas the receipts were $94.15, leaving a deficit of $988.55. 321.20. Hockey received $191.48 and expended $405.17, leaving a deficit of $714.48. Fencing cost Columbia $684.20 and took in $161.05, with a loss of $503.15. The combined sports of swimming and water polo cost $696.44 and the receipts were $331.50. The gymnastic team took in $196.30 and spent $311.70. Soccer cost $502.48 and received $203.50. Wrestling received $490.38 and spent $681.06. Tennis cost Columbia $324.95 and the receipts were $230.90. The freshman team cost $310.94 to operate and the receipts were $290.69.

The reserve fund of the association now amounts to $774.76, including the interest from July 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915.

Another item in the receipts is interest of $319.55 on the Football Association fund. This fund amounts to approximately $10,000, and has been in trust since the sport was abolished in 1905.

NEWS FOR THE ATHLETES.

Roscoe C. Campbell, the Troy A. A. U. handicapper who instigated the investigation of the amateur status of Abel Kiviat and Harry Smith, is one of the numerous candidates for the vacancy on the State Athletic Commission. In a letter to a New York friend yesterday Campbell sought the assistance of local athletes in procuring the position. He has enlisted in his campaign hundreds of his friends around Troy, Albany and Schenectady, and believes he has a splendid chance of getting the position. In his letter he stated that he was sorry that he had ever caused the present mix-up in amateur athletics by his accusations against Kiviat and Smith, but expressed the opinion that everything would come out all right." He declares he made no mention of the alleged violations of the A. A. U. rules by Smith and Kiviat in demands for excessive expense money from Commissioner Eaton, but several persons of the letters the handicapper alleges he had received from the accused athletes.

Emil Muller, former discus champion of the United States, yesterday joined the New York Athletic Club. He will be unable to represent the Mercury Foot organization in competition until next February. Muller is a former member of the Irish-American A. C., which club he represented when he won his national championship two years ago. He went to California and represented the Los Angeles A. C. and was a point winner in the national title events at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in August.

Word was received yesterday at A. A. U. headquarters from Colonel George B. Billings of the Boston Athletic Association that five of the best amateur boxers in New England will be sent here on Oct. 29 and 30 to compete in the James E. Sullivan memorial boxing tournament at the New York A. C. and Crescent A. C. Colonel Billings stated that it would be inadvisable to conduct tryouts in Boston at this time, but assured the A. A. U. that the New England boxers would be thoroughly canvassed and the best boxers in the locality sent here. Arrangements are under way to have a team of Chicagoans compete in the memorial tourney. Everett C. Brown of the Chicago A. A. has informed the Chairman of the committee that tryouts probably would be arranged in Chicago and the winners in eight classes would be sent here. Johnny Maloney the Panama-Pacific Exposition champion at 115 pounds, expects to be among the contestants despite the fact that he is now incapacitated with an injured hand.

Entries will close today for the ten-mile national championship and seven-mile title walk which will be contested under the auspices of the Johnson and Johnson A. A. on the Rutgers College Athletic Field at New Brunswick, N. J., next Saturday afternoon. Already a larger entry has been received for these events than ever before, Hannes Kolehmainen, the ten-mile title holder has decided to defend his title, while Eddie Renz, peer of American amateur walkers, will do likewise in the seven-mile event. Kolehmainen is still undecided whether he will go West or remain here after these sports.

Full teams from the Irish-American A. C., New York A. C., Salem-Crescent A. C., Long Island A. C., Morningside A. C., Bronx Church House, Trinity A. C., and Glencoe A. C. have been nominated for the track and field sports which will be contested at the Reservoir Playground, Jersey City, tomorrow for the benefit of the James E. Sullivan Memorial Fund. Nearly all the best athletes of this district, and some good ones from out of town, will be seen in action, and no effort will start despite the investigation of his amateur standing. Homer Baker, the English half-mile champion, has canceled his entry because his injured leg has not fully recovered. Perhaps the most interesting event on the long program will be the half-mile race, in which are entered Willie Gordon, Mike Devanney, Joe Higgins of Worcester, Sid Leslie, W. B. Grainger, and Ed Balestier. Dave Caldwell and Tom Halpin have also been invited to compete. Over the five-mile trail will be seen Hannes Kolehmainen, W. Lynch of Washington, and other good long-distance runners. For the sprints the Salem-Crescents have promised to get Roy Morse, the 220-yard national champion, to compete. Matt McGrath, Pat Ryan and Pat McDonald will compete in the three weight contests.

Major Donovan, Chairman of the Athletic Committee of the Fourteenth Regiment A. A., announced yesterday that the annual games of his regiment will take place in the Brooklyn armory on Dec. 4. Lawson Robertson, trainer of the Fourteenth, will assist Major Donovan in arranging several attractive features.

Elected District Superintendent.

Dr. John T. Nicholson, former principal of Harlem Evening High School and Public School No. 186 of Manhattan, was unanimously elected District Superintendent of Schools yesterday by the Board of Education. Dr. Nicholson organized the first athletic meet for men in the city evening high schools. He has served on committees for the Hudson District Athletic League, city elementary school track and field championships, and was Chairman of the Evening High Schools Games Committee. He directed the last track and field championship games of the evening high schools at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, which proved to be so successful. Dr. Nicholson is a native of New York City, and was one of the close personal friends of the late James E. Sullivan.

M'ADOO ANSWERED BY KRUTTSCHNITT

Says Company Warned Congress It Could Not Compete with Japanese Under That Law.

BLAMES THE SEAMEN'S BILL

The Administration's defense of the seamen's law in a speech made by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo before the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday has aroused the resentment of the officials of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which has given up the transpacific business since the act went into effect. Julius Kruttschnitt, President of the company and Chairman of the Board of the Southern Pacific Railroad, yesterday branded as false the assertion of the Secretary that the company went out of business because it was able to sell its steamers at more than their real value.

"The newspaper reports of the speech of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo before the business men of Indianapolis state that the most remarkable feature of the address was an attack on the officials of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, because of the sale of its ships heretofore engaged in transpacific traffic," said Mr. Kruttschnitt.

"'I am told,' so reads the report of the address, 'that the Seamen's bill was not the mainspring for the transfer of the Pacific Mail vessels. The Panama Canal act, which denied railroads owning competitive steamship lines the right to operate them through the canal, and the present abnormal rates for cargo space on the Atlantic, which made it possible to sell the ships at more than their real value, was, I understand, the true cause of their sale.'

"The company is censured because it gave no adequate notice that the La Follette bill would cause it to discontinue its transpacific line. That the inevitable consequence of the passage of the Seamen's Bill would be the forced discontinuance of its steamships on the Pacific was vainly pointed out by the representatives of the Pacific Mail, with all the earnestness and emphasis at their command, to Congressional committees at numerous hearings in the eleven years that intervened between the date of the first introduction of the bill and its final passage.

"Finally the head of the Pacific Mail, on July 14, 1914, as a last resort, wrote a formal letter to the same effect to the President of the United States. It was shown at that time that the inability of the Pacific Mail to operate under the restrictions of the Seamen's Bill was not based on a rough estimate of the increased expenses, but was accurately ascertained by an analysis of the payrolls and the other expenses of operation which would be affected by the provisions of the bill. All these remonstrances, warnings, and notices were treated as 'bluff,' and now are regarded as never having been made. The claim of surprise at the effects of the Seamen's Bill is absurd.

"We have it that the Secretary of the Treasury has been told that the Seamen's Bill was not the cause of the withdrawal of the Pacific Mail's boats but the real cause was the high price of ships brought about by the war. But long before the war was dreamed of the officers of the Pacific Mail had declared and demonstrated by facts and figures before Congressional committees that the passage of the act would necessitate the withdrawal of its transpacific ships on the Pacific. The same reasons which increased the value of ships would have made the Pacific Mail unwilling to part with its vessels and abandon a business which it had been engaged in for years if the intolerable restrictions of the La Follette bill had not deprived it of any choice in the matter.

"The Secretary of the Treasury intimates that the provisions of the Panama Canal act forbidding railroad-owned ships from going through the canal was a contributing cause. It is up to him to explain what possible connection there can be between the Panama Canal act and a sale, not of ships engaged in the Panama Canal trade but of a separate fleet always engaged in the transpacific trade.

"The practical effect of the language clause is to subject American ships, which must have American officers, to the hopeless disadvantage of competing on the Pacific with Japanese ships while employing labor at wages five or six times in excess of those paid Oriental seamen and at a daily cost of feeding four times in excess of their competitors."

NO BIG BUTTERICK PROFITS.

President Says There Is Nothing to Justify Stock Rise.

The recent rise of the stock of the Butterick Company on the New York Stock Exchange was unwarranted, according to a statement issued yesterday by G. W. Wilder, President of the company. Mr. Wilder denied the reports freely published that the company's earings had been greatly benefited through lessened competition from France.

"The company's German business has been cut off," he said. "Our sales in England have been reduced, and although our Paris business is satisfactory the total of our European business is much less. Our merchandising business in this country has been satisfactory, but advertising receipts in our American publications have fallen off in the last year, and earnings have been maintained only by severe reductions in expense.

"There is nothing in the present condition of the company's business that warrants a rise in Butterick stock."

CONDITION OF TRADE.

Commenting on the condition of trade and the business of the banks, Dun's Review says:

With cross currents diminishing in force, the tide of business is rising at an accelerated pace, and an era of widespread activity is in prospect. Usually during a transition period gains are recorded slowly, but the mercantile conditions have passed the stage where progress is difficult of discernment, and of late industrial expansion has been phenomenally rapid. Reports from nearly all sections of the country tell of the unchecked growth of new enterprise, which, while manifest in varying degrees in different lines and localities, is everywhere stimulated by the exceptional strength of the fundamental situation.

Indications of a larger volume of general business operations, as reflected in clearings through the banks, continue much in evidence, total exchanges this week at the leading cities in the United States amounting to $3,524,488,210, an increase of 77.8 per cent. as compared with the $1,980,716,178 of the same week last year, and of 31.5 per cent. as compared with the corresponding week in 1913, when $2,689,223,595 was reported.

Bradstreet's says:

Trade expands at a speedier pace, and reports, especially from the eastern half of the country, are more satisfactory than for three years past. Activity in industries, many of which are sold far ahead, is accompanied by stiffer commodity prices, broader distribution by jobbers, good sales by retail dealers, enlarged road orders, increased railway traffic, improved commercial demand for money, plethoric supplies of funds, largely increased bank clearings, better collections, and reports that many houses have increased their traveling forces.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Prices Recede Further on Restricted Dealings—New Foreign Loan Bonds Decline.

The feverish speculation in stocks quieted down still more yesterday, and for the first Stock Exchange session in several weeks the total dealings were considerably under a million shares. The list was very irregular without either serious reactions or large gains. The situation was one that had been desired by bankers and the more conservative members of the brokerage fraternity, who foresaw possibilities of danger if the upward movement continued without any halt to permit a distribution of stocks. There was no specific reason apparent for the loss of interest which gave some of the offices a deserted appearance yesterday, although the European political complications received more consideration than previous developments of equal importance have been accorded.

The market has advanced so rapidly in recent weeks that it can react much further than the movement has gone so far without extinguishing the profits which holders of a large number of shares can take. It was evident yesterday, as on the day before, that many traders were content to hold their securities only so long as the market continued its upward trend. As soon as a halt was called these traders began to make sure of some of their profits by selling wherever the market was willing to take their stocks. Such a situation proves irksome to speculators who have grown accustomed to daily advances of five to ten points, but from a technical standpoint the market has been put in a much better position by the backing and filling which has been going on since Wednesday. As showing the sensitive position of some of the high-priced war-order issues, it may be noted that Bethlehem Steel made a net gain of 10 points on dealings of 1,800 shares, while General Motors lost 10 points on 350 shares. Third Avenue, on the announcement of the inauguration of dividends, sold off and closed at 62½, with a net decline of 1½ points. Westinghouse continued very active and strong, selling at one time at 71¼, although it closed at 69.

Completion of the arrangements for the $500,000,000 Anglo-French loan, which was signalized yesterday by the formal signing of the loan agreement, was marked on the Stock Exchange by the sale of $116,000 of the new issue at 98 and 97⅞. At the lower figure $37,000 were sold. The financial district saw nothing serious in this weakness, and assumed that bankers interested in the success of the loan are not making an artificial display of strength to help the sale of the securities offered to the public.

The weekly trade reviews were very favorable. Dun & Co. reported that the tide of business is rising at an accelerated pace, foreshadowing an era of widespread activity. Bradstreet's considers the business conditions in the eastern half of the country as more satisfactory now than at any other time in the last three years.

COTTON BEARS BUY AS BULLS UNLOAD

Irregular Market, Due to Rains and Reports of a Limited Demand by the Trade.

DAY'S GAIN 8 TO 11 POINTS

Many Compress Yards in the Southwest Are Said to be Blocked in Spite of the Short Crop.

Cotton was irregular yesterday, and in spite of the fact that the net results of the day furnished an advance of 8 to 11 points the undertone of the market toward the close was rather easy. The character of the trading has undergone some change, as some of the bear interests which have been fighting the advance for a considerable period were the most prominent buyers yesterday, while the selling came from bull quarters.

Scattered rains throughout Oklahoma, Alabama, the Memphis district, and Georgia supplied the incentive for a sharp rise soon after the opening. A supplementary report by Miss Giles also was a factor in promoting the early demand. Her report stated that approximately 60 per cent. of the crop had been picked, and about 52 per cent. had been ginned on an average date of Oct. 9. In most instances the crop was said to be passing through the gins as fast as it was picked, and in many localities the gins were running only two or three days per week.

Considerable bearish news is reaching the market. In these advices stress is laid upon the limited demand from American spinners and exporters, and the accumulations of cotton in the interior. In the Southwest many of the compress yards are blocked with cotton. The faith of the bulls in higher prices is based chiefly on the short crop.

Southern spot markets, as officially reported, were unchanged, 6 to 12 points advance. The local market for spot cotton was quiet, 5 points advance. Middling, 12.45c. Sales, 133 bales. Futures closed steady.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Heaviness marked the closing dealings on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. Earlier in the day prices had tended toward improvement, with some sharp special upward movements occurring. There was no particular news to account for the closing downward trend, but there seemed to be indications of liquidation here and there. A number of the "war stocks" were prominent in the early advances, particularly Westinghouse Electric sold nearly 4 points above its closing price on Thursday.

$20,000,000 TOBACCO CONCERN ORGANIZED

Mutual Consolidates Going Companies and Will Give Coupons with Goods.

PLANTS IN THREE STATES

No Trade War or Attempt at Monopoly Is Contemplated, Benjamin Swartz c. Counsel Says.

After negotiations for two years large tobacco interests in this State, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania have organized a $20,000,000 manufacturing and distributing corporation to be known as the Mutual Tobacco Company, Inc., to manufacture cigars, smoking and chewing tobaccos, and cigarettes for the general trade, which will be introduced to the public by widespread advertising and a system of coupons packed in the goods. The incorporation papers were filed yesterday at Dover, Del., but the incorporators mentioned in the papers are merely representatives of the interests concerned in the consolidation of old and independent tobacco companies.

The concerns already identified with the enterprise include James C. Tansey, 19 South William Street, and Mrs. G. B. Miller Manufacturing Company, 97 Columbia Street, established in 1776, New York City; Hoffman & Co., Red Hook, Dutchess County, N. Y., established in 1800; Allen & Dunning, Paterson, N. J., formed in 1836, and the Campbell Tobacco Company of Newark, organized in 1806. The Campbell plant comprises four city blocks. Negotiations are pending with other firms and corporations, including a large Pennsylvania plant, and until these are completed the names of the officers will not be announced.

It is said that the capital stock is based on the assets of the consolidated interests. The new company will grow, cure, and handle tobacco in all forms; import and export leaf tobacco and produce established and new brands of cigars, cigarettes, smoking and chewing tobaccos, and snuff. Some of the foreign style cigars will be made, particularly Italian and Hungarian stogies. Headquarters will be in New York.

With the use of improved and modern machinery it is expected that the products of the plants will be largely developed, while the consolidation has for its main object the reduction of overhead charges. It will have a general distribution department for reaching the trade through co-operation with jobbers and other dealers throughout the country.

A trade war or a monopoly is not contemplated by the new organization, said Benjamin Swartz, attorney for the incorporating interests, at 192 Broadway yesterday.

"We are simply taking advantage of the most advanced selling methods of the largest present-day industrial undertakings," said he. "Instead of inadequate and insufficient advertising of a few brands of cigars, cigarettes, and other tobaccos, we plan to popularize various successful brands by widespread national advertising. We will take advantage of every benefit of organization on a large scale."

COMMODITIES MARKETS.

WHEAT.

Press advices from Europe to the effect that the military operations on the Dardanelles would probably be abandoned caused a very active buying movement in the wheat market, and early in the day prices showed gains of 2¼ to 3c a bushel, which represented a gain of almost as much as had been lost during the sharp decline of Thursday. The high point of the day was made during the early trading, but while there were sharp setbacks at times under profit taking, the undertone was distinctly firm, and final quotations were 1⅝ to 1¾c net higher. In the local cash market No. 1 Northern, Duluth, was quoted at $1.14, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, $1.10, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo.

CORN.

The corn market was moderately active and prices were firm, with net gains of ⅝c to 1¼c. Offerings were small and there was a good commission house demand on the theory that the crop prospect has been materially reduced as a result of frost damage. In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 76½c, prompt shipment.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The cottonseed oil market experienced a very sharp decline during the early operations yesterday, and at the low point of the day values were about 70 points down from the top of the recent bull movement. There was more or less buying on the decline, and prices experienced a sharp recovery, although at the close of the day quotations were 11 to 18 points net lower.

COFFEE.

The coffee market was steadier, with closing prices 2 to 7 points net higher. Total sales for the day were larger, amounting to 49,000 bags, but of this amount 27,000 were in the form of exchanges from December to the later months. The switching was the principal feature of the day and it was evident that shorts in this position were inclined to cover and transfer their interest into the more distant positions, and the differences between the near and the far months narrowed down 2 to 5 points.

The local spot market was quiet, but prices were very steadily held, with Rio 7s quoted at 7 cents.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 8,802 packages. Continued dull trade, and while the general market for creamery is without material change, there are a few weak spots. FORD DISCOVERS NEW IRON PROCESS

Makes Iron From Ore by One Heat, It Is Said—Will Give Secret Free to the World.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT Oct. 15.—The Ford Motor Company today announced a new discovery in metallurgy of great importance to the iron and steel industries of the United States. Hereafter the iron ore consumed at the Ford plant, from 700 to 1,000 tons a day, will go into the blast furnaces in its crude state and be refined by one "heat" into both pure gray iron and malleable iron. On Mr. Ford's return from California, his associates said today, he will give his secret to the world free of all royalties.

From the time the crude ore enters the furnace until it is turned out in the form of completely milled parts for motor cars it will not be alowed to cool. One process, instead of two or more, accmplishes this result. For experiments, which have been going on under the personal direction of Mr. Ford, a big steel plant in Detroit was commandeered, with its working force, so that the daily production schedule of the Ford plant might not be disturbed. The new discovery, it is asserted, will save the Ford Motor Company $3,500,000 a year.

"Today the Ford Motor Company announces that the making of grey iron and malleable iron direct from the initial heat of the blast furnace has been accomplished. The elements while still in a molten state are changed and refined and finally finished and poured direct into molds for grey iron or malleable castings as the case may be. This has worked out to an actual fact and work produced. What seemed to be an impossibility has been accomplished.

"This new process not only effects a great economy in the cost of manufacturing, but also produces grey and malleable iron of much greater strength and durability.

"With the Ford Motor Company's use of at least 700 tons of this metal a day one can readily realize the vast saving that will be secured. This discovery will prove of tremendous importance not only in the motor car industry, but in all lines of manufacture where these metals are used."

TO AIR PUMP CO. MUDDLE.

Preferred Stockholders Win Point in Federal Court.

The affairs of the International Steam Pump Company, which has been in trouble for some time, will be thoroughly investigated as the result of a decision given late last evening in the Federal District Court by Judge Julius M. Mayer. He granted permission to the Protective Committee of the preferred stockholders' committee, of which MacDougall Hawkes is Chairman, and the receiver appointed by the New Jersey courts to file an amended answer in the creditor's suit, which has been merged with the foreclosure suit brought by the Guaranty Trust Company.

In this amended answer it is alleged that there was collusion between the Directors and the bondholders to defraud the preferred stockholders, and it is also asserted that at the time the company defaulted on its interest it was solvent. At the hearing yesterday before Judge Mayer there were some sharp passages between Paul D. Cravath, counsel for the bondholders, and W. Bourke Cockran, counsel for the Preferred Stockholders' Committee, and Mr. Cravath asserted that the new application was intended merely to delay the foreclosure proceedings. Judge Mayer told the lawyers, however, that he would permit the preferred stockholders to intervene through the New Jersey receiver. Proofs of the alleged solvency of the company must be presented during the week of Oct. 19 to Special Master Gilbert.

3D AV. RY. PAYS DIVIDEND.

Quarterly, 1% First Distribution Since 1907.

The Directors of the Third Avenue Railway Company yesterday declared a quarterly dividend of 1 per cent., payable Jan. 1, to stockholders of record Dec. 15.

This is the first dividend paid on the stock of the reorganized Third Avenue Company. The old Third Avenue Railway, prior to 1889, paid dividends for a long time at the rate of 7 per cent. a year. When the road was leased to the Metropolitan Street Railway Company dividends continued at the rate of 5 per cent. until October, 1907, when they were suspended by the receiver for the Metropolitan. F. W. Whitridge, President of the new company, maintained that there should be no dividends until the property had been thoroughly built up and until a proper surplus had been laid aside for the future welfare of the road.

According to an official of the company it is the intention of the Directors to continue the dividends regularly and thus put the Third Avenue road on a 4 per cent. basis. It is proposed to continue to set aside an annual depreciation allowance of about $500,000. This is in direct line with the policy of Mr. Whitridge.

Ever since the new management of the company went into office on Jan. 1, 1907, there has been a clamor among stockholders for dividends. Mr. Whitridge always dodged the question and often reasserted his intention to reconstruct the road. He wanted to put every cent back into the property, he told the stockholders, in order to perfect the operating conditions. Early this year, when the surplus of the road was higher than ever, a committee of Directors undertook to investigate conditions for themselves. It appeared for a time that there would be a split in the Third Avenue management. The committee reported in favor of the full board that an early dividend would be justified by the financial condition of the road and Mr. Whitridge, it is understood, then acquiesced in this view. He was not at yesterday's meeting, but that was not regarded as indicating opposition. It is understood that he is still in Europe.

It was also announced after yesterday's meeting that the $2,020,000 4 per cent. Third Avenue Railway bonds recently authorized by the Public Service Commission had been sold to the Central Trust Company at 80. The company reserves the right to repurchase the bonds at any time at the same price and accrued interest.

LONDON MARKET ACTIVE.

LONDON, Oct. 15.—Money was abundant and discount rates weakened today. It is believed that some of the leading banks intend to withdraw from the agreement not to lend below 4½ per cent. owing to plentiful supplies of money. American exchange advanced another fraction to 4.69.

The stock market was only moderately active. The usual war loan and Japanese bond transactions were recorded and Mexican shares were firmer on the belief that the United States will recognize Carranza.

American securities declined in the forenoon, but hardened later under the lead of Canadian Pacific. The closing was steady.

A DROP IN IMPORTS.

Some of the Principal Items in Last Week's Figures.

There was a drop of $5,000,000 in imports at this port in the week ended Oct. 9, compared with the week before, according to the Custom House report out yesterday. Last week's total entries were $14,982,040, compared with $19,978,651 in the week before, and $17,278,772 in the week before that. Dry goods imports showed a slight increase.

Imports of watches, precious stones and jewelry totaled $490,168, while india rubber manufactures and waste were returned at $1,990,239. Hides, leather and findings totaled $1,808,647, while wool entries were 9,133 bales, worth $590,595. Sugar imports here aggregated 113,486 bags, appraised at $1,388,622, and coffee, 160,220 bags, valued at $1,216,866. Raw cocoa imports were set down at $499,604.

Dry goods entered for consumption were valued at $2,374,900, silk entries being appraised at $786,849. In the week before, dry goods imported for consumption were returned at $2,265,925, silk entries being $1,120,602. Withdrawals from bonded warehouses last week aggregated $726,943, while warehoused goods had a value of $514,907. In the corresponding week last year the entries were, respectively, $590,818 and $1,093,322.

DELAYED RUSSIAN GOODS.

Hope Is Now Entertained of Their Speedy Shipment Here.

E. C. Porter, agent in charge of the local Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, said yesterday he looked for improvement soon toward the release of goods from Russia. The bureau is working with the Russian Government agents in passing upon importers' applications for merchandise, and this, it was said, requires considerable time.

With a view to expediting matters, the bureau has requested the Russian Department of Customs at Petrograd to act as quickly as possible. A hitch, however, has occurred in the matter of the release of calf, goat and dried sheepskins. While under the original announcement, these goods were to be included in the list of merchandise to be released, it is now stated by cable that the Russian authorities have decided that on account of "military necessity," these goods cannot be released to American importers.

While this new stand is somewhat disconcerting to bureau officials here, it is hoped that no further curtailment will be made of the export list. Mr. Porter seemed nopeful yesterday that importers will eventually be able to get their purchases of furs, seeds and other articles long held up.

HIGH BIDDER WINS.

Upper Hudson Stone Company Gets Contract Despite Protest.

On the advice of Chief Engineer Lewis, the Board of Estimate yesterday approved the award of the contract by the Public Service Commission to the Upper Hudson Stone Company for stone ballast for the subway, at a cost of $230,440. It was this contract which was held up at the request of Borough President Marks because when it was first advertised Calvin Tomkins offered to supply the stone for about half as much as the Upper Hudson Stone Company, and had his bid rejected.

When when the contract was readvertised, the crushing test was made far more severe. Mr. Lewis reported that it was necessary to increase the strength of the crushing test, and so on the recommendation of Controller Prendergast the contract was approved. Borough Presidents Marks of Manhattan and Van Name of Richmond, however, voted against it on the ground that the action of the commission had been very irregular.

LAND SUIT FOR $1,900,000.

Florida Promoter Would Recover from Jarvis Executors.

Cromwell Gibbons of Jacksonville, Fla., brought suit yesterday in the Federal District Court through his attorney William R. Willcox of 165 Broadway, to recover $1,900,000 from Hugh S. Jarvis and William J. Patterson, executors of Samuel M. Jarvis. He alleges a breach of contract for the purchase of 1,250,000 acres of land in the drainage area of the Everglades.

The suit is founded on a contract dated Nov. 19, 1912, between Samuel M. Jarvis of Cuba and New York and Albert W. Gilchrist, Governor; W. Y. Knott, Controller; J. C. Lunning, Treasurer; Park Trammel, Attorney General, and W. A. McRae, Commissioner of Agriculture of Florida, as Trustees of the international Improvement Fund of that State. Under it, it is alleged, Gibbons was to receive as commission for obtaining Jarvis as a purchaser $1 per acre, payable in four yearly instalments in cash or securities. The payments, it is alleged, should have begun on July 1, 1914, but the executors of Jarvis, who died last year, have not fulfilled the contract, the papers say.

In addition to the subscriptions announced a few days ago subscriptions have been received from Finley Barrell & Co., H. P. Goldschmidt & Co., Bankers Trust Company, Trippe & Co., Bamberger Brothers, Vernon C. Brown & Co., Tate & Hays, Freeman & Co., E. F. Hutton & Co., Millett, Roe & Hagen, Edwin S. Father Thinks School Calisthenics Killed Girl Pupil.

Clarence E. Porter of 237 Golden Avenue, Flushing, L. I., last night made a statement in which he said that the death of his daughter, Miss Maud Gertrude Porter, 16 years old, had been caused by gymnasium work in Public School 24, Flushing. The girl died at her home in Flushing on Thursday from heart disease.

Mr. Porter said that his daughter had not been able to attend school for more than a year before her death, because of ill health. He said that "chinning the bar," one of the exercises that the pupils went through, was entirely too hard for girls, and particularly for frail girls or boys who were not robust.

The teachers of the school say that girl pupils are not supposed to take up the "chinning the bar" work, as it is for boys only.

SUBWAY PROPS TOO SMALL.

Timber Boss Admits Shoring Shortage at Cave-in.

Raphael Conti, a timber boss for the contractor, said yesterday that there was a shortage of lumber for props in the subway cut at Seventh Avenue and Twenty-fourth Street. He was testifying at the Coroner's inquest into the deaths caused by the accident. He said he had had to take timber from one place in the subway to another.

"Did you tell your walking boss, Thomas Mitchell?" Coroner Feinberg asked.

"Yes, but I don't remember how many times. I had to use lumber 3 by 10, although 6 by 10 would have been better," was the reply.

"Why did you not use the 6 by 10 lumber?" asked the Coroner.

"Because I was short of it," was the reply.

The inquest will be resumed Monday afternoon.

TILEFISH IS BACK AGAIN.

Earthquake Scared Them Away in 1882, Expert Says.

According to T. M. Douthart of the Bureau of Fisheries, New York is again to have the pleasure of adding the tilefish to its menu. This beautifully colored, palatable fish disappeared in 1882, supposedly as a result of a volcanic disturbance off the New England coast. The return of the species is attributed to the shifting of the Gulf Stream westward, and the consequent warming of the waters near the American shores.

Mr. Douthart, who was a member of an expedition sent out by the Government, says that the fish will be seen in New York markets not later than next Friday, when it will be sold at retail, each purchaser receiving a history of the return of the fish and directions how best to prepare it for the table.

REJECT PHYSICIAN'S CLAIM.

Dr. Welch Wants Accounting from Mrs. Frank Leslie's Executorss.

Dr. John E. Welch of 138 West Seventieth Street yesterday asked the Surrogate's Court for an order directing the executors of the $1,500,000 estate of Mrs. Frank Leslie to make an accounting. The physician says that $12,500 is due him for professional services, that he has filed with the executors, William Nelson Cromwell and Louis M. Cramer, a proof of this claim, and that they have rejected it.

Dr. Welch recites that he attended Mrs. Leslie for a long period, and that for six weeks prior to her death he gave her his entire time and professional knowledge.

Only 12 Years Ago There was hardly a house on Broadway north of 110th St. The value of lots was from $7,000 to $10,000 each.

To-day Broadway is almost solidly built up to 182nd St. Lots are worth $25,000 to $75,000 each. Side Streets have increased in the same proportion. The growth of the City Northward and the Subway did it. Owners made very large profits.

Think of it In a few short years, before you realize it, property around the 238th Street subway station will be as solidly built up as around 181st St. station to-day.

Examine the Dash property. Buildings have already been started opposite. Values will advance 300, 400 or 500%.

NO SABBATH SHOWS, NOT EVEN IN CHURCH

"ADELAIDE" UNDER THE BAN

Pastor, Amazed at Threat, Says He Had Planned Series of Sunday Entertainments.

Officials of the Sabbath Society would not say yesterday whether they would take any action to prevent the production of the musical drama "Adelaide," dealing with an episode in the life of Beethoven, which David Bispham is to produce at the Church of the Messiah, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, on Sunday afternoon.

The play was at first scheduled for the Harris Theatre, but the Sabbath Society wrote to Mr. Bispham and to Selwyn & Co., lessees of the Harris Theatre, and pointed out that the performance would be a violation of the Sunday law. Thereupon the performance was withdrawn, and on Thursday night it was announced that it would be given at the church instead, with no admission charged and entry free to every one.

The Rev. D. J. McMillan, Secretary of the Sabbath Committee, referred inquiries to Powell Crichton of 14 Wall Street, attorney for the committee and the society. Mr. Crichton would not say whether or not action would be taken, but he admitted that a complaint had been made to the society.

"Such complaints," he said, "are usually the basis of our action, whether against theatres or other Sabbath breakers. We had such a complaint against the performance at the Harris Theatre, and in consequence wrote to Mr. Bispham and the managers, pointing out that this was a violation of the Sunday law. Now we have received this other complaint, but what action the committee will take I do not know.

"As far as the performance is concerned, it will be just as much a violation of the law as if it should take place in the theatre. The question of place, or of admission fees, plays no part in it."

Such performances fall under the provisions of Section 2152 of the Penal Code, which reads:

The performance of any tragedy, comedy, opera, ballet, farce, negro minstrelsy, negro or other dancing, wrestling, boxing, sparring contest, trial of strength, or any circus, equestrian or dramatic performance or exercise, or any performance or exercise of jugglers, acrobats, club performances, or rope dancers on the first day of the week is forbidden.

"That prohibition," said Mr. Crichton, "makes it illegal for a party of four or five amateurs to give a one-act play in the residence of one of the party, in the presence of two or three of their friends on Sunday.

"The Sabbath Society has come in for a good deal of criticism because of the continuance of so-called 'sacred concerts' in vaudeville houses. Some have tried to take action against them. The chief difficulty lies in the wording of the law which was passed a good many years ago when the favorite amusements were somewhat different from the present.

"It specifically prohibits certain specific exhibitions. It is perfectly possible to get up a complete vaudeville program, and a very good one at that, without including a single act that comes within the proscription of the law. It has been done here in New York. Moreover, many vaudeville acts are of such a sort that it is difficult to say that they do come precisely under the definition of dramatic performances. The only way to make sure that no vaudeville house violates the law is to have observers at every performance that takes place on Sunday."

Officials of the Sabbath Society also intimated that it had often been found difficult to obtain legal action even in cases where the society considered that the performance included acts clearly within the statutory prohibition.

"It was not infrequent," said one of them, "to have the matter referred from one court to another, and eventually coming before the Grand Jury, where it was very difficult to get indictments.

"The fact that violation of the Sunday law can be punished in the case of the theatre by the loss of the license is one which operates strongly at times to instill caution into managers, and it was suggested by some of the leaders of the society that the fact that Mr. Bispham's play was undoubtedly a dramatic performance might have influenced the lessees of the theatre, who wanted to take no chances."

Another suggestion made at the society's offices was that such a production in a church might be construed as a violation of the ordinance requiring a theatrical license for dramatic productions—a question which was brought up in connection with the cabaret shows and midnight musical comedies maintained by some of the Broadway restaurants.

It is understood that the Police Department has been considering the vaudeville question for some time, but just what policy the department will adopt is uncertain as yet. Second Deputy Commissioner Frank A. Lord is in charge of cases coming up in that connection.

It was admitted at the offices of the Sabbath Committee that the Bispham case was the first one in which the committee had made a protest since action was taken last Spring against the performance of a one-act play by Alla Nazimova in a vaudeville house on Sunday. But it was insisted that there was no prejudice against Mr. Bispham, but that the fact that specific complaints had been received had stirred the society to action.

The Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, pastor of the Church of the Messiah, was much surprised last night at the suggestion that the performance of the play at the church might be held illegal.

"I had had no intimation of any such thing," he said, "and it never occurred to me that such a performance would be found objectionable. Mr. Bispham came to me after the Sabbath Society had interfered with the performance at the theatre. He was much outraged, and I think justly, at such action against him when the vaudeville houses are allowed to continue unhindered.

"I thought it would be an excellent idea to have the play in the church. But if the Sabbath Society should make threats I don't know what we could do. The matter gives me the more concern because we are planning to give a series of dramatic productions on Sundays in January at the church. Most of the actors will be amateurs, though there will be one professional; and one of the plays will be a peace drama."

Dr. Holmes said that he had no personal acquaintance with any of the active officials of the Sabbath Society.

"HIGH JINKS" INN BURNS.

Washington Said to Have Slept In Colonial House.

A Colonial house at 164th Street and Sheridan Avenue, known as the "High Jinks" Inn during the days of the Fleetwood race track, and which had some imperfectly authenticated claims to historical importance, was destroyed by fire yesterday morning.

One legend which hung about the place was that George Washington had at one time made it his headquarters. Advocates of the antiquarian value of the house made a great deal of a window pane in the building on which had been scratched with a diamond the names of Washington, Lafayette, and Hamilton in handwriting reputed to be that of the three eminent personages. This was destroyed by the flames and with it were burned two chairs in which, according to tradition, Washington had sat, and parts of a post bed in which he had reposed. Fifteen years ago Mrs. Anna Frey of 206 West 124th Street, the owner of the house, and her husband, Gustav, presented to the Daughters of the Revolution from the stable of the building a Colonial coach in which Washington was said to have ridden.

YOUNG TRIEST'S FATHER IS GOING TO LONDON

Will Sail Today With Several Former Associates of Princeton Student Held as German Spy.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15.—Gustav W. Triest, father of Kenneth G. Triest, the young Princeton student held in London as a German spy, will sail from New York, probably tomorrow, with a number of former associates of his son, who will give testimony designed to show that the young man is mentally unbalanced. The court martial trial of Triest has been postponed until Nov. 1, and a further postponement is being sought. The arraignment was originally set for Monday.

Further details received in connection with the case show that young Triest was arrested while attending a naval wireless school. He had never served in the British Navy. Postal authorities, it was said by State Department Officials, had intercepted letters written by Triest in which he is said to have exhibited marked sympathies for certain German movements. Copies of the communications have been placed in the hands of Triest's attorneys.

When Triest's father called first at the State Department he urged that steps be taken to assist him in getting before the court affidavits made by former companions at Princeton. He learned that such affidavits could not be submitted, and he was advised to proceed to London with witnesses.

GREEK LINER SAILS TODAY.

Delayed by Dispute Over Reservists' Passage, the Agent Says.

The Greek liner Vasilefs Constantinos is still at anchor off the Quarantine station, but, according to A. Galanos, the agent of the line, at 8 Bridge Street, she will leave today for Piraeus with her 2,587 Greek reservists, who are becoming very impatient at the delay.

Mr. Galanos explained yesterday that the steamer had been detained through a dispute between the company at Athens and the Government as to how much should be paid for the passage of the reservists to Piraeus. Shipping men, however, said that in view of the fact that it was costing at least $3,000 a day to keep the Vasilefs Constantinos anchored in Quarantine, which will amount to $12,000 by noon today, the reason given out by the Greek Line did not seem a very feasible one.

The rumor at the Maritime Exchange remained the same as it was on Tuesday, that the ship was held because there was a possibility of Greece joining the Teutonic forces with Bulgaria.

SINGER'S SON FACES ARREST

Henry Schumann-Heink Accused of Embezzling Court Funds.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 15.—The Board of Police and Fire Commissioners tonight directed Chief of Police John Bimson to issue a warrant for the arrest of Henry Schumann-Heink, the prima donna's son, who was suspended as Clerk to Recorder James F. Carroll, on Sept. 25, two years after he had been appointed. He will be charged with embezzling $3,800 from funds of the Recorder's court. This action follows an investigation of the books by William I. Surosky, a public accountant, who was put to work on the accounts when Schumann-Heink was suspended. At that time Schumann-Heink said that his conscience was clear and he had nothing to be afraid of. He left his home in Paterson soon after his suspension and with his wife went to his mother's home at Caldwell. A process server who went there today so serve a subpoena was met by the young man's wife, who said that he was not at home.

TESTS FOR POLICEWOMEN.

Trenton to Hold First Examinations of Kind in State.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 15.—Today the State Civil Service Commission announced that the first examination ever held in New Jersey for candidates for policewomen will be conducted on Nov. 3.

The tests will be open only to residents of this city in view of the fact that they are to create an eligible list for the appointments to the Police Department in this city. The salary will be $750 a year to start. Aspirants must be of good physical build, healthy and active, and of good character. They must be not more than 40 nor less than 30 years old.

The examination is the result of the passage a few years ago of a law authorizing the appointment of policewomen in New Jersey, but this city is the first to start an eligible list.

MARKS LATE, SAYS MAYOR.

City Has Moved to Improve Conditions on Randall's Island.

Mayor Mitchel showed displeasure yesterday at the criticism made by Borough President Marks of the buildings on Randall's Island. Mr. Marks referred to conditions there as "shocking." The Mayor said the Board of Estimate and the Aldermen had appropriated $600,000 for the betterment of conditions on the island, and that the money was now available for the construction of much-needed buildings.

"Mr. Marks is rather late in being shocked," said the Mayor. "He would have been shocked had he been with us when we made the first inspection of the buildings on Randall's Island. We were so thoroughly shocked that we came back here and immediately set the machinery in action to remedy the shocking conditions."

Petitions for Recall Circulated.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Oct. 15.—An effort is being made to recall Thomas J. Walsh, a member of the Union Township Commission. A committee of forty is circulating forty petitions, and already 190 of the necessary 250 names have been subscribed. The petitions, containing twelve charges, are to be filed at the next meeting. Gross disregard for his official and private conduct, disrespect for the Mayor at meetings, and obstruction of matters in general are among charges against him. Walsh is a bookkeeper.

ARRESTED AS HEAD OF AUTO THIEF BAND

MORE THAN 60 CARS TAKEN

Sunday School Teacher, Turned Chauffeur, Confesses Long Series of Crimes.

Detectives Toner, Hughes, and Leavitt of Police Headquarters turned the nose of their gasoline launch toward Jones Dock, in Patchogue, L. I., last evening, convinced that another day of searching for Earl B. Doremus, said to be the head of a band of automobile thieves who have stolen more than sixty cars in the last few months, had failed.

But as they started from the pier to which they had moored their launch a power yawl came putt-putting toward them. It landed at the pier and two young men jumped out. The detectives had a picture of Doremus who, they knew, had been afloat somewhere in Great South Bay in a power yawl, so, although the first youth looked nothing like the picture, they approached, nevertheless, and Toner asked:

"Aren't you Doremus?"

"Sure," responded the young man.

"What do you want?"

"We want you on a charge of grand larceny," declared Hughes, happily, and the trio of sleuths gathered him in with his companion, who said he was Wallace Seaman, a chauffeur, of 25 Academy Street, Patchogue. Then they hustled both young men to the railroad station, and late last night locked them up in Police Headquarters here.

According to the detectives the yawl, the Joan, which Doremus bought recently, was provisioned for many days at sea, and the young men were about to start for Florida, where they could rent the Joan with their services as skippers.

Doremus, who is only 22 years old and said he lived at 746 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, was held on the technical charge of stealing an automobile belonging to Miss Louise C. Hall from in front of her home, 850 Seventh Avenue, on Friday of last week. Seaman was charged with acting in concert with Doremus.

Doremus was amazed at his arrest, but the detectives explained that Frank Joachim and Adolph Beniward, who pleaded guilty before Judge Crain in General Sessions yesterday to having stolen many automobiles, had implicated Doremus, not only as a partner but as their leader, when they supposed that their own capture was due to him.

Joachim and Beniward were arrested in Middlesboro, Ky., recently, where they had been operating a jitney service with three automobiles which, the police say, had been stolen here. Doremus had been their partner, the police say, but quarreled with them and they separated. Joachim and Beniward were traced when they tried to ship a car from this city to Middlesboro, but they thought Doremus had surrendered them to the police and promptly gave him up in return.

Beniward, who is 23 years old, was a Sunday School teacher near Sea Cliff, L. I., where his father had a farm. He came to this city last March to see a friend who introduced him to Joachim, and they conceived the idea of starting a jitney service in some Southern city with stolen cars. Then they fell in with Doremus and, according to the police, confessed that they assisted in the theft of thirty-seven cars.

They always stole cars of one well-known make, and Doremus, the police say, attended to the sale of them at from $300 to $350 each. As these prices were more than $100 less than the same car could be bought for elsewhere, Doremus quickly disposed of every car they got. They were driven to Long Island, where they were stripped of their license plates and the number plates by which the engine or chassis might be identified, and then sold here and in nearby cities.

The discovery in a pond near Sea Cliff of some of the stolen license plates gave the police the first clue on which they began the search for Beniward.

Beniward and Joachim, after their plea of guilty, were remanded to the Tombs to await sentence.

READS KEEP OUT OF CHURCH

President of New Jerusalem Sect Says Girl's Annoyer Isn't a Member

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 15.—Julian K. Smith, President of the General Convention of the Church of the New Jerusalem, issued a statement here tonight in which he csaid:

"I beg to state that Richard H. Keep, accused of disorderly conduct and spoken of as a clergyman of the Church of the New Jerusalem, is not and never has been a member of or recognized by the church organization known as the General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States."

The Richard H. Keep referred to is the Brooklyn man arrested on the complaint of Miss Florence Lennon, a student in the Erasmus Hall High School, Brooklyn, who accused him of annoying her in a trolley car.

NO IVES SETTLEMENT YET.

Daughters Will Continue to Fight for Part of Estate Yale Got.

Three of the daughters of the late General Brayton Ives, who have taken legal action against Yale University to obtain $250,000 each from the estate left to the university by their father, have not reached any agreement with the Yale Trustees, De Lancey Nicoll of the firm of Nicoll, Anable, Lindsay & Fuller, which represents the daughters' interests, said last night. Thomas Thacher of the firm of Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, counsel for the university, and Herbert Parsons, who represents the executors of the estate, declined to go into the details of the negotiations. The entire estate, the value of which is variously estimated at from $1,200,000 to $3,000,000, was left to Yale University, with the exception of special bequests of less than $300,000.

The recent negotiations confirm the statement which THE TIMES published six months ago, that members of the Ives family would contest the will and attempt to secure from Yale University part of the money. It was shown that the widow of General Ives, Mrs. Eleanor B. Ives, and one of the daughters, Miss Winifred Ives, had received nothing whatever by the will. Miss Frances Haven Ives had been left an annuity of $2,000, while Mrs. Walter E. Maynard, who was Miss Eunice Ives, received $100,000. Formal objections to the will were filed in the Surrogates' Court last March 31 by the three daughters named above. It was charged at the time that General Ives was not sound of mind at the time he made the will, and that it was not properly attested. The complaint further stated that "fraud and undue influence by persons whose names are at the present unknown to these contestants" were employed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 16.—The Deacons of the City Temple have approached the Rev. Dr. Jowett of New York with a view to ascertaining whether he will consider an invitation to succeed the Rev. R. J. Campbell.

Dr. Jowett's friends in England feel certain that he will now be prepared to return home.

SUSTAINS BAN ON MERGER.

New Jersey Court Enjoins the Shoe Machinery Trust.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 15.—An opinion was filed in the Court of Errors today which permanently enjoins, so far as New Jersey is concerned, the proposed merging of the United Shoe Machinery Company and the United Shoe Machinery Corporation, which have done business for years as practically one corporation, constituting the so-called shoe machinery trust. The decision of today sustains the holding of Vice Chancellor Stevens.

Although the two concerns composed the shoe machinery trust, an actual merger never had been effected. This was proposed in January, but William A. Copeland of Massachusetts obtained a restraining order from the Court of Chancery on the allegation that his interests would be injuriously affected.

In the last few years the companies have been subjected to several Federal investigations to discover the illegal monopoly, but the trust so far has been successful in its fights, even against an attempted indictment in Massachusetts.

The court today affirmed the decree of Chancellor Walker, who held that the International Power Company was insolvent, and named Adjt. Gen. Wilbur F. Sadler as receiver. The petitioner, Henry W. Bull, a New York broker, alleged Joseph H. Hoadley and his associates stripped the company of its assets and operated it and its associate concerns to further his high finance schemes.

HARD WORDS FREE WIFE.

Mrs. de Carrillo Wins Separation and $50 a Month.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Oct. 15.—Justice Morschauser in the Supreme Court this morning granted Mrs. Marie De Carrillo a separation from her husband Luis, with an allowance of $50 a month for her support.

Mr. De Carrillo, who lives at New Rochelle, but hails from Colombia, South America, is known here as the "orchid king." He conducted the cross-examination of his wife. Mrs. De Carrillo said her husband netted about $6,000 a year from his orchid business. They have several children, and the wife claimed her husband called her and them bad names.

Justice Morschauser in deciding the case said:

"As I have said before, a husband does not have to knock his wife down and blacken her eyes to be unbearably cruel in the eyes of the law. Words and actions can be as brutal as blows."

The Notes of A Bird
The Tone of A Piano

There is much that patient effort may accomplish. Few know that a lifetime of painstaking care has made it possible for one man, a great bird lover, to improve, to enlarge and to ennoble the notes of the singing birds.

And a lifetime of study has enabled the family of Sohmer to develop a piano with a tone so rare that it is today recognized as the masterpiece among pianos for the expression of song.

When you put your money into a Sohmer you receive an instrument which will retain its remarkable qualities as long as you live and probably as long as your children live after you. When length of service is considered, the Sohmer is the most economical piano to own.

Send a postal today for Illustrated Catalog and Full Particulars. State whether interested in Pianos or Player Pianos.

Blackheads are a confession of the use of the wrong method of cleansing for that type of skin that is subject to this disfiguring trouble.

The following Woodbury treatment will keep such a skin free from blackheads.

Apply hot cloths to the face until the skin is reddened. Then with a rough washcloth work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly—always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with clear hot water, then with cold—the colder the better. If possible, rub your face for a few minutes with a lump of ice. Dry the skin carefully.

Do not expect to get the desired result by using this treatment for a time and then neglecting it. But make it a daily habit and it will give you the clear, attractive skin that the steady use of Woodbury's always brings.

To remove blackheads already formed, substitute a flesh brush for the washcloth in the treatment above. Then protect the fingers with a handkerchief and press out the blackheads. Thereafter, use the above Woodbury treatment in your daily toilet.

Do this today! A 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment. Go to your druggist or toilet counter today and get a cake. Begin at once to get the benefits of this treatment for your skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is for sale by every dealer and druggist in greater New York and, in fact, by dealers everywhere throughout the United States and Canada. Made by The Andrew Jergens Co., New York and Cincinnati.

ASK EMPLOYERS TO AID NEW ARMY

Federal Officials Say Men Who Enlist Must Be Assured That Their Jobs Are Safe.

ALL RESTS ON PATRIOTISM

Government Appeals to Nation, Regarding Public Response More Vital Than Funds.

NAVY PLAN IS COMPLETE

America to Have 46 Capital Ships in Five Years and 1,200,000 Soldiers in Six Years.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Employers throughout the United States—corporations, manufacturers, professional men, tradesmen, and business men of all classes—are to be asked to contribute, as their share in the national defense, permission for their employes to engage, without serious financial loss, in two months' military training during each of three years.

This is an essential part of the administration's plan for raising a citizen army of 800,000 men in six years, which, with a regular army of 140,000 men and 300,000 reserves, would give a trained force, exclusive of State militia, of about 1,200,000 in the event of war.

The success of the plan, officials admit, depends not on the appropriations of Congress, for its cost will be comparatively small, but on the patriotic response of employers to whom an appeal will be made to furlough as many men each year, at different seasons, as they can spare, and who wish to join the proposed continental army.

Administration officials are confident that even though it is proposed to enlist only 133,000 men a year in the Continentals, or a total of nearly 800,000 in the first six-year period, more than that number will be attracted by the outdoor life of a military camp if they could be assured by their employers that their jobs would not be lost or their earnings seriously decreased. The proposed enlistment requires two months' service for each of three years, and liability for serving during the remaining three years only in the event of war.

Capital Deeply Interested.

The army plans for more than 1,000,000 trained men in six years, and the navy's program of ten dreadnoughts and six battle cruisers within five years—both of which will be presented to Congress with the endorsement of President Wilson—were the absorbing topics of interest here today. The proposed army appropriation bill will be $152,000,000, or an increase of $72,000,000 over last year, and that of the navy is $216,000,000, an increase of $68,000,000. The total defense budget of nearly $400,000,000 is an increase of $140,000,000, which, it is understood, is to be raised by a bond issue and increased revenues expected from a return to certain tariff duties removed last year.

Added details of the navy plans became known tonight. The five-year program includes, besides the ten dreadnoughts and six battle cruisers, eighty-five coast submarines, fifteen seagoing submarines, fifty destroyers, fifteen scout cruisers, and five gunboats. Two dreadnoughts will be built each year. Two battle cruisers will be built the first year, one the third year, two the fourth year, and one the fifth year.

Great Fleet of Submarines.

This plan was agreed upon in order that the appropriations out of the $500,000,000 fund to be expended for new ships during the five years might be evenly distributed through the various sessions of Congress. The first year's bill will provide $28,000,000 to complete ships already authorized, besides the new dreadnoughts and battle cruisers, and will provide also for the construction of twenty-five coast submarines, five sea-going submarines, fifteen destroyers, three scout cruisers, two gunboats, one fuel ship, and one hospital ship, $2,000,000 for aircraft, and for 10,000 additional men and 250 additional midshipmen at the Naval Academy.

The decision to increase the personnel was welcomed in naval circles, where it had been variously estimated that the navy was from 10,000 to 18,000 men short of the complement necessary for ships built and building.

By authorizing sixteen capital ships in the five-year program the American fleet, when all ships are complete, will be composed in 1925 of thirty-three dreadnoughts and battle cruisers for the fighting line and thirteen battleships of the second line, or a total of forty-six capital ships. This will be exclusive of nine battleships now in commission, which will be superannuated in 1924.

Contracts for sixteen coast defense submarines and six destroyers will be awarded by the Navy Department next Monday. The vessels were authorized at the last session of Congress. Bids for two fleet submarines, the largest submersibles ever designed, will be opened next month.

LONDON HEARS PAGE OFFERED TO RESIGN

But Ambassador Says He Has Taken No Action to Justify Any Such Report.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—A report was current in London tonight that the American Ambassador, Walter H. Page, had sent a cablegram to Washington offering his resignation from the Ambassadorship.

Mr. Page, who was apprised of the report, said: "There is no truth in such a report. I have not resigned and I have taken no action which would justify a rumor to that effect."

In what way the rumor arose is not known.

Lansing Also Denies It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—A rumor that Walter H. Page, the Ambassador to Great Britain, had protested to the State Department over the recall of Robert P. Skinner, Consul General in London, in such a way as virtually to place his resignation in the hands of President Wilson, was in circulation in Washington tonight.

According to the rumor the Ambassador was offended because the matters which caused the State Department to instruct Mr. Skinner to return to the United States had not been referred to Mr. Page.

When Secretary Lansing heard of the rumor he expressed astonishment over it and declared that it had absolutely no foundation. He denied it unequivocally.

FOUR PERSONS KILLED IN TENEMENT FIRE

Eighty Tenants, Roused at 2:30 A. M. by Flames, Flee in Panic and One Is Badly Burned.

Eighty persons were aroused from sleep in the five-story tenement at 2,127 Third Avenue, one door from the corner of 116th Street, at 2:30 o'clock this morning, when fire started in the lower hallway and sped up the stairs, cutting off the escape of every person in the house. Instantly there was a panic, which was not quieted when Policeman Foley of the East 126th Street Station burst into an excited throng on the third floor with his uniform blazing. He had forced a way up the stairs and was almost overcome.

A moment later Foley and the firemen who had arrived in response to the alarm he sent, fighting up through the smoke to the fifth floor, came on the bodies of two little girls, Anna and May Wynn, 13 and 14 years old respectively, and two other bodies, which were burned so badly it was impossible to tell wether they were those of children or adults. All had been overcome by smoke, apparently, as they tried to escape, and then had lain where they had fallen till the flames reached them. It was not believed that any other person was lost.

Foley led Mr. and Mrs. Charles O'Brien to the rear fire escape and marshaled others with them to help the O'Briens down, for O'Brien had had his hands and face burned and his wife was burned on the arms and legs. Then Foley went to the roof, whither other tenants had fled.

The Third Branch Detective Bureau is just around the corner, and Acting Captain Jones, with Detectives Mahoney and Cassetti, ran to the fire. They entered the next house, ascended to the third floor, where the blaze had begun to mushroom out, and Mahoney swung Cassetti across the airshaft. Cassetti passed back of him Mrs. Gussie Lubelsky and her children, Annie, 12 years, old, and Charles, 7. Mahoney caught them and with Jones drew them to safety.

A. J. Reymond, proprietor of a café on the corner, ran up to the second floor in his building and put a plank across the air shaft. Over this he entered the burning house and found about twenty men, women, and children too terrified to try to escape. He led them to the roof, not daring to risk them on his plank in their terrified condition, and got them down to the street throught his house.

How the fire started is not known. Foley saw the flames leaping in the lower hall as he passed the house and ran in after he had sent the alarm. The blaze spread so rapidly that it fairly chased him up the stairs as he raced through the house shouting an alarm, and after the blaze was over he had to return to the station for another uniform. His was almost burned off, but he escaped without injury.

AETNA POWDER BLOW-UP LAID TO ELECTRICIANS

Foreman and Assistant, Both Germans, Held for Explosion Which Killed Five Men.

Special to The New York Times.

EMPORIUM, Penn., Oct. 16.—Two arrests were made here today as a result of the explosion at the Aetna Powder Company's plant about three weeks ago, in which five lives were lost, one man seriously injured, and 285,000 pounds of smokeless powder, ready for shipment to Europe, were destroyed.

Lewis Subiskie, chief electrician, and A. Fronchotz, his assistant, were arrested by Sheriff J. G. Judd of Cameron County. The State Constabulary had worked up the case against the men. The men are alleged to have set off the powder explosion by the use of electricity. Both prisoners are of German descent and are supposed to have been induced by German emissaries to blow up the plant.

Subiskie and Fronchotz were taken to the Ridgeway Jail and will have a hearing Monday. Other arrests are to follow.

Four Die in Benzol Explosion.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Oct. 16.—Four men were killed and four injured tonight in an explosion in the new by-product plant of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company at Fairfield. The dead are J. L. Donnelly, L. J. Wright, Ferry Poor, and a man named Bernhart.

The explosion occurred in a valve of a 42-inch gas main in the pump house, which forces the product into the benzol plant adjoining. The gas ignited shooting the flames through the building.

EMINENT CITIZENS JOIN PATRIOT BAND

SEEKING THE FOREIGN-BORN

LABOR PEACE ONE OBJECT

Gen. Wood, Cardinal Gibbons, Edison, Schiff, and John Mitchell Among the Members.

A campaign with three slogans, "America First," "The English Language First," and "Efficiency," is beginning under the direction of the National Americanization Committee, a new oranization with offices at 20 West Thirty-fourth Street, and a membership including eminent men and women.

Among the workers of the committee are persons of such widely separated environments as Mary Antin, Thomas A. Edison, Mrs. Vincent Astor, Cardinal Gibbons, John Mitchell, Jacob H. Schiff, and General Leonard Wood; and its object has been summarized in the phrase, "internal preparedness." The preparedness aimed at is not only for war, but for peace, and the committee aims to promote the process of welding the immigrants who come in from all over Europe into a single nation.

The campaign was started formally Friday night at a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor, where the beginnings of the work were recounted by the leaders. The committee wants to get the immigrants assimilated, naturalized, and educated. One of its principal aims is to improve the labor situation—to promote the conservation of the labor supply and prevent labor wars, and to make the workmen who are doing the manual labor of the country realize that they are part of the country with duties, privileges, and responsibilities.

Training Camps for Citizens.

Citizens' training camps are one means by which the committee hopes to forward its work—training camps where native Americans and foreign-born Americans work together for a common ideal; and what is wanted is the effect of the camps on the spirit rather than on the actual military preparation of the men who take part in them.

Robert Bacon, one of the leaders in the Plattsburg camp and one of the speakers at the dinner, told the committee and a few guests that the flap tent was a great Americanizing institution. Some of the other weapons which are to be used in the campaign are night schools; posters urging the America First ideal, which are to be put up in post offices; committees to take hold of newly naturalized citizens and help them retain their patriotic interest in their new country, and slips promoting the ideals of the committee which are to be given to workmen in their pay envelopes.

The Americanization Committee announces its intention to co-operate with schools, colleges, Government agencies, and the foreign-language newspapers. Uniform laws are to be worked for which will reach a uniform interpretation of the meaning of American citizenship.

Frank Trumbull, Chairman of the committee, who is a Director of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, presided at the meeting. Miss Frances A. Kellor, Vice Chairman, told how the work had begun with a study of conditions among immigrant workmen. The industries particularly studied were those relating to national defense—munitions plants, railroads, mines, quarries, and other lines of work where the presence of unassimilated foreigners in time of war might be a national danger.

Preparedness here is preparedness for peace also, for it is has been found that with increase in the proportion of citizens among the workingmen there has been an increase in patriotism, a decrease in sabotage and violence.

Eminent Men Describe Work.

Dr. P. P. Claxton, Federal Commissioner of Education, told of the spreading of the America-first posters, which indicate the night school as the first aid to the immigrant, and of the work which the Bureau of Education is doing to form civic classes. State Commissioner of Education John H. Finley told of the work done to reduce illiteracy among immigrants in New York; Commissioner of Immigration Frederic C. Howe pleaded for support of the present campaign to increase interest in the city's night schools and the reception arranged by the Mayor's committee for new voters, which is to be held in the City College Stadium on Oct. 29. Presidents Arthur T. Hadley of Yale and Benjamin Ide Wheeler of the University of California spoke in support of the committee's work, and President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia sent a letter announcing that a course of training for adult immigrants in preparation for naturalization was being added to that institution's extension department.

John Fahey, President of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, told of the realization among business men of the importance of Americanizing the workmen.

What one city had done was related by Charles B. Warren, President of the Detroit Board of Commerce, which this Fall in connection with the work of the National Americanization Committee has begun work to promote the "English language first" campaign in a city 75 per cent. of whose residents are foreign-born or of foreign parentage. One result of this campaign was an increase of 153 per cent. in the registration of night schools.

An art contest on the subject of "The Immigrant in America" is being conducted by the committee with the cooperation of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. Prizes totaling $1,100 have been offered and an exhibit of the works submitted is to be sent through the principal cities of the country.

Mrs. Stotesbury Aiding.

The dinner at the Astor home was the first of a series through which the movement is to gain a nation-wide char-

Terror Killed Nine During Zeppelin Raid; Others Blown to Pieces as They Slept

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The medical evidence at the inquest held today in the cases of eighteen persons who died in the London area as a result of the Zeppelin raid of Wednesday night disclosed that the death of half of them, the majority of whom were women, was due to heart failure or shock resulting from the terrifying effect of the exploding bombs and the gunfire.

One victim was an elderly woman who had sought refuge in her husband's arms. He had said to her: "Never mind; we will die together if the worst happens." He was not hurt.

Among those who died from injuries was a young man, who was found sitting against a wall, his severed arm lying loose in his sleeve. To those who came to his assistance he said: "I am still sticking to it."

In a house which was struck by one bomb and damaged by two others three boys who were sleeping in the same bed were killed. A young man who ran out of a house in the neighborhood of which bombs were falling received a mortal wound, but the other occupants, who remained behind to dress, escaped unharmed.

A father, mother, and daughter were found dead under the wreckage of a small villa on which a bomb fell. A dressmaker's assistant was found dead in a cellar in which she had taken refuge on the first alarm.

In nine cases of death from bodily injury a verdict was returned that the deaths had been caused by bombs thrown from an enemy airship, the Coroner having directed the jury not to adopt what he described as "the foolish precedent" of bringing in a verdict of wilful murder against the German Emperor.

The King and Queen this afternoon visited the civilians at Charing Cross Hospital who were injured in the raid.

SUFFRAGE DEFEAT IS SEEN IN JERSEY

Women Hope, While the County Leaders Say Their Cause Will Lose on Tuesday.

NUGENT'S FIGHT BIG FACTOR

Mrs. Feickert Says Survey Shows Amendment Will Win by Majority of 25,000.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 16.—Except for eleventh-hour skirmishes, the battle waged by the women of New Jersey to win the ballot came to an end tonight. As the campaign closes predictions in political quarters generally point to defeat for the woman suffrage cause at the special election on Tuesday.

Inquiries made on behalf of THE NEW YORK TIMES of Democratic and Republican County Chairmen in the twenty-one counties of this State, with a view of ascertaining their view as to the outcome of the special election in their counties, bear out the general impressions which prevail at the headquarters of the Democratic and Republican State Committees in this city. Twenty-five of the forty-two county Chairmen responded to the request for their views on the prospect. Of their replies, which are printed elsewhere in this issue of THE TIMES, only four—those from the County Chairmen in Cape May and Passaic Counties—forecast victory for the Constitutional amendment which would give women in this State the right to vote.

Suffragists Are Hopeful.

The leaders of the "Votes for Women" movement, despite the pessimistic forecast of the politicians, are taking a hopeful view of the situation. Mrs. Mina C. Van Winkle, President of the Woman's Political Union of New Jersey, which has made a militant and somewhat spectacular fight in the populous centres of this State, and Mrs. Minnie Reynolds, Executive Secretary of the organization, both of whom have had a hand in directing the forces contending for equal suffrage, were not willing to make any detailed forecast as to the outcome.

"We have made a good fight and we think an effective one," said Mrs. Van Winkle. "If we have an honest election and an honest count of the vote, and if underground influences that we are not in a position to meet do not get in their work on Tuesday, we should win."

Mrs. E. F. Feickert of Plainfield, President of the New Jersey Woman Suffrage Association, which is the elder of the two suffragist organizations in this State, predicted victory for the equal suffrage cause by 25,000.

"This forecast is based on a house-to-house canvass, which has covered the entire State and which comprises both urban and rural localities. In the cities we have found an average of seven men who are for us to one against us and three who tell us they have not decided how to vote. In the country districts we find eight men with us to one against us and three who have not made up their minds on the subject."

"Antis" Sure Suffrage Will Lose.

Mrs. Edward Yarde Breese of this city, President of the New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, said this evening that the "antis" were certain of carrying thirteen of the twenty-one counties in the State, namely, Atlantic, Essex, Sussex, Middlesex, Hunterdon, Camden, Ocean, Somerset, Mercer, Morris, Salem, Union and Warren. The counties of Burlington, Cape May, Gloucester, Monmouth, Hudson, Bergen, Cumberland and Passaic she put down as doubtful. Mrs. Breese said she did not concede that any one of these counties could be counted upon as safe suffrage battleground.

"The sentiment in opposition to woman suffrage is growing as the campaign closes," said Mrs. Breese. "It is very strong in the rural counties. In two localities not far from this city, out of fifty households canvassed we found forty-eight opposed to woman suffrage."

The Men's League of the New Jersey Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage, which is composed very largely of business men of prominence, on the strength of an investigation made by its agents throughout the State, tonight claimed that the woman suffrage amendment would be defeated by a telling majority. Figures were given for some of the larger and populous counties. In Essex County, regarding which it is generally said that "as Essex goes, so goes the State," a majority of 10,000 against woman suffrage was claimed. An equal majority in Hudson County, another telling locality in New Jersey elections, and a majority of 7,500 in Camden County at the opposite end of the State, entered into the unofficial forecast that came from the Men's League last night.

Nugent Will Swing Essex.

The prediction of defeat for the suffrage amendment in Essex County, where James R. Nugent, the resourceful Democratic boss, is conducting a vigorous campaign against the enfranchisement of women from his Newark headquarters, is not seriously disputed by the leaders in the suffrage movement. The claim of anti-suffrage majorities in Hudson and Camden is disputed not only by the suffragists, but by political observers in those localities, and in the case of Camden by both the Republican and Democratic County Chairmen. Should these three counties be counted with such large majorities in the anti-suffrage column, it would settle the matter beyond a doubt.

It would spell defeat for the women's cause. The rural counties in southern New Jersey, where sand dunes and pine trees abound, but votes are rare, could not possibly roll up any kind of majorities to offset those claimed for Es-

3 KILLED, 4 HURT IN AN AUTO CRASH

GO THROUGH WIND SHIELD

Passengers in Crowded Motor Are Thrown Against Structure—Chauffeur Lost Control of Car.

An automobile in which eight men were crowded, some seated on the laps of others, sped up Boston Road beneath the elevated section of the subway near Bryant Avenue, the Bronx, shortly before 1 o'clock this morning. The crew of an emergency wagon of the Union Railway Company saw the flying car as it neared the 177th Street Station of the subway and swung wide to avoid a collision.

The chauffeur of the touring car did the same, and the railway men noticed that he seemed unable to straighten out his car again. It wobbled back and forth under the elevated structure threatening each instant to strike a pillar, and presently it did so, with a crash which brought folk running from blocks around.

It was found that these men had been killed outright:

KELLNER, JACOB, age and address unknown; skull crushed.
TERRISE, ANTHONY, 409 West Thirty-ninth Street; crushed.
WICKER, WILLIAM, 409 West Thirty-ninth Street; chest caved in.

These four were injured:

PENTLIANO, ALBERT, 446 West Thirty-ninth Street; shock.
LOZARTO, FRANK, 542 West Forty-sixth Street; contusions of face.
MARTICELLI, CORNELIUS, 441 West Forty-first Street; cuts on face and sprained left hand.
SCHACK, CHARLES, 416 West Thirty-ninth Street; general contusions.

The appearance of the wrecked car substantiated the statements of the railroad men as to the speed it was making. The front right seat was torn away. Both wheels on the left side were torn off. The tonneau was smashed into kindling. There were pieces of wood and metal, and bits of shattered glass for many feet about the wreck.

The car had plunged into the pillar almost head on, and the three men who were killed were flung through the wind shield. Kellner crashed against the pillar and Wicker and Terrise landed on the pavement, where they died instantly.

One man seems to have escaped, although the police could not learn who he was. However, Marticelli said that there had been a chauffeur whom he did not know, and that this man had been unhurt and had made off.

Marticelli, though able to talk, was so dazed that he could do no more than give his own and the names and addresses of the others. He could not tell where the party had started nor where it was going, and he, with the others, was hurried off to Fordham Hospital by Dr. Schwenk. None of the injured was seriously hurt, but, according to the police, all had spent such a lively evening that they could give no account of it.

Schack recovered sufficiently to talk later and said the seven men were invited by a strange chauffeur to take a ride to a Bronx cabaret. They left a saloon at Thirty-ninth Street and Ninth Avenue at 10:30 o'clock last night and went north on First Avenue into the Bronx. When the automobile hit the pillar the chauffeur jumped to his feet and ran away.

Coroner Flynn ordered a general alarm sent out for the chauffeur.

From the license plate the police learned the car was owned by Michael J. Callahan, a steam heating contractor living at 206 West Fifty-first Street. According to the police he said he did not give permission to any one to take the automobile from the garage. He left it in charge of John Kennedy, who is said to have been at the wheel of the car.

PARDONS BOARD DECIDES HILLSTROM MUST DIE

Refuses His Plea for Commutation and Terminates Reprieve—Will Be Resentenced.

SALT LAKE, Oct. 16.—The State Board of Pardons by unanimous vote tonight adopted a resolution denying commutation of sentence to Joseph Hillstrom, convicted of the murder of J. G. Morrison and Morrison's son in Salt Lake Jan. 10, 1914, and terminating the reprieve granted Hillstrom at the request of President Wilson on Sept. 30.

Hillstrom, who is known as the "Hobo Poet," was sentenced to be hanged Oct. 1, and was reprieved to give W. F. A. Ekegren, the Swedish Minister, an opportunity to present new facts or reasons why sentence should be commuted. Hillstrom refused to appear and his attorney said he had no additional evidence or reasons to present.

Hillstrom will be taken before the District Court next week to be resentenced to death.

Bulgarian Blockade Declared by Allies; All Aegean Ports Mined Against Attack

LONDON, Oct. 16.—A blockade of the Bulgarian coast in the Aegean Sea by Entente allied warships of the Eastern Mediterranean Squadron was put into effect today, according to this announcement made by the Official Press Bureau:

"The Vice Admiral commanding the Eastern Mediterranean Squadron of the allied fleets has declared a blockade of the Bulgarian coast in the Aegean Sea commencing from 6 A. M. on the 16th inst.

"Forty-eight hours' grace for the moment of the commencement of the blockade has been assigned for the departure of neutral vessels from the blockaded area."

An Athens dispatch says:

"Lighthouses on the Bulgarian coast have been extinguished. Entrance to the port of Dedeaghatch, Bulgaria's principal point on the Aegean Sea, has been forbidden except in the daytime, when a pilot is required. All Bulgarian ports are said to have been mined."

The strip of Bulgarian coast bordering the Aegean Sea, against which warships of the Anglo-French Eastern Mediterranean Squadron have established a blockade, runs from Saritchahan, Greece, to Enos, European Turkey, a distance of about eighty miles. It consists of territory obtained from Turkey as a result of the Balkan wars. The chief seaports along the coast are Dedeaghatch, Porto Lagos, Maronia, and Mecri. Running parallel with the shore line at a distance of five to ten miles is the Saloniki-Constantinople railroad.

Five German Transports Are Sunk in the Baltic By British Submarines; Another Driven Ashore

PETROGRAD, Oct. 16, (via London.)—British submarines, operating in the Baltic Sea, have sunk five German transports and forced another ashore, according to a Russian official statement given out tonight.

This success of British underseas craft is a climax of their recent operations in the Baltic Sea whereby they have stopped practically all traffic between Sweden and Germany, and incidentally hampered, for the moment at least, the manufacture of munitions in the latter country by preventing the importation of iron ore.

The latest exploit of the British submarines, previous to the sinking of the five transports, was the destruction late last week of a German destroyer and a torpedo boat in two separate engagements near the entrance to the Baltic.

POINTS TO ALLIES' CHANCE IN BALKANS

CAMPAIGN'S ISSUE VITAL

With Teutons Blocked Elsewhere, Editor Sees Possibility of a Decisive Blow.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 17.—J. L. Garvin writes in today's Observer:

"We know now that it must be, above all, Great Britain's work in the Balkans. We know equally well that the Balkans in the infinitely fateful weeks before us will either be the grave of German ambition or the grave of British hopes. If we fail in the Near East there can be no thorough victory over the Central Empires. We may and shall fight them to a standstill, but we shall not achieve the total overthrow essential to a drastic settlement, enduring peace, and our own future safety.

"The conditions are such that if only we are strong and prompt enough we can wrest good out of evil and turn the Balkan struggle entirely and fatally to German disadvantage. The enemy is at present blocked in France, blocked on the Italian frontier, blocked in Russia. In all three directions the Germans have reached their limit. If they are blocked in the Balkans during the next few weeks and brought visibly to their limit in that direction also, the Central Empires, with known and limited numbers and coming to their last reserves, will have stretched out their fighting line to its longest and thinnest. If they are but held on that line to begin with, it can more certainly be ruptured at its weakest point. They will then be crushed, in on all fronts in due course by the accumulating strength of the Allies' forces, employed with increasing superiority of numbers on a combined offensive working from West, East, and South.

The Teutons' Last Card.

"The enemy in the Balkans is playing his last card. The Allies in France and Belgium can in any case keep their front impregnable. Under the new conditions they can postpone their western offensive if they choose, so as to make it more crushing at a later stage.

"It suits General Joffre that the Germans in pursuit of the Balkan adventure should either be compelled positively to reduce their strength between the North Sea and the Vosges or should have the utmost difficulty in supplying the reinforcements required to keep up to a safe level their strength against the Franco-British armies. These are just the conditions required to accelerate the coming of the final situation, when General Joffre will have it in his grasp to win the crowning victory of the European war.

"On the east Russia is already relieved to a remarkable degree by the transfer to the Balkan frontier of the armies under Mackensen, Gallwitz, and Eichhorn. Our Russian allies have a breathing space. The Czar's armies in the next stage a few months hence could swing their offensive with greater effect against an enemy weakened on the eastern front by the diversion of troops and reinforcements of guns and munitions toward the Danube.

First Thing Is to Save Serbia.

"The first thing is to save Serbia; stop the German advance, and deprive the Bulgarians of their hopes in Macedonia. Britain and France, but Britain above all, must throw rapidly into the Balkans enough troops to neutralize

French Shell Sablons Station—Germans Report Repulsing the British Near Loos.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The recapture by the French of the summit of Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, so often taken and retaken in the stubborn fighting in the Vosges, is the outstanding feature of today's official reports. Paris also announces the repulse of German attacks near Souchez and the bombardment from aeroplanes of one of the railway stations of Metz.

The German official report claims additional gains at Hartmanns-Weilerkopf, but its apparent contradiction of the French statement may be explained by the fact that it was issued several hours earlier. It also chronicles the repulse of a British attack near Vermelles, in Artois, and the capture of 600 French prisoners in Champagne.

German Souchez Attacks Fail.

Following is the official communication issued by the French War Office tonight:

In Artois we completely repulsed a new German attack in the Bois en Hache, and on the slope west of the valley of the Souchez brook.

The fighting from trench to trench, supported by cannonading on both sides, has continued to the south of the Somme, in the region of Lihons, and Quesnoy en Santerre.

The enemy renewed his bombardment of the regions behind our Champagne front, employing shells causing irritation of the eyes. Our artillery replied against the enemy batteries and trenches.

A struggle with bombs and grenades has occurred in the Argonne, to the north of Houyette, as well as at Vauquois.

In the Vosges a vigorous counter-attack has enabled us to recapture all our positions on the summit of Hartmannsweilerkopf and to take in addition a small fort previously occupied by the enemy. We took about 100 prisoners.

A group of aeroplanes today bombarded the Sablons station at Metz. A number of explosions were observed to have taken place around the station and a moving train, which was compelled to stop. A switching post was blown up.

The French Afternoon Report.

The text of the French afternoon communication reads:

We repulsed last night in Lorraine several counterattacks against the trenches which we occupied yesterday to the north of Reillon. In the course of these engagements we took 100 prisoners.

In the Vosges the enemy undertook, shortly after midnight, an attack in force between the Linge and the Schratzmannele. This was preceded by a severe bombardment and accompanied by a curtain of fire directed against our second lines and our communicating trenches. This attack was completely repulsed by us.

There has been nothing to report from the remainder of the front since the issuing of the communication of last night.

The official Belgian communication reads:

The night and morning were calm. This afternoon a feeble cannonade on both sides occurred to the south of Nieuport, in the neighborhood of Dix-

ALLIES DECLARE BLOCKADE

Russia Holds That State of War with Bulgaria Exists, but Delays Formal Declaration.

An Athens dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company, apparently of Friday's date, says:

"The railway administration at Saloniki was ordered today to prepare seven trains for the transport of Allied troops to Gievgeli. They will start tomorrow."

Fierce fighting in the region of Doiran, near the Greek frontier, between the Serbians and Bulgarians, who are trying to cut the main Serbian railway outlet, has taken a turn in favor of the Serbs, according to an Athens dispatch received by the Exchange Telegraph Company by way of Zurich.

A Saloniki dispatch received by way of Paris says:

"Heavy cannonading is reported around Doiran, southeastern Serbia. The Serbians are said to have forced the Bulgarians to retire. The Serbians are advancing from Scuvovo in the direction of Strumitza, which they claim they expect to take shortly."

An Athens dispatch dated Saturday says:

"Forty thousand Bulgarian troops, with artillery, are reported to have begun an attack on the Vardav Bridge, between Valandovo, on the railroad running from Saloniki into Serbia, and Hovdovo. The point of attack is about twenty miles north of the Greek border. The Bulgarians apparently are attempting to cut railway communication and prevent the Entente Allies from forwarding troops and supplies for the assistance of the Serbians."

An Athens dispatch to the Milan Secolo states that 50,000 Bulgarians attacked the Serbians on Oct. 14 in the Valadovo region close to the Greek frontier and that desperate fighting is now proceeding.

From Sofia under date of Oct. 14 comes the following:

"Bulgarian general offensive began this morning, the entire line being very active. According to reports brought in by an aviator at noon, the Bulgarian troops had already penetrated Serbian territory at some places a distance of about six miles."

The Bulgarians are now said to have forced the frontier ridges at several points between Negotin and Strumika.

Today's official German announcement on the Balkans says:

The army group of Field Marshal von Mackensen is further progressing. We stormed Vranova Mountain south of Semendria, and the village of Smoljiano, east of Pozarevac, (about twelve miles from the border.)

After fighting, Bulgarian troops forced passes over the frontier range of hills at several points between Negotin and Strumika. The eastern forts of Zajecar have been taken.

The following official statement was given out by the Austrian War Office last night:

Austro-Hungarian troops, pursuing the Serbians southeast of Belgrade, have reached the Avala fortifications (about nine miles from Belgrade) and captured strongly intrenched positions south of Vinca.

Teuton Losses Now Put at 85,000.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—Austro-German losses in the campaign against Serbia up to Thursday evening, Oct. 14, were estimated at 25,000 officers and men killed and 60,000 wounded, according to a dispatch received today by the Temps from Nish, the Serbian capital. The Serbian army operating in the north, the message adds, also sustained heavy losses.

The Nish dispatch, which is timed 11 o'clock Thursday evening, says:

"All Austro-German attacks on the Obrenovatz-Belgrade - Semendria front have been repulsed, the enemy sustaining serious losses. The German army which attempted to turn the right wing of the Serbians at Semendria was driven back into the marsh of Godomine, situated on the right bank of the Danube near the fortress of Semendria. A Bavarian battalion was thrown into the swamp. Along this entire front it was quiet today.

"The pressure of German troops in the vicinity of Pozarevac continues. Enemy reinforcements in large number are reported to be coming from the north.

"The Austro-German losses up to this evening are estimated at 25,000 killed and 60,000 wounded. The Serbian army operating in the north also sustained heavy losses.

"Nish and other Serbian cities are preparing solemn receptions for the Anglo-French troops."

RUSSIA HOLDS HERSELF AT WAR WITH BULGARS

But Refrains from a Formal Declaration — Ferdinand Dismisses Minister.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 16, (via London.)—Russia regards herself in a state of war with Bulgaria from the moment the latter country attacked Serbia, according to a statement issued today by the Foreign Office here.

The formal declaration of war is awaiting the conclusion of an exchange of telegrams between Russia and her allies.

SOFIA, Oct. 16, (via London.)—According to a semi-official Bulgarian announcement M. Majaroff, who was Bulgarian Minister to Russia up to the diplomatic break between the two countries, has been dismissed from the diplomatic service.

The dismissal, it is stated, is because of his reported declarations criticising the actions of his Government, recently published in the Russian press.

BULGARIA ADDS DENIAL.

Assures Greece No Treaty with Germany Against Her Exists.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 17.—An Athens dispatch to The Exchange Telegraph Company says:

"Following the German denial, the Bulgarian Minister at Athens has been directed by his Government to deny the existence of a treaty between Germany and Bulgaria relative to Greek territories."

SAYS ALLIED ENVOYS ARE LEAVING ATHENS

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 16, (via London.)—According to a dispatch from Athens to the Cologne Gazette, the Ministers of Russia and Italy are preparing to leave Greece. The families of the diplomats, the message adds, probably will leave the Greek capital today on a warship, bound for Italy.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The report from a German source that the Allies' Ministers are leaving Athens is scouted here, and it is without any confirmation.

SUGGESTS BLOCKADING GREECE

London Morning Post Demands That She Take Sides in War.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Morning Post says editorially:

"These are desperate times and it is absolutely necessary for us to know who are our friends and who our enemies. It is not feasible to send an army through Greece which promised nothing more than to remain neutral, since this promise also might be broken, but what is feasible is that Greece should be asked to declare either for us or against us. If she refuses to fight on our side then she is in fact against us and if that case it remains for the navies of the Entente powers to treat Greece as an enemy.

"The blockade of the Greek coasts and the seizure of all Greek shipping and all Greek islands is the logical reply to the refusal of Greece to assist Serbia."

BULGARIA FAVORS GREECE.

Allows Export of Corn on the Latter's Request.

BERLIN, Oct. 16, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News Agency says today:

"According to the Cologne Gazette, the Greek Government has asked the Bulgarian Government to permit the export of Bulgarian corn to Greece, and the request has been granted."

REFUGEES TAX GREECE.

Scarcity of Food Beginning to be Seriously Felt.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Scarcity of food and the arrival of great numbers of Serbian refugees have resulted in pitiable conditions in Greek Macedonia, says a dispatch received by Reuter's Telegram Company today from Athens. As the Serbian Government is urging all the women and children in Serbian Macedonia to emigrate, even greater numbers are expected, and it seems impossible at present to make provision for these.

The Greek Government, the message says, already is caring for hundreds of thousands of refugees from Turkey, and, embarrassed by a high mobilization expenditure, it is looking for foreign assistance to prevent threatening famine and disease.

VENIZELOS TRUSTS IN ALLIES.

More Deeply Convinced Than Ever of Their Triumph, He Says.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—Earnest hope for the success of the Allies was expressed by former Premier Venizelos of Greece when asked by the Athens correspondent of the Matin to express his opinion of the refusal of the new Greek Government to send an army to the assistance of Serbia.

"It was because I foresaw the new Government would take this attitude that I made the speech I did in the Chamber on the 13th," he said. "I have nothing to add to it, but none hopes more ardently than I for an early and decisive success for the Allies. I am more deeply convinced today than I was yesterday of their final triumph."

Striving to Bring Rumania to Side of Serbia.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Replying to a telegram from the Moscow Slav Committee, expressing the hope that Rumania speedily would come to the aid of Serbia, Take Jonescu, ex-Minister of the Interior of Rumania, according to a dispatch from Petrograd to Reuter's Telegram Company, telegraphed:

"The interests of Rumania henceforth will be indissolubly bound to the interests of Russia. Like you, I am longing and striving for Rumanian aid

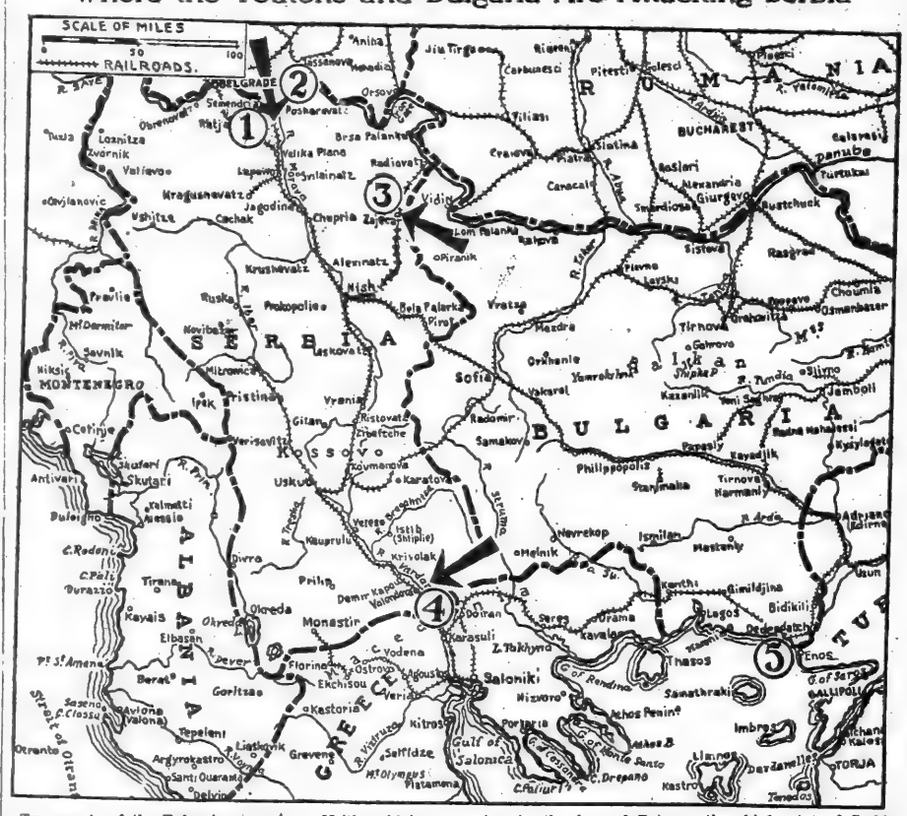
Where the Teutons and Bulgaria Are Attacking Serbia



Two points of the Bulgarian invasion of Serbia have prominence in the dispatches this morning—the attempt to gain possession of the Saloniki-Nish Railway, twenty miles north of the Greek border, (4,) and over which the Franco-English reinforcements to Serbia are passing, and the attack upon Zajecar (3) on the Nish-Radonyuvac Railway, which runs along the valley of the Timok River just west of the Serb-Bulgarian boundary.

Forty-two miles due north from Saloniki the Bulgarian territory makes a salient into new Serbia, the western extremity of which is only five miles east of the Vardar River, through whose valley the Saloniki-Nish Railway ascends as far as Uskub. From Valandova and Hovdona run highways which pierce the railway at points twenty miles apart, and just south of Demir-Kapu—the Iron Gate.

Neither highway, owing to the low level of the land up to the Iron Gate—350 feet altitude—presents any military difficulties. The difficulties come from the northeast—from the Despoto Dagh range, through whose passes the Bulgars can only slowly assemble for concentration east of the railway.

As to the northern attack, there is a highway leading west from Zajecar to Paracin, twelve miles north of Stolac, on the Belgrade-Nish division of the Orient Express Line to Constantinople, and just where the valley of the Morava broadens to the low approaches to Nish forty-five mile to the south.

At Vrazogrnac, five miles north of Zajecar, a highway leads north and a little west via Tzrnaika to Dolni Milanovac on the Danube. Another highway runs almost parallel to the Bulgarian and Rumanian frontiers to the Danube opposite the Rumanian town of Turnu-Severin.

Berlin dispatches allege that the Germans have proceeded south on the Tzrnaika, highway to within 25 or 80 miles of Zajecar, the chief point of Serbian defense in this region, evidently with the idea of forming a junction with the Bulgar forces as soon as possible.

Zajecar is the headquarters of the Timok Division of the Serbian Army and is defended by five modern forts on altitudes of 3,000 or 4,000 feet, covering the railway and the highways. Three of these forts face Bulgaria.

The Tzrnaika highway, through which the Germans are advancing, is difficult and narrow, running through gorges from 1,500 to 3,250 feet deep for nearly twenty miles south of Tzrnaika. The latter is beyond the junction of two Bulgarian columns opening north and is defended by batteries ranged on the hills behind the town, which command both the highway and the streams.

The Berlin report shows that Mackensen is attacking the heights south of Semendria (1) and to the east of Posarevac (2).

The blockade declared by the Allies closes Bulgaria's ports on the Aegean, the chief of which is Dedeaghatch (5).

POWERFUL DEFENSES CHECK THE TEUTONS

Four Tremendously Strong Lines Held by Serbians South of Belgrade.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—A cable from its Berlin correspondent to The Daily News says:

"The German and Austrian forces continue battering their way into Serbia, and the gateways to the strategically important Morava Valley are now in German hands. The Serbians are making a desperate resistance, and reports of the battles fought show that these are bloody, with but few prisoners taken. Instead of retreating at the first sign of the enemy, the Serbians fight hand to hand until crushed by overwhelming numbers. They seem to feel that the outcome of the whole war depends upon their resistance. The Serbians had intrenched themselves thoroughly, and their defense held wonderfully well on the river fronts, but the heavy artillery of the Germanic forces made it impossible for their opponents to hold Belgrade, Semendria, and Orsovatz.

"A great battle is now raging in the hills south of Belgrade. Here the Serbians under British plans had built four strong defensive lines which were almost forts. The first line was on the heights just at the south edge of the city, 1,300 feet above the streets of the old capital and reaching from Topcider to Vekivrazar. This line was made almost impregnable by trenches, mine fields and thirty-foot barbed wire entanglements. In the attacks on the first and second lines the howitzers, Krupp mortars, and thirty-centimeter (ten-inch) Austrian Skoda guns did terrible execution. The third line was a stronger obstacle. It ran from Strzava to Gunak Ekmeluk and Eridno. This line was first attacked by the long range Austrian 10.4 centimeter (four-inch) guns, which fired from the Semlin forts across the city of Belgrade, making it possible for the Germans and Austrians again to drive out the Serbians into their fourth line extending from Avala Mountain to Velik."

KING EXHORTS BULGARS.

Blames Serbia for the War—Stern Measures of Repression.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—A copy of the manifesto of King Ferdinand to the Bulgarians, portions of which were forwarded from Sofia recently by telegraph, reached London today. The manifesto implies Bulgaria has no quarrel with the entente powers. It explains that they, like Germany, were prepared to give Bulgaria the greater part of Macedonia.

"Our treacherous neighbor, Serbia, alone remained inflexible in the face of the advice of her friends and allies," the manifesto continues. "Far from listening to their counsels, Serbia, in animosity, stupidly attacked our territory, and our brave troops have been forced to fight for the defense of their own soil."

In conclusion King Ferdinand says: "The European war is nearing a close. The victorious army of the Central Empires in Serbia are advancing rapidly. I command our valiant army to drive the enemy from the limits of our kingdom and crush this felon neighbor. We shall fight the Serbs at the same time as the brave armies of the Central Empires."

SOFIA, Oct. 14, (via London, Oct. 16.)—The public received without excitement the King's manifesto declaring a state of war with Serbia. The crowds around the billboards read the document calmly, but the passage: "We will advance, (fight?) simultaneously with the victorious armies of the Central Powers" aroused some enthusiasm.

MILAN, Oct. 15 (via Paris, Oct. 16).—The Bulgarian Government has been obliged to resort to stern measures of repression as the result of unrest among the people, says a dispatch to the Secolo from Sofia by way of Bucharest. Many officers of pro-Russian sentiments have been retired from the army, and it is asserted that reprisals are beginning against subjects of the Quadruple Entente nations.

ITALY MAY JOIN LATER.

Her Warships Already with the Allies in the Aegean.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Oct. 16.—The newspapers are full of comments and discussions about the attitude of Italy in the Balkan situation. Notwithstanding the severe censorship, what leaks out seems an apprehension whether Italy is or is not in real accord with the other Allies.

It is known, however, that the understanding among England, France, Russia, and Italy is perfect, so that the failure of Italy to send troops to Saloniki as due to military considerations would be appreciated in Paris, London, and Petrograd as much as in Rome. Besides, it is plainly understood that Italian troops may be sent later, if necessary, while Italian ships will co-operate with those of the other Allies in the Aegean Sea.

DOCTORS IN BELGRADE SAFE.

Have Now Survived Three Bombardments of the Serbian Capital.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The State Department today received a dispatch from Ambassador Penfield at Vienna forwarding a telegram to him from Dr. Edward W. Ryan, in charge of the American contingent of the Red Cross at Belgrade.

"This little band, sent out early in the war and consisting of three doctors and eleven nurses, has now survived three bombardments of the Serbian capital, the first by the Austrians, the second by the Serbians when they regained the place, and the latest in the drive by the Teuton forces. Dr. Ryan's telegram was as follows:

"We are still in Belgrade working. All well. Notify families of personnel."

GOOD FEELING IN SALONIKI.

French and Greek Troops Enforce Military Law There.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—An Athens dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company says that tourists arriving from Saloniki report great activity there, with friendly relations prevailing between the foreign contingents and the Greeks.

The troops, adds the dispatch, came in excellent spirits and eager to proceed up country. The town is under military law and patrolled by mixed details of French and Greek troops.

The German steamer Athena, which had been at Saloniki since the outbreak of the war, sailed recently, convoyed by a Greek destroyer, for Piraeus, which is no longer considered a neutral port.

GERMANS GET COTTON CARGO.

Hint That Norwegian Steamer Purposely Sought Capture.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 16.—The Norwegian steamship Eir, with cotton bound from Bergen, Norway, for Copenhagen, was captured today by a German warship in the Cattegat, the arm of the North Sea, between Sweden and Jutland.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 16.—The Norwegian steamship Eir left Gothenburg, Sweden, with 6,000 bales of cotton ostensibly for Copenhagen, but got on a wrong course "through fog" and was "captured" by a German torpedo boat, a telegram to the Politiken from Malmo asserts. Captain Bredins, who was taken aboard the Eir for the alleged purpose of piloting the vessel, the message adds, turns out not to possess a pilot license, and hence there probably will be criminal proceedings. He has been landed at Helsingborg, Sweden, by the German warship.

COMMONS MAY DISCUSS GALLIPOLI CAMPAIGN

LONDON, Oct. 16.—On the reassembling of the House of Commons on Tuesday, Robert L. Outhwaite, Liberal Member of Parliament for Hanley, and a native of Australasia, will ask Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whether the Russian Government still attaches the same importance to the Dardanelles operations as it did when the British Ambassador in Petrograd said that the operations had been undertaken at Russia's request for the purpose of drawing a Turkish force from the Caucasus.

The question is designed to show whether Lord Milner's suggestion in the House of Lords on Thursday that the Gallipoli campaign be abandoned finds any official support. No evidence of any such support is yet apparent.

Lord Milner's suggestion is causing anxiety in Australia, according to a Sydney message received by the Evening News.

The Sydney Telegraph says that Lord Milner's declaration opens a question regarding which it is difficult to think calmly. It goes on:

"The idea that so great and bold an enterprise, upon which such courage and so many invaluable lives have been spent, should be abandoned at the first opportunity as impossible from the outset, is enough to make the men killed in the Anzac landing turn in their graves.

"At the same time the fact remains that they would be the first to take the common-sense view which all of us must take—that of the Allies' military leaders come to the decision that the Gallipoli Peninsula should be abandoned, then abandoned it must be. Such a decision would be evidence of gross incompetence somewhere, for which hardly any punishment would be too great."

OBSERVER TELLS OF FAILURE.

Ashmead-Bartlett Says Every Blunder Was Committed at Strait.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 17.—An interesting contribution to the controversy regarding the abandonment of the Gallipoli expedition is made by the correspondent Ashmead-Bartlett, who has just returned from the Dardanelles. In an interview in The Sunday Times he says:

"One of the chief difficulties in the fighting there has been that neither the Colonials nor the British bear such a fanatical hatred against the Turks as they do against the Germans, and the curious thing is that these feelings are reciprocated. But the Turk is a true patriot and will not surrender the last strip of Europe left to him, especially Constantinople, without a grim struggle.

"The fighting has been of the most desperate character and the results are highly unfavorable to us. We have committed every conceivable blunder in our methods of attempting to carry out the expedition.

"I hear a great deal of talk about our loss of prestige in the Near East if we fail to carry the enterprise to a successful conclusion. Personally I take the opposite view. Even if our expedition stops today, our prestige will not suffer because of the splendid courage and endurance of our soldiers. The time has come for us seriously to reconsider our position."

America to Act for Great Britain.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, notified Secretary Lansing today that a state of war exists between Great Britain and Bulgaria. At Great Britain's request British interests in Bulgaria will be looked after by the United States.

HULLUCH BATTLE A BRILLIANT SIGHT

ROLLING CLOUDS OF GAS

They Marked British Trenches, While Varicolored Puffs Showed Where Shells Burst.

WOMEN WATCHED THE FIGHT

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Oct. 15, (via London, Oct. 16.)—Along the Hulluch-Haisnes line, where the fight had been almost continuous since the taking of Loos, a correspondent had an unprecedented view of the British attack which took the Hohenzollern Redoubt.

From a vantage point in the flat country was witnessed a stupendous panorama of artillery preparation and glimpses of infantry rushing through smoke and shells. So rapid was the fire that an effort to count the number of audible shots per minute from the British guns failed. In front, to right and left, and far in the rear, guns flashed and scattered shells over the landscape; a second's lull in the firing by the batteries in the immediate neighborhood was filled by those further away.

Smoke Clouds Marked Trenches.

The line of both the British and German trenches was discernible in long clouds of smoke and dust from the bursting shells. That of the German artillery seemed smaller in volume. No shells were seen bursting in Loos itself, which appeared peaceful now, back of the British positions. For this tremendous concentration was restricted to a narrow theatre, against the frontal positions of the opposing side.

It was a warm and perfect Autumn day, a bright sun shining and playing into a nimbus in the sky, which gave the aeroplanes cover, and into the churned, man-smitten rising from the earth. Rolling clouds of gas, rising up from the British trenches like steam from the locomotive of a passing train above the edge of a cut as it was released from the apparatus in the trenches, was distinguishable from the explosion of every variety of shells. The reddish-black British lyddite and the coal-black German 9-inch explosives shot up through the lighter smoke in dense spurts, tinged at the bottom with dust from the trenches, while the explosion of a mine made a vast, mushroom-shaped column. Smoke bombs, used as a screen, added to the effect of the light-colored burst from the shrapnel, shot low to destroy the barbed wire and high to search the trenches.

A Prismatic Colored Spectacle.

Large-calibre shrapnel bursting in the air made big vaporous puffs, and high explosives bursting in the air caused big black puffs. There were also asphyxiating gas shells, signal shells to assist the gunners, and shells which dropped streaming points of fire like those from a skyrocket. The sun, shining through the clouds above and below, made a mass of changing colors that was an eye-tiring spectacle. Now toward Hulluch it was pink and toward Auchy-les-La Bassée dark-green, while toward the Hohenzollern Redoubt and Fosse the German parapet became visible for an instant, only to be hidden again.

Avenues of trees along the roads, some of them cut down by shell fire, stood stripped, like telephone poles, of their limbs and foliage, and there were to be seen the jagged ruins of villages, spectral in the variegated mist of destruction, whence came a continuous ugly roar, which submerged the sound of the machine guns and rifles, firing during the half hour from 1 to 1:30, before the British infantry sprang from their trenches.

Meanwhile, in the rear, the miners of this mining country proceeded with their work; farmers were plowing, women going and coming in the villages or standing in doorways, the soldier supports straining their eyes toward the battlefield or playing football, ready to find cover in the dugouts of cellars instantly should their neighborhood be shelled.

The only way the progress of the attack could be told to an observer looking over the whole battlefield, was by the lifting walls of fire of the British guns from the front to the reserve German trenches, while the Germans moved theirs back, presumably to punish the British reserves coming to support their advance.

A flash of flame, and it was seen that Fosse 8 was on fire. An officer on horseback, in the midst of shells, was seen for an instant and was gone. Soldiers were seen springing over a parapet, presumably running forward with bombs, and were lost in the mantle of smoke, which gave only a few glimpses of the presence of human beings in the inferno.

OPTIMISTIC ABOUT BELGIUM.

German Governor Gives Interview on Conditions There.

BERLIN, Oct. 16, (by Wireless to Tuckerton, N. J.)—"The Deutsche Tageszeitung," says the Overseas News Agency, "publishes an interview which a correspondent has had with General von Bissing, Military Governor of Belgium, in which General von Bissing states that, with the exception of the railways, all the Belgian departments are now working under supervision of the German Administration in that country. The provision of food to the population, he says, has now been arranged to perfection, through the improved use of the native soil and the operations of the American Relief Committee.

"Industry, adds the Governor General, has been reduced in volume because of the lack of raw material, but all the mines are now working. Compulsory school attendance is in effect everywhere, and the Governor states that he hopes to be able soon to reopen the University of Ghent.

GERMAN FISHERMEN TAKEN.

British Cruisers Surprised Trawlers; 95 Men Made Prisoners.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 17.—British cruisers and trawlers have just made a big haul of German trawlers in the North Sea. The fleet, numbering thirteen, was engaged in fishing. They were surprised by some British cruisers which promptly gave the signal to other light cruisers, with the result that the whole fleet of trawlers was either captured or sunk. Eight vessels were captured and sent into port.

Ninety-five prisoners of war have been landed and will be sent to concentration camps.

the Bulgarian attack. This means at least a quarter of a million men; that is a preliminary step. Further steps will mean the real test of British capacity and statesmanship. We must act at Bucharest and at Athens as we failed to act at Sofia. We must guarantee to Rumania and Greece that with the Allies they will be on the winning side. To make that guarantee fully effective we must pledge ourselves to raise British and French forces in the Balkans within a stipulated time to the strength of half a million men, and more if need be.

"Rumania can put 600,000 men in the field. Neutrals, like members of Parliament, count two upon a division. Rumania in the end must move either one way or the other, and would rather go with the Allies, but her geographical position forbids her to leave anything to chance. She must be thoroughly satisfied as to the military prospects in the Balkans. She must have full inducements. There must be no more blindness in that respect, no more peddling diplomacy on the part of the Allies.

"The adhesion of Rumania would mean not only a splendid accession to the Allies' numbers and efficiency; it would mean that the Russian forces would be directly linked up through the Rumanian railways with the heart of the Balkans; it would mean that Russian troops can pass into Bulgaria.

"That would bring about a complete political revolution in Bulgaria, the sweeping away of King Ferdinand and his dynasty, the return of the Bulgarian army to the Slav cause. That is as certain a possibility as anything in political calculation can be. The Allies can secure the adhesion of Rumania, the reversal of the Bulgarian policy, the saving of Serbia, and the mastery of Turkey if their military policy in the Balkans is decisive enough and their diplomatic action at Bucharest is bold and generous.

"Of Greece, perhaps the less said at present the better. It is essential that there should be perfect clearness about the situation and that the Allies should be sure of their ground in every respect. Venizelos and the majority of the Greek people are in painful conflict with King Constantine, the Kaiser's sister, and the Court. The new Cabinet under M. Zaimis has taken the very grave step of repudiating its treaty obligations to Serbia.

"We doubt whether the consequences of that policy, if adhered to, have been fully understood in Athens. It would mean in effect the repudiation on the part of King Constantine and his Government of the Treaty of Bucharest, under which Greece received all her additions of territory. It is quite impossible for Greece to have all the profit arising out of the treaties of 1913, with none of the responsibility for maintaining these treaties as a whole.

What Greece Must Be Told.

"In all circumstances the Allies must make certain of their base at Saloniki, and this they can do, but the first point to make plain at Athens is that modern Greece is the creation of France, Great Britain, and Russia, and that the welfare and prosperity of the Kingdom of the Hellenes are as inseparable from sea power as were the fortunes of ancient Athens. The next point to make plain is that a country which repudiates any treaty has no moral claim to the benefit of any treaty. It is for Greece to take things one way or the other.

"We venture to say that a sufficient number of British and French troops landed at Saloniki will make inevitable the return of M. Venizelos to power and will secure the active intervention of Greece.

"If we grasp the situation Germany must either give up the attack on Serbia and abandon both her Bulgars and her Turks, or the Balkan ulcer will be as a fatal drain on the enemy's strength just when it is becoming in any case barely sufficient for its task anywhere, as was the Spanish ulcer on Napoleon's.

"So much, then, for the way to win the war. What of the way to lose it? The best way to lose the war would be to go on as we are, or at least to continue the temper and method which prevailed with the British Government up to a fortnight ago. In that case we should have poured the enemy with good intentions to deceive our own country, not the enemy; the country would still have been deceived both as to the military and diplomatic position; we would have been roused too late to the magnitude of our task and to the vital necessity of powerful action in the Balkans; the steady weakening of our own Government in our own estimation and that of all other nations would have paralyzed our own indomitable vigor and sapped popular confidence among us."

DVINSK FIGHTING VIOLENT

Berlin Reports Severe Russian Attacks There and at Several Other Points.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 17.—Unofficial reports from Petrograd assert that the Germans appear to be on the defensive along the entire line, except near Dvinsk, which, it is said, they have been ordered to capture at any cost.

Berlin officially reports that Russian attacks have been made not only before Dvinsk, but at a number of other places, and adds that they have been repulsed.

These attacks were all comprised within the army group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, which is taken to mean that the Russians have assumed something in the nature of a general offensive along the front, of which Dvinsk forms a vital salient.

The German headquarters bulletin says:

Army group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg: A Russian attack west of Dvinsk failed. Northeast of Wessolowo two attacks were suppressed at the outset by our artillery fire. In this region, during the afternoon and night, renewed attacks were beaten off. We took one officer and 444 men prisoners and captured a machine gun. Also northeast and south of Smorgon the Russians repeatedly attacked, but were everywhere repulsed.

Army groups of Prince Leopold and General von Linsingen: There is nothing to report.

The official bulletin, issued at Vienna, had this to say of operations in Russia:

Austro-Hungarian troops fighting in the region of the lower Styr threw the enemy twenty kilometers north of Rafalowka, from several stubbornly defended positions and repulsed a counterattack.

Otherwise there were no events in the northeastern war theatre.

German Losses Heavy at Dvinsk.

On the western front in the district of Kalutzen, south of Shlok, there has been an artillery duel. West of Grundvald, east of Mitau, the Germans, after a nocturnal cannonade, crossed the River Ekau on Thursday night, but a counterattack drove them back across the river. A somewhat violent artillery action was fought in the region west of the Farm of Mishof on the railway southeast of Riga. German attempts to cross to the left bank of the Aissa, southwest of Mishof, were repulsed by our artillery and rifle fire. An enemy aeroplane again threw bombs on the railway station at Romrshof, north of Friedrichstadt.

The Germans in the Dvinsk region delivered several attacks along the Illukst Road and south of Lake Medim. All the attacks were repulsed. In a desperate fight yesterday between Lakes Demmen and Dreswiaty our troops captured the farm of Gateri and took prisoners and machine guns. Good reports have been received regarding the enemy's very heavy losses in the recent fighting on the Dvinsk front and in the region of Lakes Demmen, Dreswiaty and Boghne.

South of the Dvinsk region and as far as Pripet the position remains stationary.

A Zeppelin on Thursday night threw fifteen bombs on Minsk. Our artillery immediately drove the Zeppelin off.

Near the village of Novo Selki, on the Styr above Czartorysk, the enemy, after artillery preparations, took the offensive. At first he pressed our troops back a little, but shortly afterward was dislodged and forced to return to his starting point.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 16.—Russian military officials say they have obtained information that the German armies have been ordered to take Dvinsk at any cost. German attacks at this point have been made with the utmost impetuosity under cover of a terrific artillery fire, but so far they have been unable to break down the Russian defense. The German losses are reported to have been extremely heavy.

POUND BESSARABIA LINES.

Russian Attacks in That Region Are Being Made in Great Force.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—A dispatch to the Havas Agency from Zurich says:

"The Russians keep perpetually attacking the German positions along the frontier of Bessarabia.

"Their artillery is active and enormous masses of troops are trying desperately to take positions by assault. The combat is continuing."

REFUGEES OVERRUN MOSCOW.

Victims of War in Poland Crowd Ancient Capital of Russia.

A letter from Moscow, telling how that great city was overrun with destitute refugees, was received in New York yesterday by the American Polish Relief Committee, of which Mme. Marcella Sembrich is President.

The letter says:

"—— writes me that Moscow is simply overrun with refugees and runaways. The residents do not know where to put them. Many of them are only passing through Moscow on their way to Samara and Siberia. I went to the station and chatted with Lithuanians, Poles, Russians, and Jews.

"If you could have seen them, my friend! What destitution! What horrible poverty! The children crying with hunger, the women weeping!

"'I asked them, 'Where are you going?' and the answer was, 'I do not know.' 'Where do you come from?' 'From Wiszuny-Debowka.' 'Why did you leave there?' 'We were taken away.' 'Who took you away?' 'The soldiers.' 'Why?' 'Because they were going to burn the village.' 'Who?' 'The soldiers.' 'Why did the soldiers burn the village?' 'So the enemy wouldn't get them.' 'What has become of your cattle?' 'All those they did not kill are wandering somewhere in the woods; some of them were stolen from us, but we were paid for a few others.'"

FRENCH RETAKE VOSGES MOUNTAIN

mude and near Steenstraete. There was no infantry action.

Germans Took 600 Prisoners.

An enemy attack against a position northwest of Vermelles was repulsed.

In Champagne, after clearing the French out of their place d'armes, [a fortified position; probably a reference to the salient which the French yesterday admitted having lost,] each of Auberive, after an unsuccessful counterattack had been made by the enemy, there remained a total of eleven officers, 600 men, three machine guns, and one mine-thrower in the hands of the Saxons.

Small local attacks against our position northwest of Souain and north of Le Mesnil, where the enemy used a plentiful supply of gas grenades, failed.

A French attempt to retake positions south of Leintrey failed. These positions were wrested from them on the 8th instant and they had officially reported their recapture as having taken place at 4 P. M. on the 10th. They were repulsed with severe loss and three officers and forty men were taken prisoners.

An attack made with the object of improving our positions on Hartmannswillerkopf was quite successful. The enemy suffered severe losses, besides leaving five officers and 225 men our prisoners. He also lost a revolver cannon, six machine guns and three mine-throwers.

Enemy attacks on the Schratzmannele were foiled.

GERMAN GUNS BURSTING?

The Temps Cites a German Army Order Indicating Disasters.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—The Temps publishes "Circular No. 2,663-8" of the German War Office, copies of which have been found on many prisoners. The order says that, as photographs of bursted 77-millimeter guns are being circulated in Germany and are likely to cause alarm, the taking of such photographs is henceforth forbidden.

"From other documents captured," the Temps observes, "it is evident that bursting has occurred not only in the case of 77s, but also of 105-millimeter howitzers and mortars."

RUSSIAN VICTIMS' FINE FORTITUDE

CHARITY TO EACH OTHER

ARE GRATEFUL FOR FOOD

But Never Ask Anything, and Remain Uncomplaining Through Their Terrible Hardships.

By JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

SOCHACZEW, Russia, Sept. 15.—All day long I have been keeping pace with the slow moving carts of the returning refugees. There are miles of them on the wide highways. I suppose you could say that the whole countryside for forty miles west of Warsaw and a hundred miles to the east is streaming with them.

If their homes used to be around Lowicz or Bolimow or Skiernewice they come from the northeast, and if they lived out on the great plain to the east and southeast then they make the start homeward from the Praga side of the Vistula.

From Lowicz to Brest-Litovsk—and that is more than a hundred miles—there is not a main road that you could ride along for half an hour without seeing the white wagon hoods rocking and swaying on the anxious homeward way.

An extra wheel or two is lashed to the back of each wagon, and usually the driver has not been out many hours before he is right glad to have it. If a peasant can afford it he takes an extra horse along, too, and sometimes he needs it desperately, for once in a while we see lying by the roadside a dead horse that the poor farmer had to cut from the traces.

As soon as the fighting rolls forward and all except the Landsturm troops—left to guard railroads and bridges—are out of a region, the pea ants come straggling home. They have been in Warsaw or some other big town where there were enough rich people to take care of them during the weeks or months their homes lay in the zone of fire. Or sometimes they fled to villages where they had relatives whose houses were still standing, and by dividing up a family among several relatives every member of it would make out somehow and manage to keep alive.

And they not only do that, but they also manage to keep cheerful and civil. Since August a year ago soldiers have taught me many a humbling lesson on doing a day's work quietly and not looking forward to the next meal at a fixed hour, as if it were something the world were obliged to bring one on a tray, and not whining if in the course of mischance or confusion no meal at all is to be had.

But I believe the refugees of these war days teach one even more. When darkness began to fall this evening they drew their wagons a little off the road, and the women, who were stiff with cold and weariness, swung themselves down from the mountains of household goods on which they had been riding all day and the men who had been driving since dawn went methodically about unhitching their tired beasts. The patient, snub nosed, dirty children, whom it takes just 10 pfennigs to make radiantly happy, moused around in the abandoned trenches and understands for bits of wood, and pretty soon the campfires of the refugees began glimmering all over the wide, dark plain.

Not Too Tired to Smile.

If there was any water to be had the women soon had pails of it heating, and sometimes before they ate they did bits of the family wash. All this time they would smile and nod if one greeted them and try to kiss one's hand if one gave them money. They never asked for money and they did not make any lamentation about their troubles.

After we had asked them if they were homeward bound the next question would be, "And so your house is standing?"

"We heard it was a week ago."

"Where have you been?"

"Warsaw for eight months. The Russians sent us there. Because we were Jews they thought we were all spies and they would not let us stay near where they were. So they sent us away. There was a committee in Warsaw. They helped us. There was an allowance for food every day and a little money—a few kopeks. When the German soldiers got into Warsaw they told us we could go home. So we started."

"And the home was not burned?"

"Thanks to the good God, no! We had luck."

One never got much more out of these people. They huddled close around their fires, for the night wind was very chill, ate their chunks of coarse bread, and thanked the good God for their luck.

Most of them are barefoot, but that is more from custom than deprivation. The women often wear a kind of turban a little like the headdress the women cotton-pickers used to wear in the old South. They are neither shrill nor hysterical, and beyond the admonitory cuff, which they administer with vigor and precision when the children get to picking on each other, they are kind to their numerous offspring. Always they tell you of their experiences in an equable tone—more in the strain of narrative than of complaint.

There has been more agonizing over them by Sienkiewicz and other fluent compatriots of theirs than I ever heard them utter. And that, I think, is not because their present situation is not desolate and their future doubtful, but because, humble, illiterate people though they are, they are capable of displaying great fortitude. And to me their fortitude is a good deal more impressive than the wordy sympathy of publicists who shriek about the horrors of war as though those "horrors"—and not the wicked passions which may have launched a war—were the dreadful part of war.

That the quiet, uncomplaining attitude of these peasant refugees is not merely the result of stolidity is proved by their tenderness toward one another. They do not run with cries and groans to help one another. They just give. It is not true that they are patient solely because they are incapable of realizing how badly off they are. They do realize it, but they do not waste time on the thought. They drag out the cart, load the bedding and the provisions and the babies on to it, hitch up the team, and push on toward home. If they find home standing they, in their own words, give thanks to the good God. If it lies level with the ground they begin sorting the brick.

Struggle On in the Rain.

Often on the homeward way night overtakes them while they still are far from any village. Then they make the cheerful bivouac and snuggle close to their fires to await the coming of the dawn. Sometimes they do not surrender to the darkness, but push ahead. One day I passed them all day long—hundreds upon hundreds of them—and far into the night the weary train kept coming.

At midnight the rain began to fall in long, gusty sheets—a driving rain that soon wet one to the skin. You may think these words only an idle phrase of description. Well, the chances are that since you were a small boy and liked it you have not really been exposed to a rain that wet every garment through; and it is certain that you don't know what it really means to be wet to the skin until you have ridden half the night in that condition.

But still the wagons of the refugees kept coming, many of them without tarpaulins or hoods to protect their occupants. The poor, huddled creatures were lying on top of their goods, their children clasped in their arms. Except for the faint glimmer of a lantern swinging from the wagon they had no light, though sometimes they were able to raise their bearings in a general way when the flash of fire bombs and shells and signal rockets lit up the northern sky and showed them where another fortified position on the Vilna-St. Petersburg line was being fought for.

It was a sight that cheered them, for it made known to them the one fact in life which is important to them—and that is that the fighting has swung far out of the region of home.

When they saw the headlights of a German military auto bearing down on them the drivers of the wagons would leap from their seats and yank the horses from the middle of the roads and sometimes they would have to throw their coats or a quilt over the horses' heads because the beasts were so terrified by the streaming light. One midnight I was so lucky as to have our automobile break down just as we were passing a wagon train. At one side of the third wagon a woman was walking. Her husband, who was doing the driving, walked on the other side. Both were splashed to the waist with mud. On top of the wagon were the children, whose faces shown, wide-eyed and startled in the glare of our lights, and a cuple of young girls who kept the children from falling off.

The husband had his hands full in controlling the frantic horses, so he had little to say, but his wife was ready for a good visit, and neither rain nor darkness could damp her buoyancy. She spoke a kind of German that was so unlettered and so free from complexities that it fitted in very nicely with the kind of German I speak, and I could understand much of her story. Besides, it was the usual story.

Months away from home and living on the few kopeks a day allowed by the relief society in Warsaw, and now the news that home was standing and the Russians had been driven so far east and north that it was safe to go back. Yes, the children had been well through it all. There were two of them up there on the cart. The other two had been sent to their uncle at Kalisz just before the invasion.

When we asked her whether she had food enough in the wagon she shrugged and bade us consider whether in these times there was ever enough of anything, but she seemed to make the question more a matter of jest than whine. In fact, throughout her narrative there was no resentment, no rancor, and she seemed to me one of the bravest, best hearted creatures I had ever met in any country.

She was enjoying herself, too, for by this time some of the other autos had come up and she had men from half a dozen nations standing around her and listening to her story and chaffing with her and laughing at her droll sallies. I suppose you might say that for the first time in her life she was an important person, and I think she liked it. Finally she settled herself on the hub of a wagon wheel, sitting there with hands resting on her hips, and began to question us. And the burden of all her inquiry was this:

"When will the dear God bring the end of the war?"

"Generals don't know that, mother," said we.

That was true, she agreed, but at least we might have a notion as to whether the Russians would be coming back and whether this "boese" (wicked) fighting would be likely to begin all over again.

We pointed to the far north where the sky at that instant was slowly overspread with the beautiful crimson glow of the fire bombs, and we said we thought not, and that our information was that the Russian lines were breaking at all points.

By this time the storm had abated a little, though the rain and the wind were still slashing in the birches that grow close up to both sides of the road, and the two children on the top of the wagon poked their heads out from the shawls with which the girls had been trying to keep them covered.

A Mother's Gratitude.

"Schokolate, Kinder?" said I, and broke up the last of the oblong pieces that had served me for rations since breakfast. It wasn't generosity, though, for I was a good deal nearer home than the children were, and certainly surer of finding home standing when I got there.

"Oh, the pretty gentleman!" said the mother, and swung herself up on the wheel to pass the chocolate to the children. They stretched themselves for it the way young birds stretch themselves out of a nest when their mother comes with food, and this mother said, "Thank the pretty gentleman," just as I used to thank Uncle Owen long, long ago. I guess mothers the pretty much the same all over the world, and this poor peasant woman, balancing herself on the wheel hub out on the rain-swept Russian plain and reaching up the chocolate to her chilren, was of the ancient, unchanging type.

It was the first time I had ever been called a "pretty gentleman," so I gave her the rest of the bits of cholocate for herself, but she passed them on to the children. One of the other fellows came up at that moment and he said: "Do the kids want some more chocolate?" The mother said that it was kind of him to offer more and she added with a wistfulness that sent a pang to the heart: "But perhaps the gnädiger Herr has a bit of bread he can spare." But none of us had any bread.

A little while after that we said goodbye to the cheerful, loquacious soul. I don't suppose I'll ever forget her, in spite of all the momentous things I have seen in the last year. Perhaps, in some way that we do not understand, she was momentous, too.

RUSSIAN ADVANCE PREDICTED FOR DEC. 1

Allied Military Authority Expects Marked Change in Situation About That Time.

ALL DEPENDS ON MUNITIONS

Some of Czar's Ministers Subordinating War Situation to Internal Affairs.

ATHENS, Sept. 13 (Correspondence of The Associated Press).—A distinguished military authority of one of the Allied Powers, who has just completed a stay of several months in Russia with the Imperial armies, has given to The Associated Press a summary of the situation at the time when the Emperor of Russia took personal command of the land and naval forces of the Empire.

"It is useless to deny the gravity of the situation in Russia," the officer said "but it would be quite as erroneous to regard Russia's position today as desperate, or even as one of imminent danger. The morale of the Russian forces is absolutely untouched by the long series of retreats. The Russian people are for the war to a man and every defeat has served only to confirm them in their stubborn determination to drive every German from Russian soil. Were the Government to undertake to make a separate peace for Russia now it would have to face a spontaneous and flaming insurrection in all parts of the country.

"This is only one side, however. The change in the supreme command of the imperial armies has had its drawbacks. The Grand Duke Nicholas was never a great tactician, nor did he ever pretend to be one. But he had the confidence of his officers and the absolute faith of his men. The latter the Emperor will also have—perhaps even to a greater extent than his great uncle—for the Emperor is almost a religious figure to the average Russian. But how much confidence he will inspire in his officers is another matter. They know that when the Grand Duke said a thing he meant it. He was like a rock in his decisions and withal fundamentally just and of open mind. His officers could depend upon him and they did depend upon him. And it had an excellent effect throughout the army.

"With the Emperor the Russians fear it may be different. In the first place, he not only is not a soldier, but he is a very strong advocate of world peace. He has retained confidence in former Minister of War Soukhomlinoff, in whom certainly no one else has any confidence and who is generally regarded in Russia as an incompetent who, with Rasspoutin, has had a very sinister influence on the Emperor.

Roukhloff an Obstacle.

"The Emperor himself, also, recalled to office S. V. Roukhloff, who now occupies the most important civil post in the empire—that of the Ministry of Communications, and who instead of planning to transport arms and munitions to armies in desperate need of them, is intent upon working out nationalist theories of his own of Russia for the Russians. In place of accepting a very favorable American offer to erect factories in Russia for the reassembling of American war materials by those familiar with the work, Roukhloff insisted on having the work done by Russians totally unfamiliar with it, in factories which the Russians took ten times as long to construct as the Americans would have required.

"On the financial side the situation is almost as bad. The Minister, P. L. Bark, is a man of no very signal ability, who knows enough, however, to be guided largely by his French and British colleagues. But Chipoff, the head of the State Bank, has given rise to no little criticism of his capacity by his insistence on guarding the gold reserve of the empire intact, whatever happens to Russian exchange.

"It is the Emperor's willingness to keep men like these in office under present critical conditions which has filled the intelligent Russian with apprehension at the prospect of his active participation in military affairs at this uncertain juncture. No one in Russia is ignorant that the Emperor takes his traditional position as the father of his people with almost devout seriousness. It is scarcely possible to conceive to what unexpected action his conviction that he is called to be a second St. Vladimir may lead him. His intentions are admitted to be excellent. But Russia could do with a little less exalted purpose and a little more practical efficiency.

Duma Muddles Things.

"The same may be said of the Duma. With the most patriotic intentions in the world of lending the full co-operation of the people of Russia to the defense of the Empire, its members raised, at a crisis when nobody has time to consider them, the most complex and embarrassing questions of internal reform. To open the discussion of the advisability of a responsible ministry when plainly every thought is necessary to the national defense, seems almost absurd; yet that is precisely what the Russians let the Duma do, and by permitting it, succeeded in placing the Emperor in a position which threatens to inspire his personal popularity at the moment when it is perhaps the most valuable asset the Government possesses.

"It is scarcely probable that the Russian armies will begin to receive in sufficient quantities the small arms and munitions they lack much before November. It is not therefore very likely that they will be ready to assume any serious offensive before the first of December.

"Meanwhile the defensive retreat must go on. General Ivanoff, who is looked upon as one of the ablest military commanders of the Empire, has the defense of Petrograd in hand. The important defensive works which he has caused to be constructed about Pskov are thought to be as nearly impregnable as any entrenchments have proved in this war. His line, facing almost south, also serves to threaten the German communications in the event of any further advance into Russia, and to render such further advance dangerous.

"In this respect, therefore, the Russian situation may be regarded as satisfactory, though the danger of the fall of Petrograd should not be belittled. Petrograd is almost essential to the Russians, not on account of any sentimental reason connected with its being the capital, but because three-fourths of the industries directly connected with supplying the troops are located there, and their loss would be a blow from which it would be difficult for the Russian troops to recover.

"On the south the situation is less defined. It is evident that if Constantinople falls and the Allies are able to rush arms and munitions in large quantities to the Russian forces, the situation of the Germans will be most serious. Over and over again I have noted that whenever an important shipment of munitions has been made to any sector of the Russian line, the retreat has promptly stopped in that sector, a slow, but certain advance has begun, and long trainloads of prisoners have begun to come through from that part of the front. It is common opinion in Russia, based on a great deal of experience, that when the Russian is anywhere nearly equally equipped with the German now doing the fighting on the Russian front, the Russian is not only able to stop the German, but to push him back. I presume that this is on account of the fresh troops which are constantly being sent into the Russian lines, while, to judge from the prisoners the Russians have taken, the opposing German troops are neither young nor very well trained, as a rule.

"As, then, the opening of the Dardanelles means the supplying of sufficient arms and munitions to the whole Russian Army without the long delays now inevitable, it would seem plain that the Germans must do everything in their power to prevent the defeat of the Turks and the fall of Constantinople. Certainly this is Russian opinion. Moreover, it is believed in Russia that the only possible way to accomplish this end is for Germany to re-establish, somehow, her line of communications with the Dardanelles.

NEW GERMAN PLAN TO GET OUR SUPPLIES

The following advertisement appears in THE TIMES of this morning:

Head of Hamburg concern, being in New York in order to establish a branch office for the export of American produce, wants partner with capital.

The advertisement was inserted and paid for by Heinrich Becker, member of a German exporting firm, who is in this country to arrange for the exportation of foodstuffs to Germany on a large scale.

It is learned from an authoritative source that the purpose of Mr. Becker's seeking the investment of American capital is an attempt to put the foodstuffs he intends to ship to Germany in the class of neutral shipments, representing an investment of American capital. His firm does not lack capital, as is evidenced by his cash payments for supplies he has already bought in New York in the four weeks he has been here.

It is the plan of Mr. Becker's firm to buy up foodstuffs in New York, charter neutral ships, consign the goods from an American firm to be formed, to a neutral-named firm in Copenhagen or Rotterdam, whence they are to be reshipped to Germany. He calculates that, inasmuch as his shipments will be from one neutral firm to another, he will be able to obtain war insurance on them. Mr. Becker stands ready to meet all losses, but he is anxious that goods sent from this port shall be sent as an investment of capital of an American citizen without any appearance of German interest or evidence of their ultimate destination. His purchases thus far have consisted of cottonseed oil, lard, coffee, tea, tobacco, and corn.

In an interview given last night, Mr. Becker said he was not acting for the German Government, but as an individual.

"I am just after making money," he said, "that is all. I wish to establish new conditions so that after the war I may do big business in the enormous demand there will be in Germany for goods from this country."

"Are you making any efforts to secure shipment to Germany now?" was asked.

"Oh, yes, I can make much money now if I can get American goods to Germany. If the English would not interfere I could make more money than Mr. Rockefeller has. It is very important that we get certain foodstuffs now. Not that Germany needs them—she is selling grain now to the Swiss—but we can use them just the same. You may be interested to know that Germany is now getting considerable supplies from this country—nothing like in time of peace, but that something considerable. Much of the tea, coffee, and tobacco the men in the trenches are using comes from America.

"Of course, the great problem is to get goods into Germany. It is impossible to ship a cargo of goods to Rotterdam for Germany because the Overseas Agency has an agreement with England whereby no cargoes may go to Germany. However, we can sometimes get smaller lots through. Then I may take a chance in getting cargoes to Copenhagen. It is very evident I cannot tell you all of my plans. Only I want to say that I am not acting for the German Government."

"Will you sell American supplies to the army if you can get them to Germany?" he was asked.

"Oh, I shall sell them to any one who pays the most," was the reply.

Mr. Becker was then asked why, if he was not lacking in funds, he wished an American partner with capital.

"Well, I think the goods would stand a better chance of getting across," he said. "I believe a cargo shipped from a firm I shall establish here to a firm in Copenhagen would have one chance in two of getting through. I carry on my correspondence that way—by sending letters to friends in Copenhagen and Rotterdam and having it remailed by them to the destination in Germany."

Mr. Becker said that German business men expected the great losses they had sustained through the war to be repaid with interest from indemnities the Kaiser would levy upon the conquered Allies when the war was over.

"There is another thing, too," he said. "As soon as Germans get through to Constantinople they will go after the Suez Canal: That will be something England is to lose very soon."

CANADIAN MUNITIONS QUARREL IS ACUTE

Agent of Lloyd George and Sir Samuel Hughes at Odds on Dominion's Work.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Oct. 16.—Bone a military critic of Toronto, writing in a Detroit paper, gives details of the factional dispute which is raging between Sir Samuel Hughes, Dominion Minister of Militia, on the one side, and D. A. Thomas, the Welsh mine owner, acting as the agent of Lloyd George, on the other.

The Canadian Shell Commission, organized by Hughes, with General Bertram as its head, is the centre of the dispute. It is the intention of Hughes within the next fortnight to take issue in public speeches with the work of Mr. Thomas. He asserts that Mr. Thomas has favored United States manufacturers, to the exclusion of Canadians, and that up to date he has not placed a dollar's worth of munition contracts in the Dominion.

Mr. Thomas, on the other hand, asserts that Canadian production facilitis and deliveries are poor. He charges openly that for the same shell which Hughes's commission would produce at $3 he is paying through the Morgan banking firm only $2 in the United States.

Trouble between the men started when Mr. Thomas insisted on summoning from England an agent of the Ministry of Munitions to oversee the work of General Bertram's Shell Commission. The agent was informed by Hughes that his services were unwelcome.

After making his price comparison and the charge as to deliveries Mr. Thomas announced this week in Montreal that two more agents of the Munitions Ministry were coming to assume charge of the Shell Commission's work.

An announcement by Hughes of public speeches defining his stand followed. Hughes and his associates charge that the Dominion has been discriminated against, and that Morgan has been favored to the exclusion of Canadian producers of munitions.

In interviews Hughes has admitted the sidetracking of Thomas's first agent, and the reception the others will receive is causing widespread discussion. The Duke of Connaught has been trying to use his good offices to stop the trouble, but at present it seems more acute than ever.

The charge that not a dollar's worth of munitions has been bought by Mr. Thomas in Canada made by Hughes was received with surprise, but investigation is said to prove this to be a fact. Coupled with the attitude of Hughes toward a prominent American motor-car manufacturer and the drawbacks to recruiting of late, the situation is thought unfortunate by all concerned.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Oct. 16.—D. A. Thomas returned from New York and Montreal today, accompanied by Sir Hay Frederick Donaldson of the Woolwich Arsenal and Lionel Hitchens of the Cammellair Company, who have been sent to Canada by the British authorities to become members of the Munitions Commission, which is to be reorganized.

A few days ago Mr. Thomas asserted that deliveries of Canadian shells were slow and prices were higher than in the United States and the United Kingdom. Sir Samuel Hughes declared this statement erroneous, and said Canada had led the world in the manufacture of munitions. He added that Mr. Thomas had been in Canada three months, and had not yet placed an order.

Mr. Thomas was asked today if he had anything to say.

"I love a fight," he said, "but this is not the time for controversy. I have no comment to make at present."

BRITAIN EMERGING FROM HER GLOOM

Last Week's Pessimism as to the War Succeeded by a Reawakening Confidence.

NORTHCLIFFE PRESS FLAYED

Guilty of "Pure Treason," Says The Nation, in Denouncing Attempts to Discourage Public.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sunday, Oct. 17.—Disquietude, dissatisfaction, and distrust have spread over England in the past week like poisonous gases. The Parliamentary atmosphere was polluted; publicists who had hitherto kept their vision clear saw through a glass darkly; men in the clubs and the man in the street came under the all-pervading influence of the noxious vapors. Never before in the course of this war has London passed through so black a week.

Good judges say the worst of this psychological crisis is now over, and that those Englishmen who have been most affected by it are already ashamed of a temperamental ebullition so inconsistent with British ideals. Others say that the paroxysm was superficial and in no real sense national, and that the articulate depression of a minority weighed lightly in the balance against the inarticulate confidence of the vast majority. In any case it has been an interesting study in national psycology.

Disappointed in the Drive.

Trouble began when the exact realization of the results of the Franco-English offensive against the German western front brought disappointment to those sections of the population which had expected to see the enemy on the run.

A certain portion of the London press made it its business to depict the situation in the darkest colors.

"Wounded officers and men are coming home," said one of the Northcliffe papers, "and they are talking"—this last mysterious phrase receiving the emphasis of big italics. Parenthetically it may be stated on high and unimpeachable authority that the British casualties are below the estimates formed in advance of the offensive.

Then came the untoward developments in the Balkans with their crop of perturbing rumors and the tangible evidence of divided councils in the resignation of Delcassé and the disclosures of Professor Painlevé in the French Chamber.

"Have we a Foreign Office?" asked The Daily Mail. Some other papers, like The Morning Post, put practically similar questions.

Sir Edward Grey made his statement and received less newspaper commendation than ever before in his long experience as Foreign Secretary. Even The Manchester Guardian remarked:

"Statesmanship is the art of finding the means for achieving the ideal; and it is just here, in the adaptation of the means to the end, that the Government has been at fault."

Grey's Speech a Wet Blanket.

There was no debate on the Balkans in the House of Commons after Sir Edward Grey's statement—a circumstance which was utilized to the full by the panic-mongers. In the House of Lords the discussion which followed Lord Crewe's declaration was not calculated to allay the disquiet.

"For the first time in his Parliamentary career," said an important provincial paper, "Sir Edward Grey failed with the Commons," and Lord Morley's intervention in the Lords—it was the second time he had broken silence since he resigned at the outbreak of the war—added to the gloom.

The Northcliffe papers piled on the agony by every conceivable device and found support in such unusual quarters as The Pall Mall Gazette and The Evening Standard.

"The nation's confidence in its Ministers," said the former, "is rapidly melting away."

There were other contributory influences to doubt and disquiet, among which the methods of the censorship were not the least important. Lord Selbourne's phrase "mischievous stupidity," applied by a Cabinet Minister to the proceedings of a department for which another Minister was responsible, created a sensation, which was increased rather than diminished by Sir John Simon's response, which in some quarters was likened to Pontius Pilate's washing his hands.

That, in its main lines, was the process which brought about a nervous paroxysm, which reached its fever point last week.

What are the remedies being applied? As The Daily Telegraph says today:

"The temptations to pessimism in the existing situation are proving alluring and strong, particularly to those who study current history through the wrong end of the telescope. What will the historian of the future say when he comes to review the policy of Germany and this country during the past fourteen months or more?"

The Daily Telegraph proceeds to outline German expectations at the outset of the war and their non-realization and points out the influence which British sea power is exercising on the course of events. "If mistakes in other fields have been made," it says—"and as to that time will show—let us not forget that the main war weapon of this country has more than fulfilled every anticipation."

Other papers take a similar line, the Northcliffe press, naturally, excepted. Lord Northcliffe refers to most of his contemporaries as "the hide-the-truth press" and the Mark Tapleyites of journalism.

Optimists and Pessimists Both Scolded.

The Saturday Review administers a dose to both sections, saying:

"What we have to do at this moment is not to pay the smallest heed to the panicmongers and be no more scared by their bogeys than were the commonsensible among us elated by the trash of the optimists during the first year of the war. Panic is the ugly brother of anarchy, and anarchy is a more dangerous enemy than Prussia. Seeking about for imaginary despots or demagogues who by some marvel will pull us out of our difficulties is useless. It is like people with a serious illness flying from doctor to doctor and exchanging prescription for prescription. The end of that can only be nervous prostration."

The Economist thinks that when the whole the country can congratulate itself on the position of affairs on the two main fronts, adding:

"It is true that in military circles the opinion is freely expressed that our Headquarters Staff needs weeding and improvement if the successes achieved are to be pressed home; but there can be no doubt that the achievements of the French artillery have alarmed the Germans, and there have been days recently when a retreat to the line of the Meuse and the abandonment of Northern France and a great part of Belgium were under discussion." The New Age says:

"Ever since Kitchener gave Northcliffe to understand that his ambition is to carry through the war against a conscript nation by means of a voluntary nation, Northcliffe has fairly and consistently misrepresented every situation as it has arisen. The present situation, we do not deny, lends itself to misrepresentation with generous facility. The exaggeration of the seriousness of certain elements in it is scarcely possible. At the same time, looking at the situation as a whole—a feat of the imagination beyond the power of the Harmsworth journalists—and, above all, contemplating our national resources and character, we maintain with Mr. Asquith that our victory may be postponed, but it is also a foregone conclusion."

"Trail of Harmsworth Influence."

Finally, the nation sees the trail of "Harmsworth influence" in the spirit of doubt and anxiety which has prevailed among the London public for the week past. "If Harmsworth journalism," it says, "is in the last resort brainless, it is clever enough to lead the weak and impose on the ignorant. It has destroyed one Government and now threatens another. But its real attack is on the spirit of the nation. This it saps by singling out one of its leaders after another and suggesting their incapacity or their treachery to the national cause, or both. In this fashion it has already treated Mr. Asquith, Sir Edward Grey, Lord Haldane, and Lord Kitchener. A certain division of labor is resorted to. While The Times takes the high road of policy, The Daily Mail and The Evening News take the low road of personal detraction.

"Now, this denigration has not the merit of the honest pessimist, who, fearful of his country's woe and chafing under its concealment, strives to shake her out of her slumbrous mood. Anger at thwarted business has one obvious share of it; love of the seeming power that reckless journalism can wield has another; but the selection of anti-conscriptionisits as the Ministers who are thus sniped at in every stiff corner of the country's fortunes reveals the main design of the Harmsworth press. Now it is Sir Edward Grey, and now Mr. Runciman. The depression of the public mind, the spreading of disunion at home and want of confidence abroad, are all effects incidental to the grand aim of forcing conscription. The country must be conscripted; therefore it must be shown to be in a bad case. The voluntary system must go; therefore exercise every art of syndicated journalism with its hundred pens to make it fail. Such is the plan; it is pure treason to the State."

BRITISH WORKMEN FURIOUS.

Ready for Any War Policy Because Cost of Liquor Is Increased.

Arthur J. Nelson, an English engineer, who arrived from London yesterday, said that the war had been brought home to the British workingman at last because it had interfered with his beer. Not only had the hours for imbibing it been curtailed, but the price had been increased, and would go still higher before peace came.

"The workingman's beer," Mr. Nelson continued, "had been regarded as sacred by Kings and Parliaments until the new increased taxation on liquor sellers forced the price of a pint from 3 cents, or halfpennies, to 7 cents. The glass of spirits sold at twopence now costs sixpence, and the quartern of 'blue ruin with three outs,' which was the coster's favorite tipple on Saturday nights, has risen from 10 to 20 cents."

He explained that "blue ruin" was Old Tom gin served in a small bottle with three glasses. The bus drivers' favorite Winter beverage, called "dog's nose," consisting of ale with nutmeg and a dash of gin, has gone up from 5 to 10 cents for a pint

"The saloons, called 'pubs,' are not opened until noon every day and close again at 2 o'clock," said Mr. Nelson, "and the men who went round the docks with a barrel of beer on a truck have been put out of business altogether. No treating is allowed in any of the big cities. In addition to the increase in the price of beer and spirits, fish has become so scarce that 'fried fish and taters,' as the dish has been known for generations, has become a luxury. In London and Liverpool the favorite supper on Saturday night in the Winter was two and one and a sprinkle,' which is two halfpenny pieces of fish and a ha'porth of fried potatoes. This cannot be obtained now under seven cents. I forgot to explain that the word 'sprinkle' meant a dash of vinegar.

"These personal injuries have incensed the workingmen so strongly against Germany that they will now support the Government in any measures to obtain satisfaction."

TOLD TO FACE AIR RAIDS.

Public Should Bear Share of Danger, Says Bishop of London.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Bishop of London, speaking at Hackney today, urged the people not to be afraid of air raids.

"After all, the risk to us is not a ten-thousandth part of what everybody in the trenches has to face," he said. "Why should we middle-aged people ask to be out of it all? Why should the boys face all the danger?"

Cables to Bulgaria Suspended.

Telegraphic communication with Bulgaria has been cut off by the British administration, according to advices received by cable companies here yesterday. They were told that telegrams for Bulgaria should no longer be accepted. Telegrams for Rumania can now only go via England and Russia, the companies were also advised.

DEPARTING ENVOYS OF BRITAIN GUARDED

SLEUTHS SWARM ON PIER

Reported That the Steamship Will Be Escorted by Two Warships from the Fastnet to Its Port.

Lord Reading, Sir Edward Holden, and Sir Henry Babbington Smith, members of the Anglo-French financial commission, sailed for England yesterday on the American liner St. Louis, after expressing their satisfaction at having arranged the $500,000,000 loan.

Their names were not on the passenger list, and a strict watch was kept by a number of private detectives and by four detectives sent down from the Central Office to see that no suspicious characters were allowed to get down to the gangway. Only passengers were allowed on the ship. Ex-United States Ambassador Robert Bacon came to say good-bye to Lord Reading, whom he had known in London, and William P. Summerville represented the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. Basil P. Blackett, the Secretary of the financial commission, was at the pier, but did not sail. He said he expected to leave this week.

In an interview with reporters on the upper promenade deck of the St. Louis, Lord Reading said that although he had been here for five weeks he had been so busy that he had seen very little of the country.

"If possible I would like to give you a final message to the American people," he said. "We feel deeply grateful for the kind treatment accorded to us by all those with whom we came in contact in the United States. The expressions of sympathy for the allied cause I have heard here have touched me very deeply.

"I am indeed glad that the loan negotiations are over. We are quite satisfied with the result. No bargain is a good bargain unless both sides are satisfied, and complete satisfaction will be the result of this loan. The persons with whom we dealt had a very proper regard for American interests, of course, but I am satisfied they did not try to exact too much."

When Lord Reading was asked whether, in view of Lord Milner's speech in the House of Lords, there was any possibility of Great Britain withdrawing from the Dardanelles campaign, he replied:

"Whatever happens, nothing can change the attitude of Great Britain and her allies in the war. For them there can be only one end. Until that end is reached, and we have had a final victory, there will be no end of the struggle for us. No efforts will be spared, and we will continue with minds directed solely to our purpose. The British nation is prepared to sacrifice everything to attain this end. Nothing that can be done will be omitted."

Asked why Russia had not been represented in the international loan, Lord Reading said that perhaps it was due to the fact that Great Britain and France went ahead in the negotiations without consulting Russia. He added that he could not discuss the report of new credits of $250,000,000.

"We have hardly begun to breathe yet after arranging the first loan, and it is not yet time to talk of another loan. I am only now feeling quite safe and satisfied."

Lord Reading went on to say that he had enjoyed his visit to Washington and his meeting with the Justices of the Supreme Court.

Sir Edward Holden was accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Warren, and two secretaries.

The St. Louis had 206 first, 186 second, and 300 steerage passengers for Liverpool, and 2,850 sacks of mail. It is understood that the liner will be met at the Fastnet by two torpedo boat destroyers and escorted to the Bar Light-ship in the Mersey, which is twelve miles from the Liverpool landing stage.

All baggage was searched on the pier before it was sent on board the ship. Captain John Jamison said that he expected the St. Louis would reach Liverpool on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 24, with moderately good weather.

ALBANY TAKES $1,000,000.

Banks and Individuals Buy Bonds of Anglo-French Loan.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Oct. 16.—One million dollars of the Anglo-French loan bonds were subscribed for during banking hours today. The National Commercial, New York State National, and First National Banks took $500,000, and private investors through these banks, the Union Trust Company, Spencer Trask & Co., and Harris, Forbes & Co. took $400,000.

SAYS CARSON HAS RESIGNED

London Daily News Repeats the Report, Despite His Denial.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Notwithstanding the recent denial by Sir Edward Carson, the Attorney General, that he had resigned, the assertion is made by the Parliamentary correspondent of The Daily News that he has given up his office.

Announcement to this effect is withheld by the Government, the correspondent says, because of its hope that in the interests of unity Sir Edward may be persuaded to withdraw his resignation, the reason for which, it is said, has not been ascertained.

DOUBTS SEA BATTLE.

Berlin Questions Victory of British Submarine Over Warships.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 16.—A semi-official telegram from Berlin says nothing is known there of an engagement between German warships and a British submarine off the Island of Moen, in which a German torpedo boat was reported to have been sunk.

The telegram suggests that the explosion of a mine probably led to the report.

SEAPLANE SINKS SCHOONER.

Russian Vessel Victim of Germans in the Gulf of Riga.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—According to Berlin newspapers, the Russian schooner Ila, with a cargo of coal and iron, has been sunk in the Gulf of Riga by a German seaplane.

The account states that the crew was saved.

of War and the Secretary of the Navy giving details of the proposals to Congress for increasing the land and naval forces. It is the expectation also that Secretary Garrison will deliver an address at the first available opportunity that will embrace the arguments of the Administration in favor of a more adequate defense.

At intervals from now on the President and the officers of the Administration will make addresses in advocacy of their plan to give the country a trained soldiery that will form the nucleus of a great army to take the field in time of hostilities and put the fleet in a position of strength to enable it to protect the coasts and defend American trade routes. The President will deliver a speech on the subject of national preparedness at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Manhattan Club of New York.

It is the purpose of the Administration to begin this campaign of publicity prior to the assembling of Congress on Dec. 6. The country will be made acquainted with the details of the program for military and naval increase, so that there will be no confusion in the public mind as to the wishes of the President and the Cabinet such as might result if the program were not made known until after the Congress session began. In other words, the desire is that the people shall have an opportunity of reading and studying the program before speech-making on the floors of the Senate and the House begins.

There is increasing evidence that the country is becoming aroused over the necessity of placing the nation in better shape to defend itself against a foreign foe. This evidence is furnished in part by the sympathy expressed by Congressmen in the plans of the Administration. There is evidence, too, that considerable support will come from those who are political opponents of the Administration, but who believe that it is a patriotic duty to bury partisanship at this time of uncertainty in the world's history. Some Republicans will criticise and attack the Administration plan, of course, but the greatest danger, in the minds of observers here, may come from a coterie of Democratic leaders and their party followers who, in the past, have shown a disposition to object to large appropriations for military and naval increase. With a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives in the neighborhood of thirty—

TRENTINO NOT EAGER TO BE 'REDEEMED'

FEAR TEUTONS MAY RETURN

Also That Deprivation of Austria's Support of Their Wine Industry May Spell Ruin.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LAGO DI GARDA, Sept. 30.—The Lake of Garda is Italian. Yet Riva and Torbole at the northern extremity of the lake, are still "unredeemed." Slowly, on both sides, from Monte Tremalzo and the Monte Baldo, the Italian grip is closing in.

Through the vineyards and olive groves behind the towns, barbed wire entanglements, masking an intricate system of prepared Austrian trenches, thread their way, like strands of silver. On the commanding heights, fortified positions of almost inexpugnable strength are manned by the Austrians; while down on the shores of the lake, abutting on the precipitous cliffs, forts of solid concrete masonry, armed with heavy guns, defend the access to the towns.

As the Italians approach, and advance positions are evacuated by the Austrians, it is noticeable here, as elsewhere in the Trentino, that the Austrians have arranged their second line of defenses by invariably placing the towns and villages in the direct line of fire. For they have vowed that if Italy "redeems" the Trentino, she will find a land of devastation and ruin. The Italians know this. They are loathe to cause needless suffering to the inhabitants, to whom they present themselves as "deliverers." So that, up to the present, they have refrained from advancing boldly on the towns.

In fact, the cautious operations of the Italians in this region betrays an overwhelming desire to wage war in a manner as benevolent as possible, which under the circumstances would seem incompatible with the very principles of a successful, aggressive campaign and in a large measure accounts for the small success hitherto achieved. The timidity of the Italians has in it something of the tragedy of the judgment of Solomon. The Trentino is held up before the court of the civilized world. Sword in hand, the judgment is about to be delivered, and from the attitude of the contending "mothers" there can be no shadow of a doubt that Italy is the true one.

Attitude of the Population.

However, Italian difficulties are here immeasurably increased by the behavior of the people. With the exception of a few ardent and impassioned patriots, the vast majority of the inhabitants of the Trentino, who are Italian in language, customs and tradition, look with amazement on the war that Italy is carrying in to their homes. Many, though in all probability desirous of being united to their motherland in the south, do not comprehend the broader issues and motives which compelled Italy to declare war on Austria after the latter had promised a peaceful cession of the Trentino.

They had been led to hope for a peaceful solution of the thorny problem. Many had even been told by the Austrian authorities that the cession had been arranged for; that it would free from military obligations all the men of the district, and that those who were fighting for Austria in Galicia and on the Russian front would soon be permitted to return to their homes. The re joicing over this prospect, though tempered by a skeptical attitude toward Austrian promises, nevertheless was widespread.

Then, on May 18, like a thunderclap out of the blue, came the order posted throughout the Trentino: "All men between the ages of 16 to 60 must report within twenty-four hours for military service." Squads of troops were detached rigorously to enforce the order. The new Italian recruits of the Emperor Francis Joseph were hurried in batches to the nearest point of assembly, and incorporated in units fighting in Galicia, Poland, and the Bukowina. The Trentino, in a few days, was swept clean of able-bodied men. A week later Italy declared war, three days afterward the Italians stormed and captured Ala, and war was raging along the snow-clad Alps, awakening with the stupendous crashes of heavy gunfire the quiet Alpine passes, dotted with villages. Here "peace" had been promised, and now the inhabitants must endure the ravages of war, which they had hitherto been spared.

Can it be wondered at that the Italian troops meet with no very enthusiastic reception in the territory they have "freed" by force of arms? For when an Italian detachment capture a position which gives them undisturbed access to a "redeemed" village, or even cluster of houses, instead of being welcomed like neroes, with flags and rejoicing, time after time, the Italian troops find the inhabitants, who speak their language and are of the same blood, dumb and silent, even in some cases, recalcitrant. The majority serve their new maters, as they did the old, without enthusiasm or show of feeling. And the Italian soldier volubly expresses his surprise and disgust at the cool reception he is receiving at the hands of his "brothers" of the Trentino.

A partial explanation of this attitude lies in the fact that long years of persecution and oppression have thoroughly cowed the Trentino peasant; deadened his sensibilities and natural enthusiasm. Furthermore, with Michiavellian cleverness Austria has succeeded in inspiring a large number of the peasants with a feeling of animosity toward Italy. And it would not be an exaggeration to say that fully half the population of the Trentino, though Italian ethnically, have been led by Austrian machinations to open opposition to a union with Italy. This can be briefly explained. The only source of present wealth in the Trentino is the vineyards. These have been nursed artificially for political purposes by the Vienna Government to a state of relative prosperity. Deprived of the support and subsidy of the Government, or competing in the open market with the Italian wines, the Trentino peasants believe they would soon be ruined.

Notwithstanding the apparent apathy of the Trentini, they have for over a century maintained their Italianism unshaken, though the Trentino has been the field of incessant Austro-German propaganda. In visiting various Trentino villages, the only difference I was able to detect between these Italians and those of free Italy is the cringing timorousness of the people. There is a whispered, subdued tone, which pervades all conversation; a general bending of the back, indicative of many storms that have passed, which may have broken those who had the courage to stand up for their rights.

Otherwise I could find no distinctive difference between Italy and the province she is "redeeming." The towns, the villages, the fields, the methods of cultivating the vineyards, the mulberry trees and olive groves of the warm, fertile valleys, are all Italian. Even the sky has here the same tone of deep blue, and the clustered cypresses here also stand forth, the sentries of the Italian landscape.

The One Heroine of the War.

Though the Trentini have shown themselves seemingly ungrateful toward Italy and the task of redemption she has undertaken, blood is thicker than water, and the national spirit still burns brightly. The one heroine of the Italian war is a young girl of Ala. From the terrace of her home, situated amid the vineyards high above the valley of the Adige, and dominating the Austrian positions in front of Ala, Maria Abriani watched the battle that was raging for the possession of the town. The Austrians were firmly intrenched and had succeeded in checking the attack. She quickly realized the advantage that would be gained if the Italians could fire down on the foe from her terrace.

Heedless of the bursting shrapnel and whirring bullets, she succeeded in making her way through the vineyard to the Italian lines. A brief parley ensued. She readily persuaded the commander of her sincerity; he detached a company of bersaglieri to follow her. By devious paths she led the way safely to her home, unnoticed by the Austrians. Going to the edge of the terrace, she indicated to the officer in charge the Austrian positions. Then suddenly from the terrace a hundred rifles spoke and began pouring an incessant leaden hail on the Austrians entrenched in the valley below. The latter replied, and the terrace became the scene of a bloody action. Soon the Austrian position became untenable; they were forced to abandon it and fled in confusion. A few hour later the Italians were masters of the city. In recognition of her services she has received the medal for valor in action and is the only woman so honored by Italy in this war.

Today the Italian flag flies from every house in Ala. Yet I found that it is difficult for the Trentini to forget that once before Italian flags flew over many housetops in the Trentino; once before the Italians, under Garibaldi in 1866, stood on the heights overlooking Trent. Then the population exultantly welcomed the Italian liberators. The sequel is well known. For political reasons Italy was obliged to throw away the fruits of her victories. The Trentino was abandoned to its fate. The Austrians returned, hanged, shot, banished, and persecuted those who had sided or even shown sympathy with the Italians. For decades they continued this policy, vainly endeavoring to crush the Italian spirit. Now once more they are being compelled to retire before the Italian "liberator."

Before departing the Austrians threatened with the most dire punishment all those who in the slightest manner should assist or sympathize with the invaders. The behavior of the Trentini would seem to indicate that the lesson of '66 has not been forgotten. It is Italy's duty to prove that there will be no repetition of those painful days, and Italy today intends to fulfill her pledges to redeem the Trentino, which by force majeure she was obliged to abandon a half century ago.

PADEREWSKI ESTATE RUINED

Letter to Pianist Also Tells of Starvation of Polish People.

All that remains on the estate of Ignace Paderewski in the Tarnow district of Poland are the stumps of the trees that once formed the park or forest, many of them planted by the pianist and his especial pride. Everything else has been swept away by the war, according to a letter from a friend in Poland to Paderewski.

Mme. Paderewski said yesterday that the people in this country had little conception of what war had done in Poland.

"There are millions starving today in Poland," she said. "Whole towns have been destroyed and the people are without food and shelter. My husband has received a letter in which his friend says there are 2,000,000 persons living as best they can upon the site of what was until a few months ago the City of Wroclawek, in Russian Poland. This multitude is without food and almost unprotected from the severity of the weather. In all Galicia it is now hard to find a human habitation. The districts of Gorlice, Tarnow, Sarnow, and Grybow are devastated. Of 1,500,000 inhabitants not one is left there. Caught between the contending armies, those who had not fled were wiped out by the fighting between November and August.

"From all parts of Poland the cry is now going up for food. In the effort to stay the pangs of hunger mothers are feeding their children a mixture of chalk and water in place of milk.

"Miss Henrietta Ely of Philadelphia, who is one of the few women allowed to enter Poland recently, has just returned to this country. She came in to see me the other day, and I cried as I listened to her. Miss Ely said that she very often could not eat because of the sight of the starving children, who gathered about to watch the visitors eat or to beg food from them. Poland is desolate, and, to quote Miss Ely, beside her Belgian is a country filled with prosperity."

Paderewski is head and organizer of the National American Committee of the Polish Victims' Relief Fund, and on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 23, before his Chopin recital in Carnegie Hall, he will speak on "Poland, Past and Present." The entire receipts will go to the relief fund.

MRS. PULLMAN AS WAR NURSE

Mrs. Sanger Pullman, a daughter-in-law of the late George M. Pullman of Chicago, who went abroad in June of last year, taking her nephew, Frederick West, for the benefit of his health, came back yesterday. Mrs. Pullman was in Paris at the outbreak of the war, and immediately took a course in nursing, and then volunteered her services at the American Ambulance Hospital at Neuilly. The last five months before leaving France she and her sister, Mrs. Hugh McDonnell, spent as actual nurses in the French Military Hospital, the converted Elysée de Garçons at Bordeaux, where all the other nurses were French.

Mrs. Pullman was worn out by work that kept her engaged from 8:30 o'clock in the morning until 7 at night, and came over for a rest before joining the Dental Department of the American Ambulance Hospital. Her sister will return to the United States soon.

"People over here can have no idea of conditions in France, or of what the actual results of battles mean," said Mrs. Pullman at the McAlpin yesterday. "When you have seen men who are so nearly shot to pieces that it seems impossible for them ever to grow again into the semblance of their original selves, and when you have helped nurse such men, you feel the weight of the war. In my ward I was so fortunate as to lose only one man of the number I had. We had lots of German wounded prisoners, who got just the same attention as the French.

"It was my experience that few, very few, of those who recovered and could be pronounced whole men again, ever wanted to get back into the war. They felt, justly, I think, that they had done all that could be expected of them. I had one man in my ward who had ten wounds—both arms broken, one leg gone, a shot through his lung, and so on, but he gradually was able to get about again."

Germans Sell Furs Here.

ZURICH, Oct. 16, (via London.)—The Leipsic market reports show, that despite the blockade half the entire stock of fox skins, numbering many thousands, has just been sold to the American trade, and also that large consignments of skunk skins were received last week from America.

Germany has refused to supply coal to forty-two Swiss dyestuff factories, on the ground that they are selling goods to enemy countries.

CAPT. REVILLON WAR VICTIM.

Captain Revillon, who was 38 years old, had been twice promoted for bravery on the field and held the rank of Captain at the time of his death. He was a doctor of laws and a graduate of the French School of Political Science, where he studied under M. Leroy-Beaulieu. Captain Revillon was prominent in the financial administration of Revillon Frères and was well known in New York and Montreal, whither he was frequently called by business.

SLEUTHS CAN'T FIND HEINK.

Son of Famous Singer Disappears After Warrant is Issued for Him.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 16.—Chief of Police John Bimson this morning, acting by direction of the Police and Fire Commission, went before Recorder James F. Carroll and swore out a warrant for the arrest of Henry Schumann-Heink, ex-clerk of the Recorder's Court and son of the famous contralto. The affidavit on which the warrant was based charged that Heink embezzled $800 of the funds of the court intrusted to his care.

Detectives Lord and Keppler went to Caldwell, where Heink has been living at the home of his mother with his wife, but found the house closed. They reported that they were unable to serve the warrant. Search for Heink will begin at once. The same detectives went to Caldwell yesterday with a summons, and Mrs. Heink was there and accepted the paper on behalf of her husband, saying he would return later. While the charge is based upon an apparent shortage of $000 reported by an expert accountant, there is another matter of $3,200 in another fund not cleared up, and which is still under investigation. Heink was under $5,000 bond.

SUFFRAGE TO LOSE, N. J. LEADERS THINK

ONLY FOUR PREDICT VICTORY

Of 25 Who Express Opinions, 20 Believe Women Will Be Beaten in Tuesday's Election.

Four predictions of victory for woman suffrage, one estimate of a close vote and twenty predictions of defeat have been received from New Jersey's county political leaders whom THE NEW YORK TIMES asked to forecast the results of Tuesday's vote on the suffrage amendment to the Constitution.

Requests for opinions were sent to the twenty-one Democratic and twenty-one Republican Chairmen of county committees. Twenty-five of the forty-two have expressed their views. The four who expect their counties to favor suffrage are the two Chairmen in Cape May County and the two in Passaic County. The Republican Chairman in Gloucester County says the vote there will be very close.

The forecasts follow:

Where Suffrage Is Strong.

CAPE MAY COUNTY.

Cape May, N. J., Oct. 15.

Indications for light vote in Cape May County in favor of woman suffrage.
E. O. HOWELL, JR.,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Cape May County.

Ocean City, N. J., Oct. 15.

It looks as though suffrage might win in Cape May County.
JOSEPH G. CHAMPION,
Chairman Republican Committee, Cape May County.

GLOUCESTER COUNTY.

Woodbury, N. J., Oct. 16.

Suffrage and Anti-Suffrage Committees are both conducting active campaigns in Gloucester County. Indications are that the State will be close.
FRANCIS C. DAVIS,
Chairman Republican Committee, Gloucester County.

PASSAIC COUNTY.

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 16.

Both John Boylan and Frederick Van Blarcom, Democratic and Republican leaders, respectively, said today that the outlook in Passaic County was favorable to the suffragists.

Where Suffrage Is Weak.

ATLANTIC COUNTY.

Hammonton, N. J., Oct. 15.

Although personally in favor of the amendment myself, I fear it will be defeated in this county. W. L. BLACK,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Atlantic County.

Hammonton, N. J., Oct. 16.

A careful canvass for the forecast of the vote on suffrage next Tuesday indicates the amendment will be defeated in Atlantic County by a decided majority. The "suffs" have made an excellent and exhaustive campaign, many prominent citizens in the county advocating their cause in the wine-making districts. Foreign vote will be almost to a unit against suffrage.
T. LEWIS O'DONNELL,
Chairman Republican Committee, Atlantic County.

BERGEN COUNTY.

Hackensack, N. J., Oct. 14.

Bergen County voters are apathetic on the suffrage question. The vote undoubtedly will be light, with a majority against.
RANDOLPH PERKINS,
Chairman Republican Committee, Bergen County.

BURLINGTON COUNTY.

Mount Holly, N. J., Oct. 15.

Indications are that the vote will be very light Tuesday, and my opinion is that the amendment will not be favored by a small majority. FRANCIS H. HEAD,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Bergen County.

Mount Holly, N. J., Oct. 15.

Very little interest being taken on the question of equal suffrage. The vote will probably be light, and chances seem to oppose proposed change.
JOSEPH L. THOMAS,
Chairman Republican County Committee, Burlington County.

CAMDEN COUNTY.

Camden, N. J., Oct. 15.

Woman suffrage in Camden County is gaining rapidly. The President's declaration favoring it has given the movement new life. The Democratic Executive Committee is on record favoring it, and the vote will be a surprising one for the opponents next Tuesday. The people here are just learning that the liquor interests are fighting it harder than any other power, and had we another month it would carry in Camden County. I hardly expect it to carry in this county, but the majority will be small. SAMUEL T. FRENCH, Chairman Democratic Committee, Camden County.

ESSEX COUNTY.

Orange, N. J., Oct. 14.

Among the voters of Essex County the preponderance of sentiment is decidedly against the suffrage for women. In my opinion, the women will be defeated by a large majority. Only a small proportion of women here favor it. The majority see no prospective advantage in having a vote, and are content to leave the machinery of Government in the hands of their natural protectors. JAMES D. MORIARTY,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Essex County.

HUDSON COUNTY.

Hoboken, N. J., Oct. 15.

I am unable to give an opinion at this time. JOHN J. McGOVERN,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Hudson County.

HUNTERDON COUNTY.

Lebanon, N. J., Oct. 16.

It looks as though woman suffrage would be defeated by a small majority in my county. E. W. SUTTON,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Hunterdon County.

Lambertville, N. J., Oct. 16.

The Republican organization of New Jersey has been absolutely neutral on the woman suffrage question. There appears to be much indifference on the part of voters, indicating a light vote, and in my opinion a defeat of the amendment.
B. FRANK BARKLEY,
Chairman Republican Committee Hunterdon County.

MONMOUTH COUNTY.

Asbury Park, N. J., Oct. 16.

In my opinion, woman suffrage will be defeated in this county. It will be if those opposed to it come out to vote. If it rains, it will be defeated by reason of lack of organization of those who are against it.
S. W. KIRKBRIDE,
Chairman Republican Committee, Monmouth County.

MORRIS COUNTY.

Rockaway, N. J., Oct. 16.

The suffrage women of my county are waging a vigorous battle for the vote. I anticipate a very light vote. Probably 33 per cent. of the registered voters will come out. Of the vote cast three-sevenths will be for suffrage and four-sevenths against it in Morris County. President Wilson never was popular and received a minority vote, so his favoring woman suffrage will have very little favorable influence. I am against woman suffrage, believing that where it has been tried, in Colorado, California, and elsewhere, it has not proved of great advantage and has materially advanced taxes. There are certain times when, and conditions where, women's votes might be advantageous, but on a whole I am of the opinion that the added tax burden offsets these advantages. E. EHLERS,
Chairman Republican Committee, Morris County.

OCEAN COUNTY.

Toms River, N. J., Oct. 14.

My forecast of the vote in Ocean County is that it will be against woman suffrage.
E. C. DISBROW,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Ocean County.

SALEM COUNTY.

Salem, N. J., Oct. 14.

It is my opinion that Salem County will go against the amendment, while I think that suffrage is stronger in some parts of the county than it was six weeks ago.
ISAAC KLEIN,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Salem County.

Salem, N. J., Oct. 16.

Salem County will give a majority against the suffrage amendment. The antis report that they find but little sentiment for the amendment among the women of the county.
D. HARRIS SMITH,
Chairman Republican Committee, Salem County.

SOMERSET COUNTY.

Wilmington, N. J., Oct. 14.

I believe the proposition will be defeated by at least 1,000 majority in Somerset County. EDWARD E. COOPER,
Chairman Republican Committee, Somerset County.

SUSSEX COUNTY.

Sussex, N. J., Oct. 14.

Two to one in favor of anti-suffrage.
F. E. ARMSTRONG,
Chairman Republican Committee, Sussex County.

UNION COUNTY.

Elizabeth, N. J., Oct. 16.

L. T. Russell, Democratic County Chairman, forecast last week that suffrage would be beaten two to one in Elizabeth, and 3 to 2 in Union County, outside Elizabeth.

Plainfield, N. J., Oct. 15.

Amendment will be defeated in this county. The majority will depend on how large a vote is cast.
WILLIAM NEWCORN,
Chairman Republican Committee, Union County.

WARREN COUNTY.

Belvidere, N. J., Oct. 16.

It is the opinion of the best judges in Warren County that it will not carry.
P. MILLER,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Warren County.

Phillipsburg, N. J., Oct. 16.

The reports as I get them throughout the county indicate the defeat of woman suffrage in Warren County.
ARTHUR KNOWLES,
Chairman Democratic Committee, Warren County.

Assembly Districts 19, 20, 21, Division H, form on Greene St., north of Waverley Place.

Assembly Districts 22, 23, and Kings County Woman Suffrage Association Division I, form on Mercer Street, north of Waverley Place.

Queens Borough Woman Suffrage Party, Assembly Districts 1 through 4, form on East Tenth Street, from Fifth Avenue to University Place.

Richmond Borough Woman Suffrage Party forms on East Tenth Street, from University Place to Broadway.

The labor women form on University Place, north of East Tenth Street.

The Equal Franchise League forms on West Eleventh Street.

The Collegiate League forms on West Eleventh Street.

The occupational and professional groups are so big that they have had to be divided. They will form in general on West Eleventh Street.

So many nurses have enrolled that there will be a special location for nurses, who will form on East Eleventh Street, near Fifth Avenue.

sex, Hudson, and Camden by the antis, even with the aid of suffrage victories in Passaic, which admittedly is debatable ground, and in some of the other counties in the northern part of the State, where there is a large vote.

In Passaic County, where Paterson, the home of rampant socialism, is situated, the leaders of both the older parties declare that they look upon a victory for woman suffrage as well within the realms of possibility. This is denied in other quarters.

Representatives from practically all the twenty-one Democratic county committees were here this afternoon when there was a meeting of the Democratic State Committee. Prior to the meeting, which was for the purpose of discussing campaign plans, there was much informal discussion regarding the probable outcome of the special election on Tuesday. Although the Democratic Party leaders disclaim any active interest in the fight the committee members showed no hesitation in expressing their personal views. They said the suffrage cause was aided materially by President Wilson's endorsement. A majority, however, regarded the defeat of the suffrage amendment as probable but there was the widest difference of opinion as to decisiveness of the popular verdict. Some of the committeemen said they would vote for the amendment though they did not believe it would be ratified at the polls.

The Republican leaders here were just as anxious as were the Democrats to have it appear that the influence of the organization had not been placed in the balance. It was not denied, however, that President Wilson's endorsement would have an effect on the organization Republicans, directly opposite to what it has had on some of the Democrats.

The advocates of woman suffrage have made by far the most spectacular as well as the most energetic campaign. The highways and byways of New Jersey have been ringing with their spirited oratory for weeks, they have flooded the State with literature, and they have had the aid of reinforcement from the three Eastern States, which will be the battle ground for the suffragists from now on, as well as from many of the Western States where women already have the ballot.

Under a decision handed down today by Justice Francis J. Swayze in Jersey City the counting of the ballots at the special election on Tuesday will not begin until after 9 o'clock in the evening.

DEBATE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mrs. A. J. George and Mrs. Raymond Brown on Opposite Sides.

"We are not doing our work one bit better than the men," said Mrs. A. J. George of Boston, an anti-suffragist, speaking in a suffrage debate before the Home Economics Association of Greater New York in the Metropolitan Building yesterday afternoon, and from a front seat Mrs. Raymond Brown, President of the New York State Suffrage Association, who was to speak for votes for women, applauded vigorously.

"We believe that men are doing their work nobly," said Mrs. Brown later, "but no more so than the women. We believe that women can make a contribution to the government as citizens, not because they are better than men, but because men have only half the intelligence of the world. To add that of the women with their experience and their talents, can any one doubt that conditions will be improved? We are not trying to force suffrage on any one. We believe there are few women who do not wish to vote, and we do not think it is right, to say nothing of generous, that the few should work against the women who consider the vote not only a right but a duty."

Mrs. Brown said that, the women having no vote, the balance of power was thrown in small towns in the hands of young unmarried men.

"In my home town on Long Island," she said, "the greater part of the property is in the hands of the women, but a number of young unmarried men and some colored men form the majority of the voters."

BRYAN AND BORAH SPEAK.

Ex-Secretary Talks Free of Charge for Suffrage and Gives $100.

The Women's Political Union of New Jersey ended its campaign in the northern districts of the State for equal suffrage last night with mass meetings at Paterson and Newark, in which William Jennings Bryan, United States Senator William E. Borah, and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise were the speakers. Mr. Bryan not only spoke free of charge but was announced as a contributor of $100 to the campaign fund. His speech was practically the same at both places.

At Paterson Mayor Robert Fordyce was Chairman of the meeting, which filled the huge auditorium of the Paterson High School with a big overflow. Mr. Bryan stressed the argument that the character of much of the opposition to woman's suffrage was an indication that women ought to have the vote. Senator Borah said that suffrage would not remedy all the evils of public life nor eliminate all present injustices in politics, but he praised the intuition of women, which he said would search out many wrongs that men could never fathom. He argued for the extension of the suffrage as an undeniable right in a true democracy, and predicted that this was the last campaign in which any ex-President would come out against suffrage.

In Newark there was a bigger crowd outside of Krueger Auditorium than there was inside, although the house was packed. The overflow meeting was kept in order by police and firemen till Mr. Bryan appeared and addressed it before going inside.

"The burden of proof," he said, "is on the opponents of woman's suffrage. The most convincing argument in favor of it is that a mother has the right to a voice in determining the environment that should surround her children. The tariff question, for instance, has never been fully settled, but the suffrage problem is disposed of permanently when women get the vote."

Rabbi Wise declared that the antis would be the first to rush to the polls when women get the ballot. "Military preparedness," he said, "means war, and there will never be a beginning of an end of war until women vote. If equal suffrage wins in New Jersey it will win in New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts."

The Chairman of this meeting was Mrs. Mina Van Winkle, one of the leaders in suffrage work in Newark, who had taken no active part in the campaign since her husband's death two weeks ago.

MRS. STANTON RAN IN 1866.

Suffragists Recall Event as Part of Centennial Celebration.

On Oct. 11, 1866, THE NEW YORK TIMES announced in its news columns that "Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton announces herself a candidate for Congress in the Eighth District."

Last night, at Tenth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, that event was celebrated along with the 100th anniversary of her birth. Mrs. Stanton when she announced her candidacy was living at 464 West Thirty-fourth Street. The house is still standing and the meeting was held at the nearest corner to it. Mrs. Stanton received 24 votes for the office.

Mrs. Nora Blatch De Forest, granddaughter of Mrs. Stanton, presided at the meeting last night. The speakers made a direct appeal to their audience to grant the franchise to the women of New York in the present election, and Ida Husted Harper, who wrote "The History of Woman Suffrage," in conjunction with Mrs. Stanton, and who also wrote "The History of the Life of Susan B. Anthony," spoke of the three generations in Mrs. Stanton's family working for the enfranchisement of women.

It was Mrs. Harper's maiden out-door speech, and it was received with great enthusiasm.

On Oct. 20 Mrs. Robert G. Ingersoll will give a reception for the Centennial Committee at her residence in Gramercy Park, and on Oct. 30 there will be a big luncheon at the Hotel Astor, which will close the Stanton celebration.

HONOR CENTENARY OF DR. LILIENTHAL

LONG A LEADER IN PROGRESS

Always Opposed Separate Jewish National Spirit and Put Country Above Religion.

How great the debt which modern Judaism and the land of his adoption owe to Rabbi Max Lilienthal, a leader in Israel and an American citizen unhyphenated, was the theme of the services held yesterday morning at the Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth.

Prominent men, among them two trustees of the Temple, who listened years ago to the religious instruction of the Rev. Dr. Lilienthal, were present, as were also many of his kin.

Rabbi Joseph Silverman, who delivered the eulogy, had himself sat at the feet of the noted religious teacher and was by him influenced to become a rabbi. The text of the occasion was taken from the Second Book of Kings, second chapter and portions of the eleventh and twelfth verses, as follows: "There appeared a chariot of fire and parted them both asunder, and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven. And Elisha saw it and cried out: My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof."

The speaker told of the turning points in the life of Dr. Lilienthal as developing a great work which on his death in 1882 fell as the mantle of a prophet of old upon the shoulders of the Elishas of generations to come.

"On this very day," said the Rev. Dr. Silverman, "one hundred years ago, that is, on Oct. 16, 1815, the late Dr. Max Lilienthal was born in Munich, Bavaria. I feel constrained, I may say strongly impelled, by many reasons to devote this morning's discourse to the life of Dr. Lilienthal and its significance.

Meant Much to Many Men.

"Dr. Max Lilienthal has meant a great deal in the formative period of many men and women in this city and in this congregation, especially to those who attended his day school, which he successfully conducted here from 1850 to 1854. To others, even of this congregation, he was bound by ties of blood, of kinship, and of friendship. He had many friends in Cincinnati and the West and in Europe, all of whom are united with us today in spirit in doing honor to a man to whom honor is due.

"Previous to his establishing of his school in this city, Dr. Lilienthal was chief rabbi of three New York congregations. He was elected to head three congregations in 1845, and held the position, a most difficult one, for five years. There are many still living in this congregation who heard him preach who were held spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. The crucial point of difference between Dr. Lilienthal and many of the members of those three congregations was a progressive tendency, because of which he finally felt constrained to sever his relations with the synagogues. He was not yet a reformer in those days. He was not, however, wedded to orthodoxy absolutely, for he took his stand on the basis of traditional Judaism with an open mind for such changes as conservative progress dictated.

"He was charged by the reformers with being inconsistent with his advanced thinking, and he was renounced by the orthodox as being untrue to the strict interpretation of the Scriptures and the law. Neither side understood him. In those days of transition he considered the median line to be best. He went in 1855 to Cincinnati, a time which was regarded as the most important period of American Judaism. I must here pay my respects and tribute to Cincinnati Jewry. From 1854 until the eighties Cincinnati was the storm centre of American Judaism. In those days it contained a colony of intelligent, cultured, truly religious, and American progressive Jews.

Work in the West.

"They possessed foresight and insight and practical sense in that they recognized in the East two men of exceptional intelligence, talent, principle, convictions, and character, Isaac M. Wise and Max Lilienthal. Neither New York nor Albany could hold those two. In that Queen City of the West they cast their lot. Their work as individuals in their respective congregations and as colleagues in communal affairs, built up a stalwart, healthy, reform Judaism that set the norm for progressive Judaism throughout America.

"Every important institution in Reform Judaism started in Cincinnati or received its impetus from Cincinnati. There the progressive Jewish paper, The American Israelite, of which in the beginning Dr. Lilienthal was associate editor with Dr. Wise, was begun. There the Union of American Hebrew Congregations was born; there the Hebrew Union College was instituted. There the first real union of rabbis was conceived by Dr. Lilienthal and carried into effect in the Rabbinical Literary Association, of which he was the organizer and President. It was the precursor of the Central College of American Rabbis. There Dr. Lilienthal established the first Jewish religious paper for children, known as The Sabbath Visitor. There the American ritual, known as the Minlag America, had a fair trial in the congregations of Drs. Wise and Lilienthal. Thus a spirit was created throughout the land for a unified ritual which eventuated in the Union Prayer Book of the Reform Congregations.

"In Cincinnati Dr. Lilienthal broke entirely with the Orthodox wing and allied himself with Reform Judaism. The break came because he refused to attend services on the ninth day of the month Ab in commemoration of the destruction of the Temple at Jerusalem. He contended that while the destruction of Jerusalem may have been deplorable at the time there was no longer need for mourning, as the event had proved a blessing in disguise, in so far as it led to the dispersal of Israel and the beginning of the mission of Judaism as a world religion. In his view every Jew was a missionary for Israel.

"Dr. Lilienthal was uncompromisingly opposed to maintaining the separate Jewish national spirit. He regarded the Jew not as a member of a Jewish nationality, but of that nation in which he had obtained citizenship."

Rabbi's Message to the World.

Dr. Silverman, speaking from his own recollections of the life and teachings of Dr. Lilienthal, said the distinguished teacher had often said in the seminary at Cincinnati that the rabbi should consider that he had a message not only for the Jew but for all the world. Therefore Dr. Lilienthal himself seized every oportunity to make his word reach beyond the walls of the synagogue and took a deep interest in civic and political affairs. Hence he entered Christian pulpits, spoke from political rostrums, appeared at meetings of Masonic lodges. His interest in good government, in the education of the masses, and in the progress of the American people caused his name and fame to spread far beyond the confines of Cincinnati, in all things he was a citizen of the United States.

"He never," added Dr. Silverman, "called himself a German-American. He did not believe in hyphenated Americans. He called himself an American Jew. He defined an American Jew as one who in creed was a monotheist—in descent Hebrew, Israelite, or Jew; in all public and private relations an American citizen.

"He waged war on the fanatics who even in his time tried to insert the word God in the Constitution or sought to make allegiance to a church superior to loyalty to country. With all his pent-up patriotism, with all his love of God and man, he proclaimed on a Thanksgiving Day: 'Let us be Americans first, then Jews, Catholics, and Protestants.'"

Against Human Slavery.

It was also explained that Dr. Lilienthal had antagonized the reading of the Bible in the public schools for the reason that such a course would be embarrassing to many of the pupils. His views were upheld by decisions of the Ohio courts. Ever a friend of liberty, Dr. Lilienthal was an abolitionist, but after the war he did much to heal the breach between the North and the South.

Dr. Silverman reserved for the last the story of the career of Dr. Lilienthal in Russia. As a young rabbi Dr. Lilienthal was induced by the Russian Government to leave Germany and to establish schools in the land of the Czar for the ostensible purpose of systematizing the education of the Jews. He found afterward that the enterprise was really intended to force upon the Jews the State religion, and abandoning tempting offers of preferment he came to this country.

CANAL PLOT VERDICT STANDS

No New Trial for Pittsburghers Accused of Steel Conspiracy.

TELLS HOW CANADA LURED OUR FARMERS

WAR AUTHOR OF THE PLAN

After Gaining Control of 1,250,000 Acres of Land He Interested American Bankers.

Special to The New York Times.

ON BOARD THE FIRST TRANSCONTINENTAL TRAIN OVER THE CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY, SASKATOON, Sask., Oct. 16.—The man who mulcted Iowa, Minnesota, and the Dakotas of some thousands of sturdy American farmers, and proportionally increased the able-bodied farming population of Canada, is on this train, viewing with a good deal of quiet satisfaction the results of his nefarious enterprise as shown in the smiling wheat fields, trim, well ordered homesteads, and bustling villages revealed through the car windows.

He is a chunky, comfortable looking Canadian, and he tells the story with a merry twinkle in his keen blue eyes and an accent which reveals that he is no stranger on the other side of the border. He is Colonel A. L. Davidson, and in Canada they call him "The Father of the American Invasion."

He had accomplices in the crime. The Canadian Government, the Canadian newspapers, the railways, and certain Western bankers in the United States all helped. But the Colonel originated the conspiracy and instigated the activities of the others.

The story of how it was brought about puts a new complexion upon a movement much discussed in the United States and still going on. The Canadian Government, the Canadian railways, attractive advertising, farming conditions in America, have all been blamed for the migration. They all had their part in it, but the Colonel and the bankers are newly discovered factors.

In 1902 the Canadian Middle West was hardly settled at all. In the 500-mile stretch of prairie west of Regina—then a tiny little group of frame buildings about the railway station, now a prosperous city of 50,000 inhabitants, with asphalt streets, electric lighting, and hundreds of handsome homes—there were exactly three settlers. By a quick deal, put through at the right moment, the Colonel and certain associates, some of them interested in Canadian railroading, became suddenly possessed of some million and a quarter acres of rich prairie land in this unsettled district, through which the Canadian Northern Railway now runs. But, to sell cheaply and still come out on the right side, they had to dispose of it to settlers and to do it quickly.

Meditating upon how this was to be done, the Colonel found himself in Chicago with his problem still unsolved. Advertising for settlers, even with the advantages he had to offer—good land ready for planting at $8.50 an acre—was too slow. It would take two years to get the kind of farmers that he wanted. He needed help just at this moment; he chanced to run across a group of banker friends all in a mood to chaff the Canadian.

"Hello, Colonel," said one banker. "I hear you've gone into partnership with King Edward, and he has turned over most of Canada to you. Going to take any of your friends in?"

"Sure," said the Colonel promptly. "Let you all in—let you all in on the ground floor. But you'll have to come and see the land first. Come out next week. I'll take you all out in my private car."

Now, the Colonel didn't have a private car, but he was out to sell land and a happy inspiration had struck him. There was more banter, but the Colonel pressed the invitation, and half willingly the bankers accepted. The date was then settled. The Colonel, thinking fast, went over to the Pullman office and hired, conditionally, not a car, but a whole train. Then he called up his banker friends in turn.

"Who are your correspondents in Blankton, Minn., and Farmerville, Iowa, and Ranchtown, Dak.?" he asked. "All right; bring 'em along. We meet in St. Paul on the 25th—a week from today."

There was a Western Bankers' Convention in session in Minnesota which would adjourn the 24th. The Colonel got into communication with bankers of Winnipeg, who hustled to the American bankers a delegation bearing an invitation to visit Winnipeg. Thus shortly after acquiring his million and a quarter acres the Colonel appeared in Winnipeg with two special trainloads of American bankers from the principal agricultural centres of the United States.

They had a good time and returned home appreciating the Colonel as a host and convinced of the value of the Davidson land ooneanza. Many of them, at their own request, were down upon a list of prospective purchasers of sections or half sections when the newly acquired territory should go on the market. All were enthusiastic.

It happened to be the right psychological moment for an agricultural exodus from American territory. Land which the farmers had originally taken up as free homesteads was then worth upward of $75 an acre and readily salable. Yet the American farmer was discontented. He did not like the tariff; he did not like the way the railways were treating him; he did not like the politicians. It was not long before little processions from the border States were trekking across the line. They came in groups of from three to a dozen families. They brought into Canada from $7,500 to $12,000 capital per farmer, (proceeds of the sale of the homesteads left behind,) an initial physical equipment of farming implements, cattle, and horses, and an even more important equipment—a knowledge of the English language, familiarity with the soil and climate, and ability to meet the conditions under which they intended to live. In most of the groups there was at least one holder of land sold to an American banker. They had brought their friends and neighbors with them. These joyfully acquired Colonel Davidson's cheaper land and set about putting it in shape.

In one year 20,000 American farmers crossed the border and took up Canadian land in this hitherto deserted territory. By and by they wrote to friends they had left behind, commending the new enterprise and suggesting co-operation. More groups arrived. They are there yet, and are still coming.

Just about this stage of the story should come statistics, which, however, do not particularly matter here. What is more interesting is that at this particular juncture the train was speeding through a compact, prosperous-looking settlement, where folks stood in the doorways, waved handkerchiefs, and cheered the passing special.

"What's the name of that town?" some one asked the Colonel.

"The name of that place, I believe," said he, "is Davidson. They named it after me."

16 PLUNGE TO DEATH IN A DERAILED CAR

Union Pacific Motor Train Wrecked in Kansas at Bridge Weakened by Rains.

CAR ON END IN STREAM

65 Passengers, Largely Women School Teachers, Pitched Into a Struggling Heap.

RANDOLPH, Kan., Oct. 16.—Of the sixty-five occupants of a Union Pacific motor train who slid into a heap at the bottom of a passenger car when it plunged on end into Fancy Creek today, sixteen lost their lives, according to the best estimates tonight. Most of these were drowned in the car. Only four escaped unhurt.

Ten bodies have been recovered from the mud and water which filled the bottom of the upturned car to the depth of many feet. Here is a revised list of the recovered dead:

ATWOOD, Dr. LOUIS, Topeka.
GILES, MARY, Manhattan, Kan.
JELLIN, Miss ALMA J., Garrison, Kan.
CHAPMAN, Mrs. STELLA, Manhattan, Kan.
REPSER, Miss ETHEL, Stockdale, Kan.
SHAW, A. O., Tecumseh, Neb.
SMITH, THEODORE, Tecumseh, Neb.
RETZER, Miss ETHEL, Stockdale, Kan.
RETZER, S. O., Stockdale, Kan.
STONEBERG, CARL, Randolph, Kan.
PETERSON, Miss DELIA, Stockdale, Kan.

The train consisted of a passenger coach and a combination baggage and mail car. About fifteen feet of the forward end of the passenger car was buried in water and mud. The baggage and mail car remained on the rails.

Many of the passengers were young women school teachers on their way to a teachers' meeting to have been held here today. All went into a heap when the car struck a bridge weakened by three inches of rain and plunged downward into the swollen creek.

The rescue of the passengers was extremely difficult, and many were badly injured after they had been extricated from the half submerged car. It was necessary for the survivors to crawl up the sides of the car, using the window ledges and seats as the rungs of a ladder, and many fell repeatedly after almost achieving success. Nearly all became unconscious from loss of blood or shock on finally reaching safety.

No occupant of the forward end of the car, used as a smoking compartment, has yet been discovered among the survivors. The smoking compartment was submerged almost immediately after the abutment gave way, and those in it had little or no chance to escape. Three bodies have been taken from this section and, though they were badly injured, death occurred from drowning. All of the bodies yet remaining in the car are in this section.

O. M. Warner, motorman on the wrecked car, was thrown through a front window into the water. He waded out and ran to summon aid.

"I couldn't see anything the matter with the track ahead of me," he said tonight. "I suppose the earth had been washed from under the trac kat the end of the bridge. There was enough clinging to the ties to deceive the eye. The first knowledge I had that anything was wrong was when I was thrown through the glass in front of the car into about four feet of water. I was unhurt and got on my feet in time to see the car hanging with the front end straight down over the abutment. It seemed to hang there a half minute, then slowly settled down in the water, standing almost perpendicular all the time."

BOY ESCAPES FROM COURT.

Irving Weiss Tells Elevator Man Story That Wins Freedom.

Irving Weiss, 15 years old, escaped from the Children's Court yesterday by tricking his guard, when he was about to be arraigned with another boy on the charge of alleged complicity in the theft of dress goods valued at $530 from a truck in front of the store of Ehrensoll & Deutch, 30 West Fifteenth Street, on Oct. 8. With William Geier, also 15, Weiss had been held by the Children's Society, and the two were taken to the court by Cornelius Leary, a special officer of the society. Geier was in a room on the first floor and Weiss was in the corridor with Leary. Leary placed Weiss on the elevator and instructed the operator to take him into the courtroom on the second floor, and went back for Geier. The operator did no hear what Leary said, and asked Weiss about it. Weiss replied:

"Oh, he's keeping the other boy for trial, and he told me to get out."

"Go back to the street," ordered the elevator man, putting Weiss off on the second floor, where he passed the open courtroom door, walked down the stairs to the Eleventh Street entrance, and, running around the corner, jumped on a Third Avenue car. Weiss was not missed until Justice Collins called his name. He lives with his parents at 339 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn. The home of his school chum, Geier, is at 204 South Second Street, Brooklyn. The police were asked to find Weiss.

FILM PLANT BURNS; 2 DEAD.

Several Others Injured When Explosion Starts Blaze in Atlanta Factory.

ATLANTA, Oct. 16.—Two women lost their lives and two others were probably fatally burned today in a fire which swept the offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, on the second floor of an office building here. The explosion of an electric fuse in a room where picture films were being prepared for shipment is believed to have started the blaze, which spread so rapidly that the score of women and girls employed in the place were trapped. Firemen made several spectacular rescues.

The dead are Miss Clara Westbrook and Miss Lottie Ham and the seriously burned Mrs. Lucille Davis and Miss Beulah Yews. Several other employes sustained lesser injuries from the flames and from jumping.

LITTLE WOULD SHIFT BLAME IN K-2 CASE

Says Submarine's Commander Assented to Builders' Promise to Remedy Defects.

NO SUCH AGREEMENT FOUND

At the Admiral's Request the Court-Martial Is Postponed Until November 1.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Rear Admiral William Nelson Little, whose trial by court-martial was ordered by the Secretary of the Navy yesterday, called on Secretary Daniels today and requested more time to prepare his case. The court-martial had been ordered to meet at Boston Monday, and Admiral Little explained to Secretary Daniels that so early a date would not give him sufficient time to prepare his defense. Mr. Daniels accordingly directed the court-martial be postponed until Nov. 1. Admiral Little was retired on Dec. 31, 1914, having reached the age limit.

In a statement to the Navy Department with reference to alleged defective work on the submarine K-2 for the inspection of which he was responsible, Admiral Little asserted that the commanding officer of the submarine assented to an agreement that the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, which was building the K-2, would make good "for all time" any trouble resulting from alleged careless workmanship in the battery of the vessel. The Commander of K-2, which is now at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, is Lieutenant Radford Moses. The Navy Department's inspector of machinery at the Fore River plant, who succeeded Admiral Little in that capacity there, reported to the department that he could find no record on file of any agreement of the character indicated by Admiral Little.

The Navy Department today gave out a memorandum showing that on Oct. 1 Captain Ridley McLean, Judge Advocate General of the Navy, wrote at Secretary Daniels's direction to Admiral Little at his residence, 547 Riverside Drive, New York, with reference to a statement made by Admiral Little concerning his final inspection of K-2 prior to the delivery of the submarine to the Government by the Fore River Company. The memorandum contains extracts from Captain McLean's letter quoting a statement of Admiral Little that there had been an agreement by which the Fore River Company would make good "for all time" any defects in the battery of K-2 due to careless workmanship and a statement of the Inspector of Machinery who succeeded Admiral Little that he could find no record of any such agreement.

Following are the extracts from Captain McLean's letter contained in the memorandum given out by the Navy Department:

"1. The question of the condition of the storage batteries of the K-2 at the time of its acceptance has by the direction of the Secretary been under investigation. It is noted that in the above reference, (Rear Admiral Little' indorsement dated June 2, 1915,) you state, Paragraph 3:

"'After full deliberation on all the facts and the statements of said officers and contractor's representatives, and with the officer who was to command the boat concurring, the Inspector informed the contractor that in consideration of his agreement to stand back of the battery for all time as to the alleged careless workmanship of Burning, the thorough overhauling of the battery would not then be required.'

"2. The Bureau of Steam Engineering inquired of the present Inspector of Machinery at Fore River whether or not the files of that office showed that the above agreement had been reduced to writing. The Inspector replied:

"'There is no entry in the files or elsewhere on record in the file record here that can be found relating to the agreement, between the contractors and the Inspector of Machinery regarding the making good of defects that might develop in the service.'"

SUBMARINES' ENGINES CAUSE MUCH TROUBLE

Recent War Game Found Undersea Craft in Unsatisfactory Condition.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 16.—Submarine K-2, the cause of the coming court-martial of Rear Admiral W. N. Little, is one of the four submarines composing the Fourth Division of the Atlantic submarine flotilla, commanded by Rear Admiral Albert W. Grant. She, with H-6, H-1, and K-5 made the runs to the New York Navy Yard early last Spring from Pensacola, the four boats traveling under their own power and being reported as performing quite a feat. Then came the Spring war game, but none of the K type or other submarines were found to be in condition for the manoeuvres.

Admiral Grant received a free hand in reorganizing his flotilla, with the understanding the submarines were to be left alone until every one was renovated and in the pink of condition. But the war game for Oct. 4 was announced, and Admiral Grant was ordered by Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, Comander in chief of the Atlantic fleet, to have his submarines in the game. This meant hurry up work, and the K boats went out with their repairs hardly completed.

When the game ended there were only one or two submarines in good condition. One of the D type, in a damaged condition, was towed in by the destroyer MacDonough from off Block Island. The engine troubles of some others caused Admiral Grant to send a special report to the Navy Department.

Yesterday one of G submarines broke a crankshaft on her port engine, and in the other submarines officers and men are working early and late on repairs.

For a year or so, before Admiral Grant took command of the submarine flotilla, Commander Yates Sterling, Jr., then commander of the flotilla and now Chief of Staff in the same organization, sent many reports to the department bearing on the troubles of submarines.

Last Thursday Admiral Grant lectured at the Naval War College on submarines, and gave his opinion on the condition of the undersea fighters behind closed doors. It is said he was very sharp in his criticisms.

Early this month the M-1 was launched at Quincy, just three years and a month after the contract was signed, which caused the remark in the flotilla here that the same concern had built a number of submarines for the British Government in less than a year, with their engines tried out continually by British officers for ten consecutive days, against ten hours' running in trials for the United States Navy.

Admiral Grant is absent from the flagship Columbia, apparently en route to Washington for a conference with Secretary Daniels.

All the submarines, except the K type, leave Monday for the new submarine base at New London, where they will remain for the Winter for manoeuvres. When the K boats complete their torpedo target practice in Narragansett Bay they will go to the New York Navy Yard to overhaul for a month and thence to Pensacola for the Winter.

CONSIDER CASTELLANE CASE

Pope's Special Committee Is Expected to Decide Against the Count.

PARIS, Oct. 16.—The Committee of Cardinals appointed by Pope Benedict to reconsider the decisions of the Rota Tribunal and the Segnatura Tribunal in the suit of Count Boni de Castellane for the annulment of his marriage to Anna Gould, now the Duchess of Talleyrand, met yesterday to examine the positions of the litigants and the previous decisions of the Church courts.

The committee, composed of Cardinals de Lai, Van Rossum, and Bisleti, adjourned without reaching a definite conclusion, but is expected to confirm the last ruling of the Rota, which maintained that in the eyes of the Church the marriage as indissoluble.

Count de Castellane's appeal to the Vatican courts has been pending since 1910. If he should be successful, he would have religious sanction for marrying again, and might obtain possession of his three children, who were given into the custody of their mother when she obtained a divorce in the Paris courts, Nov. 14, 1906.

MORE CHARLTON CASE DELAY

Asked Not Only by Prisoner's Lawyer, but by a Medical Witness.

COMO, Oct. 16.—In addition to the request of Micelli Picardi, counsel for Porter Charlton, for a postponement of Charlton's trial on the charge of murdering his wife at Lake Como, Dr. de Dominicis, who had been asked to give an opinion regarding the autopsy on the body of the alleged victim, will also ask for a postponement; it was learned today. The expert desires additional time to complete his work.

The trial has already been once postponed, the new date set being Oct. 18. It was announced yesterday that Charlton's attorneys requested additional time to prepare his case.

TO ENFORCE COTTON ACT.

Government Holds Tax on Futures Originated in the House.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Provisions of the Cotton Futures act, held unconstitutional by United States Judge Hough in New York, will be enforced pending the outcome of an appeal to the Supreme Court. Officials of the Treasury and Agriculture Departments charged with administration of the act, have reached this decision after a conference.

Judge Hough declared that as a revenue measure the act should have originated in the House, not the Senate. It will be contended that the tax provision of the bill did originate in the House as an amendment to the Senate measure.

40% of the Women are not so built that they can be fitted in the ready-to-wear stock sizes, 16, 34, 42, etc., which are all patterned on the one arbitrary proportion. These women have, therefore, been subjected to the inconvenience and exorbitant prices of made-to-measure garments

Lane Bryant has recognized their needs and, after years of specialized study and experimenting, has perfected individual, basic patterns and can fit you from stock, no matter what your figure or bust measure. Sizes 35½ to 58.

A complete organization—designers, buyers and salespeople—under supervision of the owner, and the entire main floor are devoted exclusively to every item of apparel, made to fit and become the 40% of the women who have heretofore been neglected.

BIG GUNS ON CARS TO PATROL COAST

ARMY EXPERTS WEIGH PLAN

Problem of Building Carriages to Withstand the Shock of Firing Must Be Solved.

TERRIFIC STRAIN ON WHEELS

14-Inch Guns May Be Moved Quickly from Point to Point, Seldom in View of Any Invader.

The problem of how to mount giant guns or howitzers on railroad trucks and to transport them from point to point along the American coasts, where they can be put in action quickly to repel any attempt of a hostile force to effect a landing in this country, is receiving the attention of the ordnance and artillery experts of the United States army.

The railroads are already here, the guns can be manufactured as rapidly as needed, and there is every reason to believe that the problem of designing and constructing a railroad flat car strong enough to transport a howitzer, and even to withstand the terrific shock of the discharge of the piece, will be solved. THE NEW YORK TIMES has learned on unquestionable authority that this scheme of creating a great coast railway defense system which will protect the American seaboards from Maine to Mexico, and from San Diego to the Canadian border, is now being considered by the military authorities. It has been proved that an eight-inch howitzer can be mounted on a heavy steel flat car, and, furthermore, that it can be operated from that car without being remounted on concrete or other emplacements in the ground. The problem remaining is to find a car capable of withstanding the discharge of a twelve-inch or fourteen-inch gun.

Gun-Carrying Car Abroad.

"We have not the details at hand, but we know that in Europe one of the belligerents is using an eight-inch gun that is mounted on a car of some kind," said an army officer yesterday, "and there is no reason why we cannot do the same thing with a gun of the ten-inch, twelve-inch, or even the fourteen-inch type. The answer does not seem to be so hard to find as you might think."

An ordnance expert said the construction problem was to take the strain off the wheels of the car when the gun was discharged, and also to take up what he described as the "lateral thrust of the weapon." The force of the recoil, in the case of a high angle gun of the howitzer type, this officer explained, was downward and sideways.

"We know that we can devise a gun and carriage which can be quickly mounted with the aid of a derrick car on sites selected in advance," he continued. "The problem now is to get a car from which it will not be necessary to transfer the gun. Keep the gun over the car all the time, so that if the enemy gets our range we can shift it further north or south or in any other direction desired, and then open up on him from the new position before he can correct his range. As you see, the biggest part of the problem is the car. If we do get the car, you can rest assured that we will do our utmost to keep the facts concerning it strictly a government secret.

New York and Boston Vulnerable.

"Take Boston for instance. From in front Boston cannot be taken. But it could be taken from the rear if the enemy managed to land north or south of the city—for example, near Salem or Beverly. If we had the cars it is an even chance that we could run them to the threatened point and make it a mighty interesting undertaking for the enemy. Long Island furnishes a similar situation, so far as New York City is concerned.

"It is possible to transport the guns and mount them on previously-selected sites, but suppose you removed the gun from the truck and before you could get emplaced the enemy found your range and opened fire. You would have to desert the gun. Thus, you see the advantage of having a truck from above which the gun is not removed and to the body of which the gun can be lowered quickly if necessary to move.

"As for the coast railroads, the biggest part of the coast line is now paralleled by them or else reached by them at practically every point except north of San Francisco, where an enemy possibly could hope to effect a landing. Between Maine and Delaware Bay the system is almost perfect and there is just a spot here and there where the gun trains would be visible from the sea. The disadvantages due to exposure to view at those places could be overcome in several different ways.

"South of Delaware Bay down the Atlantic and around the Gulf Coast there is a great deal of coast territory that is marshy or swampy and this of course would render difficult the landing of any hostile force. But there are many solid pieces of ground that abut into the water and that could be used. Fortunately for us, in nearly every instance a railroad terminates on those solid points or else touches them."

The Maine Central lines are available for the protection of the Maine coast from Eastport along the Machias Bay coast to Harrington and to Hancock Point. The Bangor & Aroostook runs to Belfast, further south, at about the middle point of the Maine coast, through Rockland and Bath on to Portland. The Grand Trunk also would be available for service in the Portland territory, and south of Portland and along the few miles of New Hampshire coast through Portsmouth and on to Boston, via Beverly and Salem, the Boston & Maine offers a line for national defense purposes.

From Boston, the New York, New Haven & Hartford system furnishes lines that would provide quick service for the protection of Cohasset, Mansfield, Plymouth, Barnstable, Wellfleet, Provincetown, New Bedford, and the intermediate country clear through to the Rhode Island line. The same road also serves the exposed coast of Rhode Island and Connecticut through Stonington, Mystic, New London, New Haven, Bridgeport, Stamford, to New Rochelle and New York City.

Long Island Rail Defenses.

The rail defenses of the exposed coasts of Long Island are no less effective. On the Atlantic side Long Island is skirted its entire length from the Rockaways, through Amityville, Patchogue, Southampton, and Amagansett to Montauk Point, and on the Sound side from Oyster Bay to Greenport, all these and the intermediate region being served by the Long Island system of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey and the Pennsylvania systems touch practically every spot where an invading army could hope to effect a landing in New Jersey from Sandy Hook to Cape May on Delaware Bay.

From Eastport, Me., to Delaware Bay the only exposed places are short in length and it would require no great outlay of money to build spurs back of them and out of range of enemy guns. One of these exposed places is between the Cape Cod Canal and Plymouth; another is near Buzzards Bay, and there are one in Rhode Island and another in Connecticut. From Eastport to Cape May the railways are practically out of view of any enemy fleet, and yet within range of that enemy no matter where he might try to effect a landing.

South of Delaware Bay the situation is not so good as it is to the north. The Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington Railway could be used in the defense of the Delaware side of the bay, which runs to a point within a short distance of the tip of Cape Henlopen, near Lewes. Across the bay, in Maryland, the Baltimore, Chesapeake & Atlantic terminates at Ocean City, while the Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington furnishes protection for the narrow strip of coast that touches the Virginia boundary line near Welbourne.

On the Southern Coast.

Accomac and Northampton Counties, Virginia, on the narrow pensinsula that juts out from Maryland, furnish transportation for the coast defense guns over the New York, Philadelphia & Norfolk Railway from a point near Cape Charles to the Maryland line. The coast of Virginia from Cape Henry South is traversed by the Norfolk Southern Railway, which also runs along the North Carolina coast through Elizabeth City on Albermarle Sound to Pamlico Sound. The road from Vandervere, N. C., to Newberne, N. C., is the Washington & Vandevere, while the Atlantic Coast Line system runs to Wilmington.

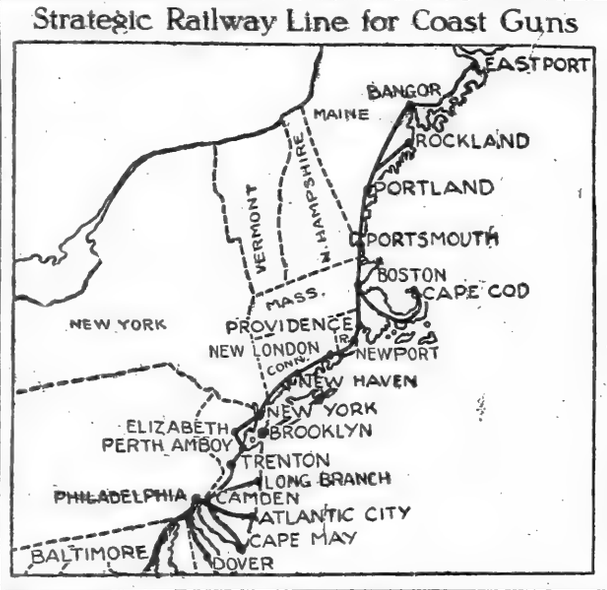
The Florida East Coast Railway skirts the Atlantic seaboard of that State its entire distance to Key West and passes through St. Augustine, Daytona, Palm Beach, and Miami. On the Gulf coast the protection is not so good. The Louisville & Nashville runs to Pensacola and the Apalachicola Northern to the seaport of Apalachicola. The Franklin County coast is reached by the Georgia, Florida & Alabama Railway, while the Seaboard Air Line runs to Cedar Key, and the Atlantic Coast Line to the Citrus County coast. Several lines reach Tampa.

In Alabama and Mississippi.

The Louisville & Nashville runs along the Alabama coast from Mobile to the Mississippi line, while both that road and the Pensacola, New Orleans & Mobile are available for military purposes east of Mobile. In Mississippi the Louisville & Nashville runs along the entire coast. From New Orleans the New Orleans & Northeastern runs east across Lake Pontchartrain, the Louisville & Nashville to Lake Borgne, on the gulf, and two other lines serve the country south to the Mississippi Delta.

The great Texas coast is not paralleled all the way by railroads, but its most important points are touched, the north coast by the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé; the Galveston country by the Southern Pacific, the Galveston, Houston & Henderson, and by the International & Great Northern. South of Galveston the principal line is the St. Louis, Brownsville & Mexico.

On the Pacific Coast the situation from a point about 100 miles north of San Francisco to San Diego hardly could be improved upon. Practically the entire coast between the points named is reached by one or more railroads, the principal ones being the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé, the Southern Pacific, the Pajaro Valley Consolidated, the Ocean Shore, and the California Western. Further north the coast railway situation is bad all the way to the Canadian border.



JAPAN IN CONTROL OF RATES TO ORIENT

Orders General Advance on All Cargo from Puget Sound Ports to the Far East.

BLOW TO AMERICAN TRADE

With Transfer of Last Pacific Mail Liner She Begins Campaign of Discrimination.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—With the transfer of the steamship Persia, of the Pacific Mail Line, to the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has ceased to be a factor in transportation on the Pacific Ocean, and Japan succeeds to the control of freight rates to the Orient. Consul General Anderson at Hongkong announces in a report to the State Department that the Japanese Government by means of its subsidy dominates all freight rates and has ordered a general advance of rates on cargoes from the Puget Sound ports to the East. Rates from Japan to the United States will continue as they are.

In this way Japan apparently intends to enjoy absolute control of traffic between this country and the Far East. The new rates are $9 a thousand feet on lumber to Japan and $11 to Manila. The advanced rate on flour is to be $5.58 a barrel to Japan and $6 to Manila. The significance of the new schedule is that it applies to American freight outbound rather than to Japanese freight bound for the United States. Rates on Japanese exports will not be increased. This has always been the policy of the Japanese Government.

Consul General Anderson says that Japanese interests through the subsidies are to control rates for the benefit of Japanese trade with a steady discrimination against American commerce. The situation is regarded as a crisis in transportation to the Orient sure to be dealt with radically by the United States Government in the near future.

"The control of rates to the advantage of Japanese trade," says Consul General Anderson, "is to be practically absolute, for Japanese lines dominate the situation in the Pacific absolutely. Of the 430,000 tons or so of tonnage in all trans-Pacific service available after the withdrawal of the American Line, probably 420,000 tons are Japanese, all controlled wholly, through subsidies, by the Japanese Government. It is becoming quite evident, therefore, that all other trade in and with the Far East is to be under Japanese control.

"With the full pinch of the shortage of tonnage experienced it is becoming more and more evident that no Chinese cargo or through cargo transshipped at Hongkong for the United States by way of the Pacific can be expected from Hongkong until all cargo has been carried from Japanese ports. Naturally the rate of freight to be charged on all such cargo will be all that the traffic will bear, while at the same time freight from Japan will be carried at present rates or at comparatively slight advance.

"One result of this situation is the general understanding among shipping men that the service of Japanese ships between Japan and the United States will be accelerated and strengthened so as to fill gaps caused by the disappearance of the Pacific Mail Steamers from the route, the result being that steamer service between Hongkong and Japan, and Hongkong and the United States by way of Japan, will be weakened and become more of a local service for the time being. Announcement to this end is anticipated shortly.

"A factor in the situation which is likely to be of great importance, in that it will prevent the transfer of Japanese or other ships to the Pacific trade, is the increasing demand for tonnage from the Far East to Europe. So far, as present indications lie, no relief for the trans-Pacific situation is in sight in the transfer of vessels from other parts of the world."

FASSETT BACK IN BELLEVUE.

Night on Broadway Has Sombre Ending for Products Co.'s Head.

Lawrence Taylor Fassett, 58 years old, President of the National Products Company, who was discharged Thursday from Bellevue Hospital by Supreme Court Justice Ford, was taken there again and placed in the psychopathic ward for observation early yesterday morning, after his arrest on charges of intoxication and disorderly conduct.

Shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday morning a taxicab drove up in front of the West 125th Street police station and William Spengeman of 2,074 Eighth Avenue, the chauffeur, ran into the station and asked the police to help him collect a fare of $10.85 from his passenger. He said that he had driven his fare from restaurant to restaurant all during the night, but had been unable to induce him to pay the taxicab bill.

Patrolman Tobin ushered into the station the passenger, who said that he was Lawrence Taylor Fassett, and produced a large roll of bills, saying that he was perfectly able to pay the taxicab driver, but had refrained from considerations of principle. Police Lieutenant Miller ordered Policeman Tobin to arrest Fassett for intoxication and disorderly conduct. Dr. Steele, who was summoned from Knickerbocker Hospital, found Fassett in a violent humor and advised that he should be sent to Bellevue Hospital for observation. At this suggestion signs of anger disappeared and Fassett pleaded against going back to the hospital. He went, however.

Dr. Menas S. Gregory, in charge of the psychopathic ward at Bellevue, when he was there before, advised that Fassett be committed to the Bloomingdale Asylum and predicted that he would recover after a short period of treatment there, and added that, if released, Fassett would probably be back in the hospital within 48 hours. Justice Ford, however, ordered him freed.

THUGS GET $307 PAYROLL.

Choke Harry Brettler, Treasurer of Ideal Art Bent Glass Company.

Harry Brettler of 264 Division Avenue, Brooklyn, Treasurer for the Ideal Art Bent Glass Company, 125 and 127 Baxter Street, was held up and robbed of $307.76, part of the weekly payroll, yesterday morning in the hallway of the building by three men, who escaped after beating him into unconsciousness. Detectives were soon on the scene, but were unable to get any trace of the robbers.

According to Brettler, he went to the Chatham and Phenix National Bank branch at Ludlow and Grand Streets and drew $309.86. As he was entering the building on the ground floor he saw two men standing near the stairs and a third descending. He thought they were workmen, and had reached the stairs when one of the men struck him in the face, while another grabbed him by the throat and choked him. When he recovered he found the money, with the exception of $2.10 in dimes, stolen.

DISBARRED LAWYER DIED A MILLIONAIRE

ACCUSED IN PARK FRAUDS

Mrs. Flannery Named Administratrix, but $1,000,000 in Securities Is Ordered Into Vault.

Joseph A. Flannery, who was disbarred from the practice of law by the Appellate Division on May 17, 1912, left an estate of $1,600,000, according to the petition of his widow, Mrs. Viola M. Flannery of 45 East Fiftieth Street, filed in the Surrogates' Court yesterday, asking for letters of administration. Surrogate Cohalan granted her request.

Flannery was disbarred upon the recommendation of Hamilton Odell, as referee, who found the lawyer guilty of professional misconduct in connection with the condemnation of land which was sold to the city for park purposes.

In her petition the widow recites that her husband left no will and that there is only herself and the two daughters, Viola and Aileen, who reside with her, to enjoy the estate in equal shares.

The petition recited that there is about $500,000 in personal property in the widow's keeping, realty amounting to at least $100,000, and securities valued at about $1,000,000. The Surrogate granted her plea to set her bond as administratrix at $500,000, the amount of the personalty in her immediate possession.

However, the Surrogate directed that the $1,000,000 in securities be placed with the New York Life Insurance & Trust Company, as depositary, until the further order of the court. The securities were listed in the order as follows:

1,000 shares of Northern Pacific Railway common stock.
500 shares of Baltimore & Ohio Railroad common.
500 shares of Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway common.
1,010 shares of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.
2,000 shares of the Lehigh Valley Railroad.
500 shares of the Union Pacific.
500 shares of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe.
50 shares of the Lima Locomotive Corporation.
1 certificate of New York City corporate stock.
10 bonds of the Estates of Long Beach.
19 New York City 3½ per cent. bonds.
125 Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific debenture 5s.
50 Lima Locomotive Corporation 6s.
1 Newport News Syndicate certificate.
33 Baltimore & Ohio convertible 4½ per cent. bonds.
5 New York City 6s, due 1916, and 6 of the same, due 1917.
150 Missouri Pacific 6 per cent. notes, due 1917.
5 Kansas, Colorado & Pacific 6s.

There was also 500 shares of the stock of the Merchants' & Mechanics' Bank of Baltimore. These the Surrogate did not order into the vaults of the insurance company.

City Officials Attend Funeral of Father F. J. Sullivan.

Police Commissioner Woods, with 2,000 members of the Police Department and other city officials, attended the funeral of the Rev. Father Francis J. Sullivan, chaplain of the Police Department, yesterday in the Church of St. Aloysius, 132d Street and Seventh Avenue, where he had been the parish rector for many years. Cardinal Farley, with two hundred priests at the altar, gave the absolution at a solemn requiem mass.

The church was crowded an hour before the services began and more than 10,000 persons, including 2,000 mounted and foot policemen, stood in the streets. When the casket was brought from the church Inspector Ryan, commanding the department force, had difficulty in clearing a space through the mass of people for the carriages and procession, which was finally accomplished by stopping traffic for ten blocks on Seventh Avenue and the side streets.

Led by the Police Band, a squadron of mounted men and a regiment of policemen marched down the avenue to 110th Street, then south on Fifth Avenue to Fifty-seventh Street to the Queensboro Bridge, where the horsemen and policemen lined up on either side of the street while the funeral party continued on to Calvary Cemetery. The Color Guard of the Knights of Columbus and the Holy Name Society, members of the Royal Arcanum and many officials in carriages followed.

Six members of the Honor Legion were the pallbearers. The honorary pallbearers included Commissioner Woods, Park Commissioner Cabot Ward, Collector of the Port Dudley Field Malone, Thomas M. Mulry and Thomas F. Smith. The officiating clergymen included Monsignors M. J. Lavelle and Joseph F. Mooney, the Rev. James Flannelly, the Rev. William Meehan of Rye, N. Y.; the Rev. Thomas Gavin, the Rev. Thomas Barry and the Rt. Rev. Patrick J. Hayes.

SEEK TEUTON WHO HAD PLANS OF FORTS

Ex-Employe of Austrian Embassy Said to Have Taken Drawings to Berlin.

LOUDEN DENIES CONNECTION

Spy Suspect Says He Never Knew Tomory, Who Was $12 Clerk Under Nuber.

Agents of the Department of Justice began a second inquiry yesterday into the activities of Eugene Tomory, an Austrian army officer, who lived in this country for two years and who is alleged to have carried plans of the fortifications around New York Harbor to the German Government. According to information received by the United States Secret Service, Tomory sailed from New York under an assumed name on the Nieuw Amsterdam on July 24 last for Rotterdam. He is said to have eluded detection whenever the ship was searched for suspicious characters by wearing the uniform of a ship's steward.

The attention of the Department of Justice was called to Tomory after "Count" Max Lynar Louden, also suspected of being a German spy, was arrested on the charge of bigamy. Secret Service agents heard a rumor that Tomory was Louden's messenger, but so far they have established no connection between the two men. "Count" Louden, when asked in the Tombs Prison yesterday whether he had ever had dealings with Eugene Tomory, replied:

"No such name is known to me."

It was learned that Eugene Tomory, before sailing from New York, lived in rooms which he rented from Mrs. Blanche Haskins, at 146 West Eighty-second Street. Mrs. Haskins said yesterday that he was about 24 years old, and that she believed he had been employed as a clerk in the Austrian Consulate at 24 State Street. She said he was a man of very quiet habits, and talked very little. She received a post card from him recently, sending her his compliments as an "old boarder," and stating that he was on his way to Vienna.

At the Department of Justice yesterday it was stated that the Nieuw Amsterdam, before sailing, was very carefully searched for a man in connection with another matter. Tomory assumed an ingenious disguise, according to the information received by agents of the Department of Justice. It is said this same disguise enabled him to escape detection when the ship was searched again by the English authorities at Falmouth.

Alexander Nuber, the Austro-Hungarian Consul General in this city, said last night that Eugene Tomory was employed in the Consulate for three months. He said the young Austrian's duties were of a minor character. He could not say whether Tomory was in America or in Europe at the present time. The Consul General laughed at the suggestion that Tomory had ever been engaged to carry messages from Count von Bernstorff or Dr. Dumba to their home Governments.

"That is ridiculous," said Captain Nuber. "He was only a $12 a week clerk."

So far as Count Louden is concerned, the officials of the Department of Justice intend to leave the disposition of his case to District Attorney Perkins. The "Count" failed to obtain bail yesterday, but his lawyer said he would have Louden out of the Tombs early this week.

A dispatch received yesterday from Aurora, Ill., contains a statement from Thomas Dunham, a manufacturer of automobile supplies, who had dealings with Louden in Buffalo in 1914, that he had been an intimate friend of Louden and, with Mrs. Dunham, often visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louden at Fort Erie.

"The Mrs. Louden my wife and I met in 1913," Mr. Dunham said, "was a handsome woman, about 29 years old. She said her parents were Swedish people, who brought her to Mexico, where her father went into business. She met Mr. Louden in the United States."

Of the three women who claim to be wives of the Count, his present wife, Laila Florence Jansen, whom he married in 1911, would correspond to Mr. Dunham's description.

"Mr. Louden was an inventor of military equipment," said Mr. Dunham. "and about two years ago was backed by Buffalo capitalists in the manufacture of a self-lighting lantern to be used by sentries.

"My father, John Dunham, who lived next door to Mr. Louden at Fort Erie and who is in close touch with the military authorities, writes me that the Count has been accused by Canadians of being a spy."

Mr. Dunham said the "Count" was a colonel of American volunteers during the Spanish-American War, serving with Colonel Roosevelt. He said Louden was also honorary colonel of the Seventy-fourth New York National Guard.

Canal Ship Forced to Return Cargo.

The Panama-Pacific liner Finland, which returned last night from Colon because of the stoppage in the canal, will discharge the 12,000 tons of cargo she carried away on Sept. 25 for San Francisco, and load for London. The officers said that the Panama Railroad did not have the facilities for handling big cargoes, and they had to bring the freight back. The Finland will leave at noon Sunday under the American Line flag for London, and will carry first, second, and third class passengers, calling either at Falmouth or Plymouth. The Korea and Siberia will be put on this service when they get to London from San Francisco.

DROP SUNDAY CHURCH PLAY.

Messiah Trustees Deem It Inadvisable to Defy Sabbath Society.

David Bispham's Beethoven play will not be presented this afternoon. The performance, at first scheduled for the Harris Theatre and later withdrawn on account of the objection raised by the Sabbath Society, then transferred to the Church of the Messiah, has been ruled out by the trustees of the church, and the playlet will not be produced on Sunday at all.

The Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, pastor of the church, and David Bispham issued a joint statement last night in which they said:

"In spite of their best endeavors, Dr. Holmes and Mr. Bispham have found the technical provisions of a ridiculous law to be insuperable and therefore the only performances of 'Adelaide,' will be given at the Harris Theatre on the afternoons of Oct. 21, 22, 25, and 26."

The church trustees met yesterday to consider the Sunday law and William S. Miller, Acting Chairman of the board, later called Dr. Holmes and told him that the trustees thought it inadvisable to have the production in the church.

NEW ASTOR MARKET OPENS TO BIG TRADE

USUAL PRICES CUT A TRIFLE

Robert W. Goelet May Establish Similar Institution in Park Avenue—Vincent Astor Pleased.

Large crowds attended the opening of Vincent Astor's new market in the block in Broadway, at Ninety-fifth Street, yesterday.

It was a buying crowd of prosperous looking people and stallholders were surprised by the first day's business. The management, which undertakes to deliver all goods, had two wagons at hand, but hired five more soon after the market opened. A butcher said that, besides goods charged, he took in $700 cash. A fruit and vegetable booth took in $460.

Prices were a trifle below the average along Broadway in the neighborhood. A woman who lives near-by said she intended to shop regularly at the market because she could buy everything under one roof. Another woman who came ten blocks said she could do as well in near home stores and that the market's advantages were not worth the time and carfare.

Food dealers in the neighborhood apparently are not much disturbed, and several offered wagers that the market would not be in existence a year. They pointed to the failures of other markets and said New York people did not care enough about saving a few cents to travel far.

The management of the market points out, however, that with the low rents charged the market men can make lower prices than stores. A butcher's stall rents for $1,300 a year. Stalls facing the street range from $1,000 to $1,500, while smaller stalls in the rear bring from $400 to $600. Light and cleaning are free, and ice is furnished at $3 a ton.

There were rumors among dealers along Broadway yesterday that the market building had been designed so that it could be readily transformed into a garage. This was denied by the builder, James MacWalters, who explained the rumor by the fact that Mr. Astor had intended to build a garage on the site before the idea of a market came to him.

Robert W. Goelet, who visited the market on Friday, said he was much pleased with the idea, and that he might build one on land he holds in Park Avenue, near the Grand Central Terminal. Mr. Astor visited the market in the morning.

He was gratified with the way the public took to the scheme, and with the displays of dealers.

The market will be open from 7 A. M. until 8 P. M., except on Saturdays, when it will remain open until 11.

Church 250 Years Old.

The Dutch Reformed Church at Port Richmond, S. I., will begin the celebration of the 250th anniversary of the founding of the congregation today. There will be a Sunday School rally in the morning, followed by a sermon by the Rev. Cornelius Brett, pastor of the Bergen Reformed Church, Jersey City. On Thursday Mayor Mitchel and President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen will speak. The first church building was erected in 1680. This was burned just after the Revolutionary War, and the present church building was then erected.

LIGGETT CO. TO BUY RIKER & HEGEMAN

George J. Whelan Arranges Sale of Controlling Interest in 90 Drug Stores.

UNITED DRUG CO. PURCHASER

Plan Calls for Same Terms to Minority Stockholders as to Selling Majority.

Transfer of the controlling interest in the Riker & Hegeman Company, which owns about ninety drug stores in the leading cities of the East, to the United Drug Company, was arranged for yesterday by George J. Whelan and his associates. The deal comprises an exchange of Riker & Hegeman stock for stock of the United Drug Company, and minority stockholders will have the opportunity of securing the same terms as the majority. A special meeting of Riker & Hegeman stockholders will be called in a few days to ratify the agreement, which has to have the consent of 75 per cent. of the shareholders before the Riker & Hegeman system can become a part of the United Drug Company.

The arrangement made by Mr. Whelan with Louis K. Liggett, head of the United Drug Company, calls for the exchange of $100 in common and $45 in second preferred 6 per cent. stock of the United for each $100 share of common stock of the Riker & Hegeman Company. The Corporation of Riker & Hegeman Stock owns $4,300,000 of the $8,469,000 common stock of the Riker & Hegeman Company, but has none of the drug concern's preferred shares. This is a company under the domination of the Whelan group that built up the United Cigar Stores Company. Owners of Riker & Hegeman preferred stock will receive $100 of 7 per cent. United Drug first preferred stock for each $100 of Riker & Hegeman stock. The Riker & Hegeman preferred stock pays 6 per cent. dividends yearly, so that the exchange will bring a higher return to stockholders. At the present time the United Drug common stock pays 8 per cent. dividend, against 6 per cent. paid by the Riker & Hegeman Company.

The plan calls for a change in the capitalization of the United Drug Company, which at the present time has no second preferred stock. The company has authorized capital of $20,000,000, equally divided between preferred and common, of which $2,774,000 of the former and $4,683,600 of the latter is outstanding.

The United Drug Company was incorporated in Massachusetts in 1911 primarily for the manufacture of drugs, toilet articles, &c., but was later extended to include a large retail business. The Louis K. Liggett Company, which operates sixty retail stores in the United States and Canada, was taken in and a Canadian manufacturing branch was organized a few years ago.

Louis K. Liggett is one of the best known drug men in the country. George J. Whelan was recently quoted as saying that Mr. Liggett and his fellow officers in the United, J. N. Staples, Jr., and George Gales, were the most efficient factors in the drug industry of North America. It was learned yesterday that the change of control, if it occurs, will not affect the operating forces of either company.

ALL NATIONS AGREE AS TO CARRANZA

The Pan-American Conference, Called for Tomorrow, May Decide for Recognition at Once.

VILLA REPORTED KILLED

Story of Execution by His Own Men Reaches Border, but Is Denied by Secretary.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—All of the Latin-American Governments whose diplomatic representatives participated in the Pan-American-Mexican conferences with Secretary of State Lansing have given their approval to the plan devised by the conference in favor of the recognition of the Carranza faction as the de facto government in Mexico.

As a result of the receipt of the responses made by Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala, Secretary Lansing has called a meeting of the Pan-American conference members for 3 o'clock on Monday. It will be the fifth and the final meeting of the members of the conference before formal recognition of the Carranza Government is extended. Recognition will probably be proclaimed next week.

The impression is strong that formal announcement of recognition of the Carranza Government will be made immediately after Monday's meeting at the State Department. Secretary of State Lansing would not, today, confirm this statement, but explained that the purpose of the conference was to devise the ways and means of extending recognition.

It is understood that Señor Eliseo Arredondo, the Carranza agent in Washington, will be present on Monday. It is probable that the recognition will take the form of a note to Señor Arredondo, to be delivered by him to General Carranza. After Monday's conference Señor Arredondo will go to the Mexican border to confer with General Carranza and to inform him of the decision of the United States and the Latin-American nations.

Soon after the notification of recognition is presented to General Carranza the United States Government is understood will establish an embargo on the shipment of munitions of war from this country to any faction in opposition to the Government that has been recognized. This will be expected to materially aid the new Government in crushing opposition and restoring law and order.

The Carranza agency here received today a cablegram from Jesus Acuña, Carranza's Foreign Minister, saying the Zapata leaders, Argumedo and Almazan, with several thousand men, had offered to surrender to General Carranza if amnesty were granted to them.

AGAIN REPORT VILLA SLAIN,

But Story of His Death Lacks Confirmation.

EL PASO, Oct. 16.—Reports have been current here all day that General Francisco Villa, chief of the Conventionist forces in Mexico, had been arrested by his own men at Casas Grandes, convicted and put to death, but the reports could not be confirmed here today. Messages from General Villa in his private code were received at Juarez at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Late tonight a denial that Villa had been arrested and court martialed came from Casas Grandes, in a message, signed by Colonel Silva, Military Secretary to General Villa.

Another official message from the Villa Headquarters confirmed the report of the death of General Fierro.

A Mexican passenger from Casas Grandes, arriving Thursday night, was said to have brought the first story of Villa's death, but his story became public only late yesterday, when it received apparent confirmation from an American arrival, who said he had been so informed by a railroad employe.

The report that General Rudolfo Fierro was dead was received last night over the military wires from Casas Grandes. It stated briefly that Fierro had been drowned while fording a river.

Fierro was the Villista who sprang into prominence at the time of the death of William Benton, a British subject, at Juarez, two years ago. Benton's death, which has never been satisfactorily explained, has been laid to Fierro, Villa's bodyguard.

During one of Villa's critical battles, Fierro, in the face of a deadly fire, uncoupled a troop train, preventing the arrival of Huerta reinforcements. This deed of valor is said to have won him his Generalship.

Later Fierro became notorious as an executioner. One of his exploits, as reported from the battlefield, was the shooting of more than 300 prisoners taken in battle. He is reported to have killed the men as they stood in a row and as rapidly as his aid could feed his gun.

DOUGLAS, Ariz., Oct. 16.—General P. E. Calles, Carranza commander at Agua Prieta, said today he had been notified that General Villa was en route from Casas Grandes to Sonora. He believes his information is correct.

MONTEREY HAILS CARRANZA.

First Chief Warmly Welcomed by Big Northern City.

MONTEREY, Mexico, Oct. 16.—This city, capital and metropolis of the State of Nuevo Leon, warmly welcomed General Venustiano Carranza, who with a large party of military and political leaders is making a tour of Northern Mexico.

Carranza was entertained by the civil authorities. An open-air carnival was given here last night in his honor.

General Carranza will visit Saltillo before moving west to Torreon.

It is reported that the big refinery here will resume operations within a few days. The smelter is likely to open next March.

VILLISTAS ASK AMNESTY.

Among Applicants Is the Former Convention President, Chazaro.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 16.—Several members of the convention that supported Villa in his revolt against Carranza sent a representative today from the town of Salazar to General Pablo Gonzales requesting amnesty.

Among the applicants was Francisco Lagos Chazaro, who at one time figured as a Conventionist President. Gonzalez sent word to each to make an individual written application.

WON'T ASK DUTY ON WOOL.

Country Emerging Into Better Times, Says Secretary McAdoo.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Col., Oct 16. — William Gibbs McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, accompanied by Mrs. McAdoo, spent an hour here today on their trip to the Pacific Coast.

"The National Treasury is in better shape than for some time," said Secretary McAdoo, "and we are emerging into better times. While it has been necessary to recommend retaining the duty on sugar and it is probable emergency legislation will be needed to provide revenue, yet conditions everywhere are on an upward movement. I have no intention of making any recommendation that the duty on wool be continued.

"Commerce was completely disorganized at the beginning of the European war. Captains of industry from all parts of the Union were asked to come to the White House, and as a result business has been wonderfully improved. The passage of the Federal Reserve Bank law has liberated business from a strait-jacket with a decidedly beneficial effect in expanding commerce.

"The immense trade we are now getting from South America will be lost to us after the war is over unless we take some means to retain it. Part of this has been done in the establishment of agencies through the Federal Reserve act, and now the next step is the building of American ships to carry and hold this trade."

SAYS GUIDED HAND SIGNED BAIRD WILL

Lawyer Hopkins Denies That She Had Him Direct Dying Husband's Signature.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16.—The assertion that the hand of Charles T. Parry Baird of this city and Paris was guided in making his will less than an hour before he died in New York on Jan. 16 last was made in a petition filed in the Orphans' Court today by W. Mercer Baird, only brother and next of kin of the decedent and a grandson of Charles T. Parry, deceased, one-time head of the Baldwin Locomotive Works. At the time Mr. Baird signed the will he is alleged to have been unconscious in Hahnemann Hospital.

The will, which has been probated in this city, bears the date of Jan. 16, 1915, and is signed "Charles T. Par—" and again with an &, which appears to represent the testator's mark in place of his full signature. This peculiarity, according to W. Mercer Baird, is due to the fact that James E. Hopkins, a New York lawyer, at the direction of Marguerite J. Baird, a native of France, who is named in the will as the wife of the decedent and to whom is bequeathed by its terms the entire estate of $180,000, guided the hand of the testator.

To procure this much of the signature, it is alleged, the paper was placed upon a pillow of the bed and a pen placed in the decedent's hand. This performance is alleged to have taken place fifty minutes before the death of the testator, and while he was unconscious and unable to comprehend the meaning of a testamentary act. He had been in a state of semi-consciousness, according to the petition, for twelve hours immediately preceding his death.

The decedent had come to New York on a visit shortly before his death, his home for many years having been at Limay, near Paris. He was stricken with an acute attack of appendicitis, from which he died a week after he was taken ill.

The woman referred to in the will as the wife of the decedent is not known to the petitioner, although the legality of her marriage to the testator is not questioned in the petition. It is said she is of French birth and resides at Limay. Under the terms of the will she is sole heir to Baird's fortune, which was his share in the trust estate left by his grandfather, Charles T. Parry.

Marguerite J. Baird was also named in the will as executrix, but to facilitate settlement of the estate, part of which is in the form of real estate in this city, she nominated Attorney Frederic R. Coudert of New York as administrator. Letters of administration were granted to him when the will was probated recently by the Register of Wills of this city. Mr. Coudert has also acted as administrator of the petitioner, W. Mercer Baird, insofar as the latter's share in his grandfather's estate is concerned.

Judge Gest today awarded a citation directed to Mr. Coudert and Marguerite J. Baird, commanding them to show cause why the petitioner's appeal from the decision of the Register of Wills in admitting the alleged fraudulent writing to probate, should not be sustained.

Mr. Hopkins Denies Charges.

James E. Hopkins of the firm of Coudert Brothers, 2 Rector Street, denied last night at his home, 4,280 Broadway, the charges made in the suit brought by W. Mercer Baird. He said Charles T. Parry Baird, when lying in the Hahnemann Hospital, sent for the will which he had drawn at Philadelphia some time previously. Mr. Hopkins said he had read the will to Mr. Baird in the presence of Dr. Henry B. Safford of 296 Central Park West, and Mr. Baird said he was satisfied with it and asked to sign it.

Mr. Baird started to sign it, but was seized with a sinking spell while he was writing his name. Later, Mr. Hopkins said, the sick man rallied, but it was explained to him that it was not necessary for him to make the exertion of signing the document and that it would be enough for him to make the cross. Mr. Hopkins said that he held but did not guide the hand of Mr. Baird when he made the cross. He said that he did not aid Mr. Baird in any way when he made the cross. He said that he did not aid Mr. Baird in any way when he made the first attempt to sign his name.

Mr. Baird, while he lived in Paris, had employed the branch of Coudert Brothers there as his counsel, and so called upon the same firm when he was ill in this country.

QUOTES HILLIS'S LETTERS.

Ferguson Says Plymouth Church Pastor Favored British Creditors.

Frank L. Ferguson, former financial agent for the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, whose controversy with the pastor of Plymouth Church over the latter's business affairs has reached the courts, gave out a statement last night in which he told of some of the minister's operations in timber lands. By letters written by Dr. Hillis to his brother and nephews in 1906 and 1907 Mr. Ferguson endeavored to show that the year 1907, which the clergyman referred to as the "year of panic" and disaster for him, was instead a year of "golden opportunity and harvest" for him.

"Dr. Hillis," said Mr. Ferguson, "said he was ashamed to tell his congregation how much money he had accumulated as a lecturer and writer, and perhaps for the same reason he did not tell his congregation how much timber land he had been able to get hold of by his first year's active operations."

Mr. Ferguson said that among the men whom Dr. Hillis induced to buy stock in his logging company were Sir Harold A. Harmsworth and Pomeroy Burton of London, England, who invested $10,000 each. Dr. Hillis, according to Mr. Ferguson, settled with Harmsworth and Burton seven months before he began, by the sale of securities and by lecturing, to pay off the losses suffered by other investors in the logging company.

Ethical Culture Services.

Regular Sunday morning services of the Society for Ethical Culture will be resumed this morning at 11 o'clock in the Meeting House, Sixty-fourth Street and Central Park West. Dr. Felix Adler's associate, Alfred W. Martin, will address the society on "The Deeper Meaning of the Moral Life," contrasting Plato's view with that of the Apostle Paul. Next Sunday Mr. Martin will speak on "International Morality and the Cessation of War."

NO BID FOR "BROOKHOLT."

There were no bidders yesterday for "Brookholt," the country place of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, near Hempstead, L. I., when it was put up at auction, although a number of real estate dealers had come prepared to buy. Auctioneer Joseph P. Day announced at the outset that no bid under $100,000 would be considered.

"Brookholt" is a thirty-acre tract with a fine three-story mansion, hothouses, flower bed, fruit trees, sunken Italian gardens, and artificial lakes. It was originally improved by Mrs. Belmont at a cost of more than $300,000.

Some years ago Mrs. Belmont entertained her daughter, the Duchess of Marlborough, there. Three years ago she set aside a part of the property for a colony of "farmerettes," girls from the east side, who went to "Brookholt" to be taught the elements of agriculture. After one season this project was abandoned. It was decided to sell the place when Mrs. Belmont last Spring moved to a new country place near Great Neck. Most of the furnishings of "Brookholt" were auctioned yesterday at low prices to New York dealers.

NOT A WILSON ANNOYER.

Belgian Visitor's Interest Cost Him Dearly in Baltimore.

Dispatches received from Baltimore last Sunday told of how Joseph Pruijk, a Belgian, was stopped by police and detectives at the door of the Franklin Street Presbyterian Church, where President Wilson was attending service. Yesterday Mr. Pruijk, who is a member of the Brussels Chamber of Commerce, a sociologist, and former Secretary of a charitable institution in Brussels, and is touring America to gather material for a book and as an agent of the Oeuvre du Vêtement des Soldats Belges, a war relief work, told a TIMES reporter that the widely spread story of his being taken for a suspicious character was due to a reporter in Baltimore who misrepresented the circumstances.

"I had never seen the President," said Mr. Pruijk, "and was anxious to get a glimpse of him, so I went to the church door where I was stopped by a policeman who asked me what I wanted. I told him I wanted to see the President, and apparently he thought that meant that I wanted to speak to the President, for he asked me who I was and where I came from. I showed him my personal card, my 1914 card of the Touring Club of Belgium, several newspaper cuttings and a number of letters; then a detective came up and I had to explain to him—I even had to tell him what my Baedeker was and why I carried it.

"But when they had talked to me they said that it was all right; that I could go in. By that time, though, I had given up the idea, and so went on to the Cathedral. A reporter for a Baltimore paper who was at the church door talked to me, and I told him who I was, explained the circumstances, and begged that he mention the Oeuvre du Vêtement des Soldats Belges if he mentioned the matter at all. Imagine my surprise when I saw what the papers said about me."

CHURCH OPPOSITION HALTS GARY PLAN

CITY CLUB DEBATES SYSTEM

Program to Remedy Part-Time Evil May Be Ready for the Board of Estimate Next Friday.

The Gary "work, study and play school" system and the feasibility of adopting it on a wholesale scale in this city were warmly debated at a meeting of the City Club yesterday afternoon. On account of the recent attacks of churchmen, aimed particularly at the religious feature of the Gary or Wirt plan, a great deal of attention was paid to this feature in the discussion.

These attacks have caused the Board of Education to hesitate in adopting the plan. This fact was brought out in the discussion by John Martin, a member of the Board, who is the Chairman of its Vocational Committee.

Superintendent William Wirt of Gary, Ind., who was brought to New York by Mayor Mitchel to install the Gary plan, outlined the system. His idea was that the weekly instruction of the Sunday schools should be supplemented by daily religious instruction for public school children and that the churches of all denominations should supply the religious teachers instead of calling on the public school teachers to give this instruction in addition to their regular work. The children should be sent from school to the churches for this instruction, he said.

"This question is fraught with danger," said Mr. Martin, who is an advocate of the Gary plan in the main, "but I think I can speak with authority for the School Board regarding it at the present time. It is my opinion that unless the opposition to this feature of the Gary plan disappears, the Board of Education will not be justified in going ahead with that part of the plan. It is, after all, a matter for the parents to decide, so that the board can go ahead without the possibility of encountering the charge that it is encouraging one sect at the expense of another."

The Board of Education expects to have its plans for remedying the part time evil ready to submit to the Board of Estimate by next Friday night, Mr. Martin said. The plan is to extend the Gary system throughout the city. Mr. Martin said there were 40,000 school children obliged to submit to the part time plan, and 90,000 were on the "Ettinger double session system," which was devised in 1904 by Dr. William L. Ettinger, the Associate Superintendent of Schools, to help solve the part time problem.

Dr. Ettinger criticised some of the theories advanced by Professor Wirt yesterday, but laid most emphasis on the argument that the Gary system should not be adopted on a wholesale scale in New York until it had had a more complete trial at the public schools in the Bronx where it has been put into effect.

"My one fundamental interest is to make the city the best place in the world to rear children," Professor Wirt said. "Play is a very essential part of a child's education, and work is equally important. The Gary plan is simply a plan to give the child a chance to play and work along the most advantageous lines while studying."

Director Howard W. Nudd of the Public Education Association supported the Wirt idea and advocated extending it at once throughout the public school system. He ridiculed the idea that it was necessary to have "an individual seat for every pupil." This theory, it was said, was what had made it necessary under the old school system to make such large demands on the Board of Estimate for new schools every year. The Wirt supporters argued that the same classrooms could be used by different classes successively.

William E. Grady and Angelo Patri, Principals, respectively, of public schools run under the Ettinger and Wirt plans, spoke briefly, each championing the system under which he taught.

SWEAR OFF 97 PER CENT.

Of $7,190,800 Assessment of 111 Persons, $218,350 Remains.

The Tax Commissioners examined yesterday 111 persons who had been tentatively assessed for the 1916 personal property tax at $7,190,800. The examiners were able to hold but nineteen for a final assessment of $218,350. Yesterday's examinations bring the total of those who have been examined since the books were opened to 1,500 on a tentative assessment of $122,401,400. Of this number only 247 have been held for a final assessment of $1,548,600.

Among the examinations made yesterday by Tax Commissioner White was the assessment of the executors of the estate of Eleanora L. S. Cenci. Albert B. Boardman of 120 Broadway appeared as one of the executors. The estate is tentatively assessed at $1,000,000. The examination showed that the estate consisted largely of untaxable stocks, but there were taxable securities and money to the amount of $314,000. Two-thirds of the entire estate is taxable here, and after deducting legal debts the local executor was held for an assessment on $168,300. The other executors are the United States Trust Company of New York City and Donald Harper of Paris.

ARMENIAN LEADERS ANSWER DJELAL BEY

EXPLAIN FIGHTING AT VAN

Say Christians There Acted in Self-Defense—Protest Meeting Today at the Century Theatre.

Dr. M. Simbad Gabriel, President of the Armenian General Progressive Association, the leading Armenian organization in the United States, and Arshag D. Mahdesian of the Society of Armenians in America, issued replies yesterday to the statement made to THE TIMES last week by Djelal Munif Bey, the Turkish Consul General in New York, who branded as a fabrication the report made by the American Committee on Armenian Atrocities, and added whatever measures the Turks had been compelled to take against the Armenians were due to the hostile activities of the latter.

Mr. Mahdesian said that the Consul General's statement was a mass of inaccuracies, and was "a feeble effort on the part of Djelal Bey to prove his countrymen guiltless of the most terrible atrocities committed against a whole race of people in centuries."

"One statement that Djelal Bey makes," said Mr. Mahdesian, "and which he knows to be inaccurate, is when he refers to a visit to Van made by Noel Buxton, M. P., in which he gives the reader of his statement to understand that Mr. Buxton visited the city of Van after the present war started and, as he puts it, attempted to start a revolution against the Turkish Government. The visit he so cleverly cites as a justification for what has happened occurred many months before the war started, in the early part of 1914, and nobody knows that better than does Djelal Bey. Of course Mr. Buxton never tried to start any uprising before the war, during the war or at any other time.

Why Names Were Not Made Public.

"Then again Djelal Bey asks why the committee, on which are such men as Bishop Greer, Cardinal Gibbons, Rabbi Wise, Oscar S. Straus, and Cleveland H. Dodge, did not give the names of the people who had reported to them concerning the atrocities the Turks are now committing against the Armenians in the Ottoman Empire. Well, I will tell him. It was because the committee knew that if they did Djelal Bey would cable all the names to Turkey, and that would mean the death or the torture of every person named.

"Horrible as were the disclosures made in the report of the Atrocities Committee it did not disclose by any means all of the horrors of the present situation. For instance, it did not tell of the mutilation of young girls, the cutting up of their bodies, and the stringing up in the market places of the poor remains of their bodies, with signs on the limbs and torsos marked 'bir metallik' per pound. A metallik is one cent in America. This is one of the frightful things they have resorted to to terrify the Armenian people, and it has happened in Harput, in Hadjim, in Mallitieh, and other places. This information comes to us from absolutely trustworthy sources.

"And furthermore that report did not state that the Turkish order to bombard the 'dirty Armenian' quarter of Van was signed by an officer with a German name and that the bombardment was directed principally against the Armenian section and the reservations of the American missionaries, and that during the bombardment five American flags were riddled by the shots directed by the officer with the German name."

Dr. Gabriel, who was one of the Ottoman delegates to the International Red Cross Congress held in Washington in 1912, said:

"It would seem that the Turks have only 'killed Greeks, Manorites, Bulgars, Armenians, but never massacred them. The Turks have killed them when they have rebelled against Turkish rule. The Armenians in Van, says the Turkish Consul, had risen with arms in hand against Turkish authority, and therefore they could not be regarded otherwise than as rebels, and the Turkish troops, after the recapture of the city, could not be expected to treat these revolutionists with gloved hands.

"Such is the Consul's argument. It would be worth listening to if it were not horribly twisted to suit his case. The fact is that the Turks had already inaugurated the new reign of terror and massacre in the province of Van, and Van was compelled by the course of 'herrowing events' to resort to self-defense. Other towns and villages had surrendered their arms, believing in the pledges of Turkish authorities that they would not be molested, and had been put treacherously to the sword. The Armenians of Van, warned by the experience of others, refused to give up their arms, but took absolutely no revolutionary steps until the Turkish troops began to attack them and bombard their quarters, not sparing even the houses of the American missionaries.

"If some Armenians in a city like Trebizond were of the suspected elements, they might be removed 'into the interior of the country' to such provinces as Sivas and Harput, which are situated in the very interior of Asia Minor, but why should all the 10,000 Armenians of Trebizond be evicted from their houses, and even then why should they be, men, women, and children, dumped into the Black Sea? The Italian Consul was an eyewitness of this inconceivable savagery. Who dares to deny it? Ambassador Morgenthau telegraphed from Constantinople that the majority of the Armenians in Turkey have been killed. Would the Ambassador say so if he was not convinced of the certainty of the fact?

"How many does that majority mean? At least 800,000. That is the number mentioned in the latest reports, and is a very conservative figure. Everything leads to believe that the number of victims is over one million."

Delegations from more than a thousand churches and religious organizations will attend the mass meeting to be held today at the Century Theatre as a protest against the massacre of Armenians by the Turks. They will represent all denominations.

It was announced yesterday that Cardinal Farley had officially designated Mgr. Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral, to represent him at the meeting. Some of the speakers are missionaries and travelers who have just arrived from the scene of the massacres. Other speakers will be W. Bourke Cockran, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, and Lyr. James L. Barton of Boston. Hamilton Holt will preside.

The doors of the theatre will be open at 3 o'clock. No tickets are required.

ARMENIANS THANK WILSON.

Students Deliver Message of Gratitude to American Consul.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 16.—John A. Ray, the American Consul at Odessa, was visited today by a deputation of Armenian students attending the University of Odessa, says a special dispatch from that city, and asked to convey to President Wilson the gratitude of Armenians for the advocacy of their cause in Turkey by the American Government.

ORDER TO EXAMINE HUNTER.

Court Grants Plea in Lawyer's Wife's Divorce Suit.

Supreme Court Justice Ford signed an order yesterday directing the examination on Oct. 26 of Frederick William Hunter, a lawyer, before the trial of the suit of Annie Belleville Hunter for divorce. Hunter has a suit pending against John Barrett Kerfoot, a critic and author, for $50,000 for the alleged alienation of the affections of Mrs. Hunter. The two men were chums at Columbia in 1887 and the friendship grew closer when Mr. Kerfoot married Mr. Hunter's sister in 1895. His wife died a year later.

In his answer to the alienation suit Mr. Kerfoot said Mr. Hunter had destroyed his wife's affections by harsh and tyrannical conduct.

Mrs. Hunter's application for the order was based on an alleged adventure in a New Orleans hotel. She said that when her husband returned from the trip South she sent a representative to New Orleans to investigate. A photograph of the hotel register showed the signature of Mr. Hunter and just below it the name of a woman written, it was alleged, by Mr. Hunter.

Ryan Assault Charge Dropped.

Following the withdrawal of Stephen Anton's complaint against Clendenin Ryan, son of Thomas Fortune Ryan, who Anton alleged struck him in the face early last Tuesday morning, Magistrate Levy in the West Farms Court yesterday dismissed the charge. Ryan was not in court. The alleged assault took place in front of a café in West Fortieth Street after Ryan had taken a hat which did not belong to him and which Anton said he would not return. The boy was attended in Roosevelt Hospital for contusions and was still wearing bandages when he appeared in court.

MILLS COMMITTEE AT WORK ON LAWS

Will Incorporate Some Tax Suggestions Into Bills for Introduction.

FAVOR SMALL INCOME LEVY

Committee Convinced That Present Personal Tax Law Is Unworkable.

Members of the Mills Legislative Committee, which has been holding hearings in the rooms of the Merchants' Association in the Woolworth Building for the last two weeks in an endeavor to solve the State tax situation, held a secret session yesterday at the home of Senator Ogden L. Mills, the Chairman, to put into shape the principal suggestions already made by the many witnesses. Ultimately some of the suggestions will take the shape of bills and amendments to the present laws.

The committee is convinced that the present personal property tax is unworkable and that some other form of taxation will have to take its place. Whether the substitute is to be an income tax, a tax on habitation, or a classified and listed form of personal tax none of the members would say. Nearly every witness examined has strongly urged a State income tax. Some have suggested that it be applied to incomes as low as $500, while others are in favor of a tax of 1 per cent. on incomes above $1,500, and 2 per cent. tax on incomes above $2,500. It is known that the majority of the members of the committee lean strongly to this latter proposal.

The question of putting a stiff tax on mercantile corporations doing business in the State was also considered by the committee, but Chairman Mills said nothing definite had been decided on.

"The committee at its executive session today," said Senator Mills, "decided to have the principal suggestions as to possible substitutes for the personal property tax put into the shape of definite bills and amendments to the present law. We hope to make our tentative plans public in the early part of November and to hold further hearings both in New York and in the principal up-State cities."

The committee is not at all sure that its final proposals will be accepted by the Legislature, but it considers the chances of getting amendments through will be greatly enhanced by taking the public entirely into its confidence and allow any one interested to express his opinion at the committee hearings. The hearings will be continued in the city on Monday, and during the latter part of the week the committee will go up-State, probably to Buffalo.

The Final Wonder of the Phonograph
—Playing it yourself

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES

The Sound Box, which embodies new scientific discoveries. It produces a richer, deeper tone than any other phonograph possesses.

The Symphonetic Horn—acoustically perfect in design and material. It eliminates all phonograph stridency and preserves the beautiful tonal characteristics of all instruments and voices.

The New Automatic Stop. With two simple movements it "sets" a record to stop where desired and also starts it playing.

The Revolutionary Graduola, which gives you the new phonograph privilege of expression control—lets you play the phonograph, in fact. This is a wonderful added feature to what other phonographs give, but you only need use it when you want to.

WHEN some great master speaks music from his violin, he feels a greater joy even than your own, for you are—only a listener. Would you thrill to those music strains as he does, and feel a rapture something, at least, approaching his own?

Put a record of his into the Vocalion, that marvelous newest phonograph which allows you to play yourself, if you wish. Press the wonderful Graduola device and give yourself up to the music!

Under your pressure comes harmony which responds to every shade of your music-feeling. Now it softens to a sigh of tender beauty. Now it swells till the contrast thrills with its very quality of life. With one record you feel the sensation of the violinist, and another a flutist, with a third a singer—and so on through all the joyous range of music beauty.

You are getting a pleasure never attained in phonographic art "till the Vocalion came." You are hearing these waves of swelling tone undulled, unmuffled; for new inventions in sound production and sound preservation have eliminated all tone-clouding, all metallic qualities. Thus you listen to vital, rounded tone-developments new to the phonograph, even while you are experiencing an indescribable music-joy by seeming to play each instrument itself.

Of course, you need not play the Vocalion—far from it. It will play of itself each record exactly as the record stands, if you prefer it that way. It will, however, voice richer, sweeter tones than have ever phonographically been produced before.

No! This device which allows you to vary a single record as often, and to whatever degree of stress, you wish, is but an added phonograph privilege, which the Vocalion only can give you.

WOMAN'S VOTE AND MAN'S WORK.

Women may secure and enjoy the privilege of the ballot, they may go to the polls and vote like men, and like men they may hold political office and perform its routine duties without reproach. All that is easy, that we understand, for in the suffrage States we have seen the demonstration. But since States were created and politics came into being has there ever lived a woman who could have taken the place of DEMOSTHENES in his heroic defense of the freedom of Athens and of Greece against Macedonian aggression? This is no irrelevant illustration from a far-off time to adorn a modern argument with classic borrowings. It is pertinent and of present force, for the peril of Athens in the time of DEMOSTHENES has its immediate parallel in the actual affairs of Europe and in our own situation at this day. Public spirit was at a low ebb, statesmen and the people, concerned chiefly with the petty interests of internal and personal politics, were indifferent to dangers from without, while on the north PHILIP, with the great ambitions of a NAPOLEON and the far-reaching intrigues, the concentration of effort, and the perfect preparedness of Prussian militarism, was executing his designs to dominate the Hellenic world. It was to arouse the Athenian people to a sense of its danger, to revive the spirit of patriotism, to prove that Greece could be delivered from her peril only if united under the leadership of Athens, and that the creation of an efficient armed force by sea and land was the supreme duty of the hour, that DEMOSTHENES prepared and delivered his incomparable orations. He made himself the chief figure in Athens. He did arouse the Athenians, it was a man's work, and it was not through any fault of his that they gave heed to him too late.

Or invoke the public services of CICERO as a standard by which to test the capacities of women in statesmanship. With far less of greatness and of principle than the Athenian orator, CICERO lived in a time of base politics, of corruption, of treachery, of plotting that put the interests of State far below selfish personal advantage. But he was a scourge to demagogues, his service to Rome was great and patriotic, and he won the gratitude and the confidence of those he served. To that we may add that his public orations and his court pleas have survived to be studied as models of Roman eloquence by all later ages.

For a modern instance let the advocates of suffrage for women consider how DANIEL WEBSTER won deathless fame. His profound knowledge of political principles, his unequaled power in debate, his devotion to his country and its Constitution, the majesty of his presence and the spell of his name not only armed him to overcome HAYNE in the memorable debate that supplemented the work of the Fathers by a new founding of the Republic, but implanted in the minds and hearts of the people of the North the principle that this is an indissoluble Union. In that debate WEBSTER molded public opinion as no other American statesman has ever molded it; upon secession in its cradle he put the stamp of death, he made the Union imperishable.

The woman never lived who within any measurable distance could have approached the achievements and the service of these men. MARIA THERESA did present herself in the Hungarian Diet and she moved the gallant gentlemen of that assembly to enthusiastic support to shed their blood in defense of her title to the throne. But how? Not by her Latin speech, but by holding up before them her boy baby, whose future right of succession she adjured them to maintain. It was theatrical, but it was womanly, and it was effective.

We shall be told that it is unfair, that it is preposterous, to put woman's capacity for public service to the merciless test of comparison with the greatest in all history. But male statesmen aspire to the place and the power of the greatest and live laborious days to attain them. Some do attain to a greatness customarily compared to the eminence of the men we have named. Would the women be better pleased if we leave the summits for the slopes and ask what woman has ever approached the forensic efficiency of PITT, of BROUGHAM, of GAMBETTA, of GLADSTONE, of THIERS, of CAVOUR, of CASTELAR, of SUMNER, or any one of a dozen or a score of men whose names appear among the signatures of the Declaration or in the schoolbooks as founders of this Republic?

Seek comparison where you will, place the standard where you will, no woman in all history can meet the test that challenges the fitness of her sex for the highest labors of statesmanship. Women platform lecturers we have had, pleasing and persuasive, amply competent to set up processes akin to thinking in the vast spaces of the Chautauquan mind. But no woman to stir Senates and rouse great peoples to stern resolves, or—and this is the higher service—to recall the populace, in its fits of wrong-headedness, to sense and reason, check perilous adventure in its beginning by lucid expositions of law and principle, and bring into the view of legislatures the true path of safety and of honor.

Men do all these things, they have always done them. They are in the day's work of the statesman. They are high works and these heights are never attained by any of the ruck of nobodies sent to State capitals or to Congress by the complacent misjudgments of village communities or in reward for service to local bosses. Having the ballot and, in the necessary projection of that privilege, going to Congress or to the State Legislature, will women be content to sit among the voiceless nobodies? The capacity for highest service in statesmanship withheld from them by their Creator—and withheld, we take it, for no mysterious reason—will they really feel well assured that in winning the ballot they have won equality? If they are going to be content with hopeless, accepted inferiority, their present ambition is ignoble. Better to hold the first place at the hearthstone, unquestioned, historically above all challenge, full of honor, than a seat in a bench-row of confessed incapables to whom nobody very much attends and of whom only here and there one will make any contribution to current proceedings, and that mostly futile.

The agitators for suffrage will exclaim, protest, and deny, they will even resort to their favorite retort of old fogeyism and a mediaeval mind. Let them set forth facts and sufficient reasons for the belief that women can now or ever will take their place and do their part in the greater works of statesmanship. Precedents and instances they will not find, and if they argue that the women are unequipped because through their historical lack of opportunity they are untrained, they must permit us to withhold assent from a conclusion resting wholly upon confidence in things unseen. God-given capacities have a way of sundering the bonds of human circumstance and taking their free flight to high achievements. Surely, if the gift had been conferred we should not have to turn to myth and fiction for great feminine figures that after the manner of men have made and saved nations.

Woman's pride should spare her the humiliation that awaits her in this venture, that has already visibly befallen her in States where after many years of experience and opportunity there is yet no example, no promise, of an advance to that equal capacity to meet the obligations of public service which are correlative to the equal right to engage in it. It is an empty husk they seek, the idler's privilege to look on while others do the work. It is amazing that the appetite for the poor meal should be so clamorous.

It is the inward sense of this unfitness to enter the lists of politics that makes a very great part, if not a majority, of the sex disinclined to pursue the illusory phantom of equality in suffrage. Why engage in a competition where none may expect to win the great distinctions that all men aspire to and some attain? The individual man may fail, the class always does produce the supreme types that are beyond feminine aspiration. Why should they so consumedly crave in man's field the secondary, the subordinate, the rôle of those who stand and wait, while in their own field they may always hold supremacy with full honor? The argument from biology, from physiology, from temperament has been made and pressed without ceasing. The foundation reason against extending the privilege and the insuperable obstacles to woman's efficient use of it are to be sought in the unchanging order of nature, which fits each sex for the work it has to do and cheats of fruition designs that disregard it.

No argument will prevail with the busy agitators for equality. They demand the ballot for no reason capable of convincing statement, only because they have taken into their heads to have it. But most men and many women know the sound reasons for withholding the grant. They know that it will not raise the quality of the electorate. The average is maintained by the peaks and summits, to which women in politics can never climb. These men and women feel deeply that while making politics no purer, statesmanship no wiser for guidance, administration of public affairs no better, suffrage would powerfully tend to make women less womanly, the home less happy. In this State and in New Jersey, in Pennsylvania and in Massachusetts the men who vote have this Fall a public duty to be taken seriously and to be performed with courage, with conscience, and with conviction.

THE DURABLE TURK.

It is not fair to say that the Balkan situation is the result of a failure in Anglo-French diplomacy, though that is what public displeasure implies both in France and England, and what the world for the present believes. It is more the effect of a failure in force. Sir EDWARD GREY expressed it euphemistically by saying: "It was clear nothing but a decisive preponderating advantage for the Allies would have enabled us to secure a policy of union." He meant a union of the Balkan peoples either to fight against the Austro-Turko-German alliance or to keep their hands off. That is to say, if the Anglo-French forces had been able to force the Dardanelles and take Constantinople, then it would have been possible for the diplomats to appease the earth hunger of the Balkan peoples with what there was to go around and to control their national ambitions without sacrificing Serbia to Bulgaria or Bulgaria to Greece, or some of each to all of them out of a fourth dimension.

The failure of the allied forces, after nine months, to make any appreciable headway against the Turk, by land or sea, was bound to have a psychological effect disastrous to Anglo-French diplomacy. What if the Allies should lose? What would be the plight of a little Balkan State that had been on the wrong side? Those questions asked themselves, and were not to be answered away by diplomacy, in the face of the facts, namely, that the allied fleet had been unable to force the Dardanelles and the allied army to more than get its toes in on the forbidding Gallipoli peninsula. At the southeastern corner of Europe the outwardness of events doubtless would wear at the present time an aspect more favorable to Germany than might seem to be the case from any other geographical point of view. Bulgaria evidently believes Germany is winning. Greece is not convinced that the Teutonic forces are bound to lose—at least, the Greek King has his doubts.

It probably had been better for the Allies never to have assaulted the Dardanelles than to have done so to no avail, in a blundering, futile manner. Russia is much disappointed. But, on the other hand, she might have been more disappointed if the attempt had not been made. Politics had a lot to do with it from the first. Obviously the Anglo-French authorities, naval and military, underestimated greatly the Turks' resistance. Or, perhaps, Germany's forehandedness in providing Turkey with the means of resistance was the factor not allowed for. There now are rumors that the whole campaign will be abandoned abruptly, as it began. They were not allayed by Lord LANSDOWNE'S manner of meeting the suggestion in the British House of Lords. No member of the Government, he said, could give an undertaking that operations in the Dardanelles would be either continued or discontinued. To discontinue them undoubtedly would further weaken the prestige of the allied cause in eastern Europe. At the beginning of the war, and especially at the opening of the campaign for Constantinople, everybody said: "There goes the Turk. His time in Europe is at an end." But it was not so easy as it looked.

MR. GARRISON'S PROGRAM.

The feeling in all parts of this country will be that we can better afford to pay the cost of the increased land defenses projected by Secretary GARRISON than to dwell longer in fear of possible invasion and to feel daily the lack of protection. The most radical part of the War Secretary's program is an appreciable increase in the size of the regular army. This establishment now comprises about 93,000 enlisted men, apart from the noncombatants of the Quartermaster and Hospital Corps, and including the Philippine Scouts. There are all told at present a few more than 5,000 commissioned officers in all arms, and this number must be largely increased if 32,000 more men are to be placed on the first fighting line, and the Quartermaster and Hospital Corps must be correspondingly increased. Mr. GARRISON, however, will ask for an increased army appropriation of only $75,000,000 in the next fiscal year, to meet all the new expenses, including the cost of establishing, on a permanent footing, the first installment of a new Continental army, which is to constitute a reserve force distinct from the men who have served with the colors in the regular army for the new enlistment term of two years, and will thereafter be on call to serve their country for four years. The Continental army will be a separate force, trained in camps like that at Plattsburg for two months of every year, in which men will be regularly enlisted and paid for all the service they render.

In the development of the National Guard no huge demand is to be made upon the resources of any State. The estimated strength of the Guard at present is 120,000 men; to obtain the 129,000 men asked for in that force should be easy. The few States which have either very few men in their organized militia or none at all will not be slow, we are sure, in raising forces sufficient to answer this moderate requirement, and in conforming to the rules of the War Department to the extent of having cavalry and artillery as well as infantry, and the needful commissariat and supply departments and hospital and signal corps. Indeed, with the pecuniary aid to be extended by the Federal Government the militia of all the States should soon be made as fit as that of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts to perform its duty as an important part of the first line. But it will not in the future so largely outnumber the regular army in that line.

With ten new infantry regiments, seven of which will be retained for service on this continent, and a corresponding increase in the artillery, both coast and field, and the cavalry kept at full strength, the United States Army will constitute a more formidable force than we hitherto have thought needful to maintain in a time of peace, but it will be comparatively small, nevertheless, as the most efficient nucleus for a war army to defend a nation of 100,000,000.

The army plan is, indeed, worthy of the most favorable consideration. That it will arouse some strong opposition, especially as to proposed increase of the regular establishment, from the pacifists and the people who profess to live in dread of military ascendency, is inevitable; but there will be no more danger of militarism to the country in the maintenance of an army of 140,000 than there is when the regular forces are somewhat smaller than 100,000. The responsibility that would fall on the militia and on the volunteers, who are to be trained and prepared beforehand under the new plan, would be about the same in either case, if we were suddenly involved in war. If this military plan is accepted and whole heartedly carried out, the danger that we shall ever be suddenly involved in war will be much smaller than it is at present.

The program for defense, both military and naval, is wise and ample. As we have often predicted, it involves no such enormous expense as the opponents of preparedness have pretended to fear. The cost will be spread over a term of years. We have no fear that the pacifist opposition will be able to prevent the carrying out of the program, but the executive ability, the energy, the knowledge required to put these plans into operation with as little delay as possible, are not to be secured and organized by passing resolutions. There is a great deal of practical work to be done which will require all the constructive ability the army and navy can command, and there should be no hampering of the work, in any particular, by the interference of politicians.

FINE ARTS AT COLUMBIA.

Courses Include History of Architecture and Decorative Arts.

The Department of Extension Teaching of Columbia University offers during the present year a series of courses in the field of fine arts, which indicates a decided broadening of interest in this direction. There is offered a course meeting twice weekly under Professor Hamlin in the history of fine arts generally, during the Renaissance and modern times and including also a few lectures on Oriental art.

There are also offered, under the direction of Curator Bach, afternoon courses in the history of architecture and of ornament as well as a course in the decorative arts, treating of the minor arts generally, both in the theory of their application and in the practice of their execution. These lectures are illustrated by stereopticon views. Particular emphasis is directed toward the close association of this work with the vast resources of the Avery Library, with its wealth of illustrative material constantly within reach.

There are also offered certain courses in the form of lecture promenades at the Metropolitan Museum given under the direction of Dr. Kriehn.

Information concerning any of this work may be obtained by addressing the Director of Extension Teaching, Professor James C. Egbert, or Curator Richard F. Bach, at Columbia University.

Exporting Kultur.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have been amazed and staggered at the worldwide propaganda of Germany. This is an opportune time to quote from Price Collier's book, "Germany and the Germans," published in 1913, by Scribners.

They will carry this teaching of patriotism beyond the boundaries of Germany. The Allgemeiner Deutscher Schulverein zur Erhaltung des Deutschtums in Ausstande is a society with headquarters in Berlin, devoting itself to the advancement of German education all over the world. The society was started privately in 1886, and is now partly supported by the State. It controls some sixteen hundred centres for the teaching of German and German patriotism, and German learning. There are such centres in China, South America, the United States, Spain, and elsewhere. They number 90 in Europe, 25 in Asia, 20 in Africa, 70 in Brazil, 40 in Argentina, and 100 in Australia and Canada. The society is instrumental in having German taught in 5,000 schools and academies in the United States to 900,000 pupils. The work is not advertised; rather it is concealed as far as possible, but it is looked upon as a valuable force for the advancement of German interests throughout the world.

HOW TO FIX PANAMA.

New York, Oct. 15, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The writer has refused to make comment on the policy of General Gocthals regarding the slides in the old Culebra Cut, although from past experience with slides of considerable magnitude in other places he has convinced himself that the General's theory is partly, if not altogether, wrong. He has hoped that sooner or later the General would be brought to realize that his scheme of "letting her slide and digging her out," as the material entered the prism, was wrong. The writer has had over two years' experience in the engineering department of the Canal Zone and has given considerable thought and study to the subject.

The heavy rains of the Canal Zone are responsible for the slides, and if a large proportion of the water is properly drained off, these slides will have to slow up so that the dredging going on below will be able to take care of the channel, and thus do away with the constant obstruction to the passage of vessels. It is probably true that in years to come the slopes will take a natural grade, but the question is: "How many years?" The writer is of the opinion that it will be at least twenty or thirty years before such a result is obtained if the theory of the General is followed, and that shipping will be delayed each year for about four months during the period of the greatest rains, which is from August to December.

The remedy that is suggested is the trench and gravel method. It has been carried on so successfully in the West and other places, when all other methods have failed, that the writer does not hesitate to guarantee its success on the Panama Canal if properly executed. The only question now is the obtaining of gravel and broken stone in sufficient quantities at a reasonable cost, and of going to the expense of purchasing proper equipment, that was in operation on the canal at one time, but has been removed before it should have been. Steam shovels and trenching machinery, rock crushers, and other valuable equipment have been sold and removed, and before such a scheme can be placed in operation must be purchased again. There is where the mistake has been made, in assuming that these things would not be needed further.

How much will it cost to delay these slides so that the fleet of dredges will be able to keep the prism open? Maybe not more than a million dollars, possibly two millions or more. But what is that compared to the loss in delay to shipping for the next decade, and why is such a small amount (small when compared to the total cost of the canal) to be begrudged when its great benefit will be many times greater, not to mention the advantage of a clear and certain passageway in case of war?

If such a scheme is to be carried out preparations should be started at once to get the necessary equipment on the ground so that when the dry season commences in January everything will be in readiness to begin operations on a large scale. The first four months of the year being dry months, practically no rain will delay such operations during that period. Dredging will have to be carried on in the prism below these slides for many years to come, no matter what remedy is applied, and the writer suggests the above as a remedy to the great delays in shipping through the canal.

Work of the American Ambulance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The story of the American Ambulance Hospital that appeared in a recent issue of THE TIMES has the same faults that have characterized many others on the same subject. The visiting neurologist has either failed to observe accurately or he has been misquoted.

As a member of the transportation "field service" of the American Ambulance I am keenly enough interested in its welfare to hope that it can become properly understood by our homekeeping countrymen. Without wishing in any way to belittle the splendid work already accomplished by Dr. Blake, let me say that he has never been in charge of the hospital, but only of one of the four sections into which the surgical administration has been divided. Dr. Charles W. du Bouchet is now and has been since the beginning the executive head of the hospital.

The Lycee Pasteur, in Neuilly, was not renovated for use as a hospital; it was an unfinished school building at the beginning of the war, and after the Ministry of War had given it to the American committee it was put into a usable state and equipped by the Americans. At present the capacity of the Neuilly Hospital is about 600 beds. The transportation service has handled more than 75,000 wounded, one section alone carrying more than 22,000 between the middle of April and the 13th of September.

The visiting neurologist states the truth exactly when he says that the work of the American Ambulance is a factor of vast importance in assuring for the future cordial relations between our republic and that of France.

Help for Wounded War Horses.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I call attention to the Blue Cross Fund, a branch of Our Dumb Friends' League, established for the purpose of assisting horses wounded in the war? The fund has, since the outbreak of hostilities, sent supplies of veterinary requisites to over 240 regiments, in many cases weekly, fortnightly and monthly. Sir John French, writing from the headquarters of the British Army, expressed his thanks to Lady Smith-Dorrien, President of the Blue Cross Fund, and to the committee for the good work they had accomplished.

The Blue Cross Fund has now four splendid depots in France, divided into thirteen hospitals, and 2,113 horses have been cured since the hospitals were opened. The Earl of Lonsdale, President of Our Dumb Friends' League, visited the hospitals early in the year and expressed his appreciation of the work. Funds are urgently needed to carry on the work, and donations may be sent to me at 829 Park Avenue, New York City.

LUCY ELPHINSTONE MAITLAND, Hon. Secretary.

New York, Oct. 13, 1915.

Five Boys and Girls.

Five little boys and girls and their widowed mother must depend upon the generosity of others for their home. The father, once an industrious, hard-working man, took to drink during the last three years of his life, lost his work, and when he died left his family absolutely destitute, ill-clad, undernourished, and half sick. With the assistance of the Charity Organization Society and the material help which it secured for the family, a great change has come into this home: The health of all is better, new rooms into which they have been moved are light and airy, the entire standard of living is on a better plane, and there seems every reason now for these five children, who have recently been so much handicapped, to grow up into good and useful citizens, providing the mother can have regular aid. The society has been providing $35 a month, and hopes that it may be enabled to continue this. Gifts toward the $105 needed for the next three months may be addressed to the society at 105 East Twenty-second Street, and will be acknowledged.

The society acknowledges, with thanks, the following contributions sent in response to previous appeals in THE TIMES for other families: Miss J. A. Sill, $5; Miss Annie S. Hoyt, $10; Arthur B. Spence, $2; Adolph Wagner, $2; Mrs. H. S. Cohn, $8, and Mrs. Adolf Liebmann, $50.

FOR WHOM THE HORN IS.

Pedestrians and Motorists Discuss Each Other's Manners.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a driver of a machine I know the necessity of a signal device, because I have had to steer clear of so many pedestrians who read a paper while crossing a street and punctuate their reading by stops more or less short, apparently depending upon the length of the sentence they happen to be reading; of the groups which step from behind a concealing vehicle and continue in as many directions as to effectually block the vehicle's progress; of those who walk parallel and close to the curb and suddenly step into the gutter; of those who ogle women or review her millinery in the middle of a street; and of those who intentionally slow up their accustomed stride in order to demonstrate that their attitude toward the autoist is correct.

For the autoist who slides back a little before starting his machine; for the mail wagon which disregards every rule of foot or wheel; for the bus which assumes the entire street in which to zig-zag; for the bicyclist who prefers to lose control of his wheel when close to a machine—for all these, of course, a letter may call their attention to their own or my own danger, but it seems to me that a horn is more practical and its message may be delivered more promptly.

A. HORNBLOWER.

New York, Oct. 13, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An automobile horn has a distinct function. This is to warn against danger. It is the safety device. Used as a noise maker or in any other way save for that which it is intended it becomes a nuisance. But just because it is capable of abuse at the hands of thoughtless, careless motorists does not mean by any means that the horn as an institution should be abolished. What should be done is to prohibit such abuse by allowing horns to be used only in their true functions—as warnings of danger.

Time and again in my own experience automobile horns have been the means of preventing me from being run down by automobiles. I do not resent this warning. On the contrary, I should seriously resent the failure of such a warning. If I am crossing the street and an automobile is approaching I want to know of it. I am entitled to a fair warning—a warning that I will hear no matter how loud the surrounding traffic, and that I will understand. Like any other safety device, the use of the automobile horn should be regulated. To prohibit them would be to seriously menace public safety.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The streets are full of pedestrians who drive cars and still know their rights as pedestrians. I am one of them, and I am against the prevailing use of the horn. In this war between pedestrian and motorist the motorist has won the first campaign by bullying tactics that should make him blush. But the end is not yet. At each crosswalk the pedestrian has the right of way. This means that if each proceeds at a steady pace and a collision results, the motorist must yield to the pedestrian. Instead of doing this the motorist has blown a horn and frightened the pedestrian into jumping for his life or standing still. There may be thousands of automobilists, but there are millions of pedestrians, and every time one stands waiting for two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, yes, ten automobiles to go by, he has time to think, and we may be sure that he is not thinking about how he can be further regulated.

RICHARD WELLING.

New York, Oct. 13, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Personally, I think at times nothing short of a cannon is required when some urchin suddenly decides to cross the street right in front of you without looking, or when a truck driver, without a signal of any kind, turns into another street. From my point of view our friend hardly can be called a fair judge, for he remarks "when a motor car driver strikes a pedestrian it is absolutely the fault of the driver and never any one else."

EDW. R. POERSCHKE, Jr.

New York, Oct. 13, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In London, a city even larger than New York, one seldom hears an automobile horn. And why? Because it is against the police regulations to use a horn unless in case of real danger.

There is a law there that says: "No unnecessary noises." Newsboys are not allowed to shout their extras. The newspapers provide large sheets containing the headings of interest which the boy pins in front of him, where all may read at a glance. No one cries his wares and no automobile horn is heard except in emergency cases, and this on streets such as Oxford, where the traffic is worse even than on our Fifth Avenue.

Why cannot our police enforce the same rule in our own city?

When Austria Sold Munitions Here.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In view of the present attitude of Austria in the matter of the sale of munitions of war by private American manufacturers, the following may be of interest. The quotation is taken from Page 26 of the pamphlet entitled "The Supplies for the Confederate Army, How They Were Obtained in Europe, and How Paid For," by Caleb Huse, Major and Purchasing Agent, C. S. A., Boston, press of T. R. Marvin & Son; 1904:

At first I considered the getting of anything from an imperial Austrian arsenal as chimerical. But my would-be intermediary was so persistent that finally I accompanied him to Vienna and within a few days closed a contract for 100,000 rifles of the latest Austrian pattern, and ten batteries of six pieces each of field artillery, with harness complete, ready for service, and a quantity of ammunition, all to be delivered on ship at Hamburg. The United States Minister, Mr. Motley, protested in vain. He was told tha the making of arms was an important industry of Austria; that the same arms had been offered to the United States Government and declined and that, as belligerents, the Confederate States were by the usage of nations lawful buyers. However unsatisfactory this answer may have been to Washington, the arms were delivered, and in due time were shipped to Bermuda from Hamburg. Mr. Motley offered to buy the whole consignment, but was too late. The Austrian Government declined to break faith with the purchasers.

Away with Perfection.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Recently two contributors asked the question, "Is nature perfect?"

Perfection leaves nothing to attain. Back of all form and substance exists a force which has a definite aim—a purposeful, persistent principle extending through all nature, from the stress of the atom to the ether beyond the globe. In all its manifestations there is an evident effort to accomplish something—to produce a different condition, to satisfy an "urge" or "desire." Yet a limitation of this force is evident in a confusion of methods, in the multiplicity of cross-purposes. Interruption of activity is apparent everywhere. Life as we know it best is but a complicated example of this restraint to an all-embracing desire for a change of form and structure; and its very essence is its consciousness of imperfection. Individuals are what they are by virtue of their imperfections. Their existence is expressed in terms of greatest need. Every organ in the animal body, and it is none the less true of all organic conditions, is a prop to a failing effort—an economic necessity in the preservation of individuality. A strife in the accomplishment of an object presupposes another and a competitive force. Therefore it could not rise to the dignity of perfection. All of which would seem to indicate that nature has its shortcomings.

GERMANY'S LOOK INTO HER OWN FUTURE.

Qualified Ways in Which the People, With a New Mass-Mood, Will Become More Democratic and Self-Governing.

FROM THE SOMETIME INSPIRED COLOGNE GAZETTE.

An Article That Has Been Widely Commented Upon in Germany.

Certain things have been so conclusively proved by the past war year that for all future time they can never again be an object of dispute. No weakening may take place in the external State power, as a result forsooth of a point of view that holds that their sharpness and strength can be even approximately dispensed with, by reason of friendly sentiment and concessions on the part of our neighbors. In judging the relations between us and the great neighboring States, no party will stand distinct from others because it maintains that we could save money by relying upon the progressive subordination of the principle of power (Machtprinzip) to the basis of good-will among civilized races. We will waste no more time in discussions of that subject, since even the Socialists, too, have had their experiences with their brethren in foreign lands. Similarly, even those who have most faith in progressive principles will postpone the discussion of these questions for several generations. The war has worked too convincingly.

It has eliminated, also, from our political discussions the word "Fatherlandless." We cannot even imagine those political stupidities which could bring about the reintroduction of that word into our vocabulary. Too much has been learned anew in all realms for that, at home and, above all, out there in the field. The men who will come back have accomplished so much together, endured so much together, have shown and witnessed so much love for the highest common good, that for them the question of who loves the Fatherland more or whether one loves it more than the other, and whether there are persons who take an indifferent or even hostile attitude toward it, has been finally settled. And these men constitute the living basis of our future politics. On this basis no one will again be able to build up a policy of spying out a man's sentiments or persecuting him because of his sentiments. That will not work any more. The one side will not want it, and the other will not stand for it; and both together will constitute the overwhelming majority.

This already borders upon the question: Will Germany after the war be more democratic? This question can doubtless be answered only with yes and no, not with yes or no. The common experiences have relegated social and communal differences to the background; the future will bring with it a simpler method of living, and therewith a diminution of the social differences. The democratic trait created by the war will be carried over into the political life in so far as the odium of "Fatherlandlessness" will at last be removed from the only party to which, in the eyes of certain political parties, it attached. On the other hand, there will disappear from our political life the idea of exceptional legislation, in the sense in which that term was used hertofore, and against the objects of such legislation, since also the "exceptions" have disappeared in view of their demonstrated trustworthiness for patriotic purposes.

A democratic character will appear in our internal political life also, owing to the fact that the demands for a full participation in the directing of the State destiny—the right of ballot!—will be more emphatically insisted upon. One cannot imagine that the present-day three-class ballot system will continue in the old form. But all democracy will have a different basis than at present: the sentiment tending to strong, and conscious, and energetic Machtpolitik, (policy of power), proudly conscious of its own national peculiarity, "State-preserving," (Staaterhaltend), in the best sense of the word. The maintenance of our own strong peculiar German enonomic type: strong agriculture as the foundation of the powerful industrial superstructure, the demonstrated mistake of the purely free-trade ideal, will soften the party shadings of political economic contrasts and put in their place rational considerations of practicability. All of us have become agrarians a little.

On the other hand, the questions of provisioning the people have sharpened extraordinarily the view and feeling for all that which even remotely borders upon improper increase in prices of important foodstuffs. Wherever the guilty ones may be in this respect, they will find no mercy from the verdict of the people, even up in high quarters. The experiences of the war will be translated into our legislation also in this province. But the differences of opinion concerning these questions will be greatly stripped of political party characteristics, and here, as in other political realms, it will be one of the most important questions at issue how much practical State socialism is healthful and necessary and how much is injurious.

The war has brought us a great many necessary institutions of a State Socialistic character. Theorists and practical men will have to take up the question how far economic individualism may be curtailed, and how an extraordinarily essential impulsive force of economic development, the personal interest of the subject engaged in business, can be prevented from losing its incentive for amassing fortunes to such a degree that it may become anaemic. The number of officials will be extraordinarily increased by the coming institutions in the form of State monopolies, even as will the number of persons drawing annuities from the State and the pensioners of the war. The State insurance legislation, on the other hand, will not be able, for a long time to come, to make any further progress. Its high-water mark will remain the insurance of employes. The next care will be that of reconquering foreign markets, and that cannot be furthered by the imposition of new Socialistic burdens. This, too, can no longer be a party question after the war, but must be treated solely from the point of view of practicability.

Thus, democracy and socialism, which the war has in a certain sense strengthened, will also be held in check by the experiences of the war, and a healthy political realism, which has gradually perceived the importance of the State authority and of leading personages to an extent undreamed of, will determine the limits of the development, just as the experiences of the war will remove much of the bitterness of political, and especially of religious, differences.

How the party life and the relations of the parties to the Government shall constitute themselves depends upon divers factors. One of them is the extent to which the Government has succeeded in recasting its own principles ("unlernen," i. e., "unlearn and relearn"). This remains for the time being the Government's own secret. But the auspices are favorable: the words of the Chancellor still ring in all ears, and the words of the Kaiser will never be forgotten: "I know no parties any more; I know only German." The other factor is the mass-sentiment and mass-mood which the home-coming army will bring with it. Here individual experience can only by conjecture seek to arrive at a general opinion. Assuredly our field-gray fighters will return attaching very little importance to the value of trival controversies about minor party differences.

That ought to favor the disappearance of party nuances and the forming of larger party organizations on the Left, (radical,) as well as on the Right, (conservative,) side of the House. The conclusion of peace will most likely have a great influence upon the alignment of the parties; in this respect, no matter what the result of the peace, there should be two directions.

More should not be said at present on this point; here too there is still too much in a state of flux and dependent upon the actual developments. Assuredly the questions of foreign policy, which are even now already busying in a gratifying manner all trained minds, will exercise a great influence on the future party life. Out of this there are growing up new, important, and fruitful objects of dispute. In this respect, too, we can at the moment form only surmises, and the open discussion of these questions would transgress the limits of the freedom of speech. But one thing is sure beyond all doubt; we are entering the new period of German history with a feeling hardened in the fire that we are dependent upon one another in all sections of our people, a feeling of unshakable confidence in the goodness and safety of our State organization, and with the energetic will that our policy shall be directed more by considerations of practicability than by theories, and with the no less energetic general demand that various long and thick queues that still dangle behind us shall be cut off as soon as peace has been restored to the country.

MURDER IN MOVIES.

A Protest Against Its Inevitableness and Sympathetic Treatment.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When we go to the movies, and the white letters out of the black tell us we are to behold a melodrama "Passed by the National Board of Censors," we know that the acting will not be vulgar; we know that the plot will not be off color, and we feel certain some one will be stabbed or shot. The person who shoots the villain usually shoots in retribution or in self-defense, but there is too much sympathy with the man or woman who kills. The audience is relieved that the villain is disposed of, leaving the hero and heroine to marry. It is not the horror that strikes the audience that one man has taken another's life.

What a terrible thing to put before the eyes of children—stabbing and shooting! Cannot some influence do away with this continual picturing to young people the use of murderous weapons? Since the melodrama can rarely get along without the death of some one, why not let the villain pass from the films otherwise? Not by his own hand; that is not an idea to picture to youth. Let the villain become ill. Drown him!

Yes, the melodrama, with plot of death intent, passes by the National Board of Censors unnoticed, and slides along the white canvas in town after town, leaving behind the memory of a horror, pictured so often it now has become a commonplace—the memory that one man has killed another.

OCTOBER TWILIGHT.

A bracing breeze
Through leafless trees,
(The pines alone dark green,)
Dry leaves around
On all the ground
Where flowers and grass have been.

All things atune:
A faint new moon,
(Sunset yet in the west,)
One tiny star,
Waiting afar,
Till dark bring out the rest.

O glorious light,
O radiant sight
Of Autumn all unfuried;
On such a night
Can't all be right
Throughout this wondrous world?

WILSON ON HOLIDAY TRIP WITH FIANCEE

Motor Guests for Luncheon at Inn Kept by Negro Family—At Theatre in Evening.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—President Wilson took a holiday today, and, with Mrs. Norman Galt, his fiancée, and his cousins, Miss Lucy Smith of New Orleans and Miss Helen Woodward Bones, motored to Harper's Ferry, West Va., for luncheon.

The motorists left the White House at 9 o'clock this morning without telling even White House officials where they were going. It was raining, and the roads were muddy, but the holiday makers were not to be discouraged, and noon found the White House car at Harper's Ferry, seventy-two miles away. At an inn overlooking the Potomac and Shenandoah Rivers the President registered, writing "Woodrow Wilson and party."

The inn is kept by a negro family, and the President and Mrs. Galt, both of whom were born in Virginia, ordered an old-fashioned Southern dinner, which was served in the public dining room, where there were twenty other guests. The President asked particularly for apple pie for dessert, but got "poor man's pudding." He paid for the dinner himself and tipped the waitress.

The news that the President was in the vicinity had preceded him on the return trip, and at Frederick, Rockville, and other towns many waited to see the White House automobile go by and tried to get a glimpse of Mr. Wilson and Mrs. Galt. The party reached the White House shortly after 6 o'clock.

The President, Mrs. Galt, Miss Bones, and Miss Smith tonight saw Bernard Shaw's "Androcles and the Lion," and Anatole France's "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife," at the Belasco Theatre. The party arrived late and occupied a box in the middle tier. Few persons in the house knew of the presence of the President and his bride-elect until the intermission, when the house was flooded with light. Mrs. Galt, who sat with the President in the front of the box, wore a handsome evening toilet of black net with the usual corsage of orchids.

In addition to the gowns submitted to Mrs. Galt by a Baltimore modiste, a Washington house today presented a model which may be for the wedding toilette, but which would be equally appropriate for State dinners and receptions. This is of old ivory velvet, a quality as soft as chiffon, from a famous French loom.

GEN. FREEMAN DEAD; FOUGHT WITH CUSTER

Veteran of Civil, Indian, and Spanish Wars Died in Wyoming at 79.

CONGRESS HONORED HIM

His Indian Services Began in Sioux War of 1867-8—Last Served in Cuba and Philippines.

DOUGLAS, Wyo., Oct. 16.—Brig. Gen. Henry Blanchard Freeman, who rose from the ranks and served fifty-one years in the United States Army, died here today in his eightieth year. He served with distinction during both the Indian and civil wars, and was one of the party of prisoners who tunneled out of Libby Prison. His funeral will be held in Washington, D. C.

General Freeman was born in Mount Vernon, Ohio, and enlisted in the Tenth Infantry at the age of eighteen. At the outbreak of the civil war he was a First Sergeant in the Eighteenth Infantry, being promoted to a Second Lieutenancy a few months later. In 1863 he reached the grade of Captain, and in 1898, at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, was Colonel of the Twenty-fourth Infantry. On Jan. 16, 1901, he was promoted to be a Brigadier General, and was retired the next day under the age law.

General Freeman was twice brevetted; once as Captain "for gallant meritorious services at the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn.," and, lastly, as Major for the same in the battle of Chickamauga, where he was taken prisoner and sent to Libby Prison. After his escape from this prison he was again captured and again escaped.

In 1894 he received the Congressional Medal of Honor "for distinguished gallantry in the battle of Stone River." General Freeman's Indian services commenced in the Sioux war of 1867-8, when he was detailed on the frontier campaign which resulted in the death of General Custer. Finally, in 1879, he assisted in subduing the Ute Indians in Colorado. His last active service was in Cuba and the Philippine Islands.

ASK $400,000 FOR WIDOWS.

Child Welfare Committee Submits Estimate for Mothers' Relief.

William H. Mathews, President of the Child Welfare Committee, was before the sub-committee of the Budget Committee yesterday with a request that the Welfare Committee be allowed $441,280 for next year. Of this amount, $400,000 is to be used exclusively for the granting of widows' pensions, the remaining $41,280 to be used for administrative purposes. The sub-committee decided to put the matter up to the main Budget Committee. In a statement accompanying the estimate President Mathews said:

"The Board of Child Welfare up to the present time has received applications from 3,168 widows, with 8,885 children under 16 years of age. In addition to these it is estimated that there are 2,000 children now in institutions who might properly be returned to their parents, making a total of 10,885 children under 16.

"At $2.50 a week a child, which is the minimum amount allowed by the city for institutional care of children, this would mean $1,412,450. It is not expected that all those applying will be found to be entitled to the assistance permitted by law. The board is of the opinion that the amount we estimate is the very lowest on which the law can be impartially and fairly administered.

Fire Commissioner Adamson was before the sub-committee again yesterday, and succeeded in obtaining an increase in the salary of Putnam A. Bates, Chief of the Bureau of Fire Alarm Telegraph, from $5,000 to $6,000. The question of reducing the salaries of Fire Chief Kenlon and Deputy Chief Lally will be taken up by the main Budget Committee on Monday.

Next week will be the last the sub-committee will have to complete the tentative budgets of the many city departments. On Monday, Oct. 25, public hearings on the budget as tentatively made up will be held. It is expected that a large number of taxpayers' organizations will be represented at the hearings. As a number of the larger departments are still to be examined, the sub-committee will be divided on Monday into three parts and will hold hearings daily and into each night.

HENRY MANN, EDITOR, DEAD.

Author of Historical Works and Civil War Veteran Was 67.

Henry Mann of 611 West 176th Street, a civil war veteran, journalist, and politician, died yesterday in St. Luke's Hospital at the age of 67 years. At his death he was the editor of Prosperity, a monthly magazine which is considered the official publication of the Republican National Committee.

Mr. Mann was born in Scotland and came alone to this country at the age of 16 years. He served in the Fifty-ninth New York Regiment during the civil war in several engagements and was captured at Ream's Station. He was placed in Libby Prison and was one of the few prisoners of foreign birth who refused to obtain their liberty by taking an oath of allegiance to the Confederacy. After the war he served in the regular army in Indian campaigns and escorted General Terry across Dakota in 1866.

He became a reporter on the staff of The New York Tribune. Later he went to The New York Sun and covered many notable assignments, including the Tweed case and the Commodore Vanderbilt will contest. He worked as an editorial writer on The New York Press and other newspapers.

ASKS AID FOR 5 CHILDREN.

Father Says It Was Refused by Department of Charities.

Florence M. Purcell, a division superintendent of the Department of Charities, appeared before Justice Collins in the Children's Court yesterday as the result of a story told by Paolo Ferrare, who said the Department had refused to aid him to care for his five children because he was not a legal resident of the county. A private institution had offered to send the children to Auburn, where they had lived for ten years, he asserted, but the State Board of Charities stepped in and said that could not be done, as the law held that the person who sent dependent persons from one county to another was guilty of an offence punishable by a fine of $50.

Ferrare said he had been living with a brother-in-law at 602 East Sixteenth Street, a shoemaker earning not more than $7 a week, who had complained that he could not longer support the children.

Miss Purcell said an investigation had shown that the children were in a clean home, were well dressed and well fed. She had not known, she said, that Ferrare's brother-in-law had told him he must go. Ferrare said he was out of work and unable to provide for the children.

SIR LIONEL CARDEN DEAD IN LONDON

FORCED OUT BY CARRANZA

He Also Incurred Displeasure of United States While Serving in Cuba—A Diplomat 38 Years.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Sir Lionel Carden, who was British Minister to Mexico from 1913 until August, 1914, when he was forced to leave Mexico City by General Carranza after the overthrow of President Huerta, died in London today.

Sir Lionel is best remembered here for the part he played during the Huerta régime in Mexico and for his utterance on the American occupation of Vera Cruz, which eventually led to his being recalled in January, 1914. It was announced at that time that he had been transferred to Brazil, and at the time of his death was officially the Minister to Brazil.

Sir Lionel was unfortunate in his assignment as Minister to Mexico, as it was known that he was strongly anti-American before he took office. He incurred the disfavor of the Government at Washington by his published criticism of President Wilson's Mexican policy. One of the embarrassing situations in which he involved the United States was when he presented his credentials as his Majesty's plenipotentiary to the Huerta Government at a time when President Wilson was insistent that it was unconstitutional and not entitled to be recognized.

A further accusation that caused bad feeling was that Sir Lionel's appointment to Mexico was due to the interest of Lord Cowdray, head of the Pearson syndicate, which had extensive investments in that country.

In September, 1914, Sir Lionel aroused a storm of criticism by saying that it was a "desperate shame that the United States had seen fit to abandon decent people in Mexico" by the evacuation of Vera Cruz by the American army.

This Mexican affair was not the first time that he had become embroiled with the United States Government. At the time of the American occupation of Cuba he became persona non grata to Washington, owing to his obstructionist tactics and his activity there in meddling in local politics and attempting to obtain favorable concessions for his countrymen.

Sir Lionel Carden was born in England and was in his sixty-fifth year. His career in the diplomatic service of Great Britain covered a period of thirty-eight years and commenced in 1877, when he was appointed Vice Consul at Havana, Cuba. In 1883 he first became acquainted with Mexico as a member of the special mission sent there by his Government under the leadership of Sir S. St. John. Two years later he was promoted to be British Consul at the City of Mexico.

For the next four years he was British Commissioner on the Mexican Mixed Claims Commission and then for a time was unattached. In addition to his offices as Minister and Consul he was twice acting Charge d'Affaires in Mexico.

In 1898 Sir Lionel was sent to Havana, Cuba, as Consul General, and remained in that position until 1902, when he was appointed Minister to Cuba. In 1905 Sir Lionel left Cuba, and during 1911-13 was Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Central America. From 1905 until 1913 he was also Minister resident at Guatemala.

Sir Lionel Carden is survived by his widow, Lady Anne Eliza Carden, who was Miss Anne Eliza Lefferts, daughter of John Leferts of Flatbush, Brooklyn.

TESTS LIFE-SAVING SUIT.

Garment Keeps Inventor's Head Above Water and His Clothing Dry.

To show the merits of a life-saving garment which he had patented, O. A. Youngren of Sheridan, Wyo., who is now staying at the New Grand Hotel, chartered a steamer yesterday and gave a demonstration in the bay off Sandy Hook. Attended by a number of photographers and moving picture men, he donned his garment and jumped overboard in rough water. The garment supported him, and, in order to give it a still better test he had the steamer to run by him, so that he might be tossed about in its wake. When he climbed aboard after forty minutes' immersion his clothes beneath the garment were dry.

Then, to show that there was no fear of being submerged, he went it again head first, and brought his head above water quickly. Later a man who had never seen the suit before put it on and dived overboard successfully. The garment covers the body completely from the feet to the neck, and is made of a species of fibre which has much buoyancy. It is put on over the owner's ordinary clothes, and Mr. Youngren said that it took him only one minute and ten seconds to get into it yesterday.

NICOLL ASKS VOTE FOR CONSTITUTION

ANALYZES ITS PROVISIONS

Only the Apportionment Plan Is Condemned, It Being Held Unfair to This City.

FOUR REFORMS FOR LABOR

Other Merits Seen in Short Ballot, Judiciary Changes, and Home Rule in Municipalities.

De Lancey Nicoll, who was one of the leading Democratic members of the late Constitutional Convention, as well as of the convention held twenty years ago, in an interview given to a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES yesterday, came out strongly in defense of the proposed new organic law which will be submitted to the voters on Nov. 2. Mr. Nicoll was a member of several of the standing committees which drafted the more important articles of the proposed Constitution, and is thoroughly familiar with all of its provisions.

In view of the veiled threats from Democratic quarters of an organized attack on the new measure at the polls, despite the fact that a vast majority of the Democratic delegates to the Constitutional Convention voted for all the vital changes made, the first question asked Mr. Nicoll was whether there was any reason why a Democrat should not vote affirmatively.

"The revised Constitution will be submitted to the people in three sections," said Mr. Nicoll. "The first section will deal with apportionment of Senate and Assembly districts. I think Democrats owe it to their party and to the City of New York to vote for that section. The second question will be whether the new articles on taxation should be adopted, and the third whether the remainder of the constitution—the main body of the instrument organic law—should be adopted. Both of these questions should be answered in the affirmative by Democrats.

Criticism of Apportionment.

Elaborating his reasons for calling on Democrats to oppose the article in which rules are laid down for the Legislature in carving out new Senate and Assembly districts next year, Mr. Nicoll said:

"I do not think that Democrats ought to or can be expected to support the apportionment article. It is true that there has been no change for the worse and that the new apportionment article is substantially the apportionment of 1894, but it contains two principles, if not more, which are inimical to the great Democratic city of New York. With respect to the Assembly, it preserves the county divisions and continues the present system by which many up-State counties elect Assemblymen by a very much less number of votes than is required to elect an Assemblyman in the City of New York.

"With respect to the Senate it contains a provision which prevents the counties of New York, Kings, and the Bronx from ever having more than half the Senate. It is true that it does not prevent the Greater City, including Richmond and Queens, from having half the Senate, but Richmond and Queens are only a small portion of the City of New York, and it seems to me that no such discriminatory provision should be in the Constitution. Democrats believe in apportionment based upon the inhabitants, excluding aliens—in other words, on the citizen population. That to them is the only fair principle of representation, and inasmuch as the apportionment article ignores that principle, it is not to be supported."

The new taxation article, Mr. Nicoll said, would inure to the benefit of Democrats just as much as Republicans, for that reason, he thought, Democrats ought to vote for it.

Appeal to All Democrats.

"As to the remainder of the revised Constitution," said Mr. Nicoll, "I am very clear that all Democrats ought to vote yes. The new organic law contains a great number of sound and salutory provisions which if adopted must bring about a better, simpler and more economical government in this State. If adopted it will go a long way toward curing many of the evils of which we have been complaining for the last twenty years."

Mr. Nicoll resented the suggestion made in certain quarters that the revised Constitution was the work of one man, Elihu Root, who was President of the Constitutional Convention.

"It was not the work of any one man or set of men," said Mr. Nicoll. "Of course, certain men exercised a greater influence in the convention than others. Probably Mr. Root as our President was the greatest influence. He had able lieutenants in Mr. Wickersham, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Stimson, Mr. O'Brien, Mr. Parsons, and many others, both on the Republican and Democratic sides. But even these men did not make the Constitution. The Constitution was made really by the representatives of all classes and callings who appeared before the several committees and submitted their views as to what amendments ought to be adopted.

"The real work of making the Constitution was done in the committees. The committees made a point of hearing everybody who cared to come before them and invited a great number of experts on governmental, sociological, industrial, financial, and legal subjects to address them. Everybody was heard who wanted to be heard and a great many were invited for the sole purpose of informing the members of the several committees."

"Would you regard the recent Constitutional Convention a partisan convention?" Mr. Nicoll was asked.

"I do not think there ever has been and I do not believe that there ever will be another convention which was as free from partisanship as the convention of 1915," was his reply. "Considering the small number of Democrats in the convention, as compared with the large Republican majority, I think they were treated with unusual generosity."

Subsequently Mr. Nicoll took up the various criticisms which have been leveled at certain of the constitutional changes reported by the convention.

Short Ballot Compromise.

"The short ballot as provided for by the convention is not all the short ballot reformers demanded," he said. "They wanted to have only the Governor and Lieutenant Governor elected, and all the other State officials who are elected at present appointed by the Governor. I voted for that. But the majority of the convention wanted the Controller and Attorney General retained also as elective officers, making only the Secretary of State, the State Treasurer, and the State Engineer appointive. The view of the majority, of course, prevailed, but incidentally all of us who believed in the real short ballot secured an important forward step. It is impossible to establish great reforms in a minute."

Mr. Nicoll said that while the "short ballot" feature of the administrative reforms decreed by the convention had received most of the public notice, the co-ordination of administrative activities and the consolidation or abolition of a majority of the 150 boards, bureaus, and commissions, many of them unrelated and others exercising duplicated powers and apparently responsible to no chief, was, to say the least, fully as important.

"Will the amendment relating to the budget reduce the expenses of the State and bring about a more economical form of government, as has been claimed by those who proposed it?

"I was on the Committee on State Finances, assisted in the preparation of the different amendments submitted by that committee, and advocated them on the floor of the convention. My judgment is that if these amendments are adopted millions of dollars will be saved every year to the State. I don't know how many millions. Some one in the convention estimated that in ten years eighty millions of dollars would be saved.

"Another feature of the work of the Committee on State Finance was the substitution of serial for sinking fund bonds, which all financial authorities in the State agree would result in an enormous saving."

Home Rule for Cities.

In discussing the new article giving a large measure of home rule to municipalities, Mr. Nicoll said:

"This is a subject which I think I know something about. I fought the battle of home rule in the convention of 1894 and obtained only the meagre provisions of the present Constitution. Now for the first time after fifty-five years New York is given again the right to govern itself, to make its own charter, and revise its own charter. It is true that after the charter is made and adopted by the electors of New York it must be submitted to the Legislature, which may nullify it. It is not required to approve it. The action of the electors of the city becomes final unless the Legislature disapproves it within a definite period.

"This nullification provision seems to me to be almost negligible, for it is inconceivable that if the electors of the City of New York, representing half of the citizens of the State entitled to vote, adopted a charter, the Legislature should nullify it. Unless it happened to contain something so unusual and shocking that it offended the moral sense of the State, no Legislature would think of doing such a thing, even if it was composed of delegates none of whom came from the City of New York. But New York will always have a very large percentage, if not a majority, of the Legislature.

"If the people of the City of New York fail to vote for this home rule amendment it does not deserve home rule. I understand that there are two classes who do not want home rule, one, the politicians who make it a business of shouting for home rule as a campaign cry for election purposes. If the city gets the home rule granted by this amendment their occupation will be gone. The other class are those who prefer to do business at the old stand, and who think they have a better chance of getting their salaries increased or some other advantage through the up-State Republicans than they would have by a Board of Estimate and Apportionment or a city Legislature."

Problems of Judiciary.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee of which former Attorney General George W. Wickersham was Chairman, Mr. Nicoll was in close touch with what was done by the convention in the matter of judiciary reforms.

"The real problems before the Judiciary Committee," said Mr. Nicoll, "were to devise some means of preventing law's delay, for the simplification of judicial procedure, and for unification of courts—and I say with confidence that the new judiciary article will bring about, if adopted, all of these reforms."

In discussing the proposed new article on taxation which aroused so much criticism from Republicans in the rural districts that its separate submission was considered advisable, Mr. Nicoll said:

"It declares that the power of taxation shall never be surrendered or contracted away, and limits the practice of granting exemptions by providing that it shall not be done except by general laws, and a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to each house. It empowers the Legislature to prescribe how the taxable subjects shall be assessed, for officers to execute the laws relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, and for uniform rules of assessment. If the Legislature acts under the power conferred by the Constitution, a system which will be more uniform, which will distribute the burdens of taxation more equitably and which will produce a larger revenue, ought to be possible."

Mr. Nicoll said that the benefits which the revised Constitution would confer on working people would outweigh tremendously any defect of omission on the part of the Convention in dealing with the long list of demands submitted by the labor organizations as their Constitutional program. He enumerated these reforms:

(1) A Department of Labor and Industry was created with commissioners to be appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It was made a constitutional department.

(2) The principle of the Workmen's Compensation act was extended to injuries from occupational diseases.

(3) A provision prohibiting manufacturing in tenement houses, warmly indorsed by the labor organizations, was put into the Constitution.

(4) The salaries of legislators was increased from $1,500 to $2,500. One of the strongest advocates for this reform was Mr. Curran of Rochester, a labor delegate, who claimed that workingmen could not afford to go to the Legislature on account of the smallness of the salary. This made a strong appeal to me, and it was one of the reasons which induced me to vote for the increase.

Blow to Political Bosses.

Mr. Nicoll said that in his opinion much of the criticism against the revised Constitution was prompted by the fact that it would shear the political bosses of many powers which they treasured and that for this reason they were anxious to see it defeated.

"Take, for instance, the new article on conservation," said Mr. Nicoll. "Nothing but that has created the row that now is going on over that reform. Heretofore that department has been in the hands of political appointees of the Governor. All that will come to an end if the new Constitution is adopted. Then the conservation of the natural resources of the State will be in the hands of nine citizens appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Senate, one from each judicial district of the State, and serving without pay. They will be men of the same class as the regents of the university. I do not know of any greater reform than this, and unless the people of the State want the natural resources to continue to be taken charge of by politicians this amendment ought to be sufficient in itself to carry the Constitution."

Mr. Nicoll finished with an earnest appeal to all good Democrats and all good Republicans to vote for the revised Constitution.

"All of the measures I have discussed are great and substantial reforms in which citizens of Democratic faith are just as much interested as citizens of Republican faith, and almost all of these measures were voted for by the Democrats as well as the Republicans in the convention," he said. "All good Democrats ought to and do look at things from the same point of view as good Republicans. They are not anxious to gain any partisan advantages. All they want is a fair show. But if Democrats are interested in the ascendency of their own party and believe that it ought to control the government then I say that this Constitution offers Democrats an opportunity that they have never had before. As things are now all of the great offices of State are appointed by the Governor by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"Under our present apportionment system the Senate is and will continue to be generally Republican, so unless the Constitution is adopted, even if we elect a Democratic Governor, he will have to appeal to a Republican Senate for the confirmation of his appointees. That means, of course, difficulties and bargaining. But if the present Constitution is adopted, all that will be changed. When the Governor is elected he will have the appointment, without the advice and consent of the Senate, of the great departments of accounts, treasury, taxation, public works, health, agriculture, charities and correction, banking and insurance. By and with the advice and consent of the Senate he will have the appointment of education, labor and industry, public utilities, conservation and civil service."

Mr. Nicoll expressed the opinion that the apportionment article and the article on taxation would be defeated but that there was hope for the main body of the Constitution.

Unions Fight Constitution.

Labor leaders, acting through the Central Federated Union, issued a general request yesterday to the 1,000,000 members of the affiliated organizations throughout the State to oppose the proposed new Constitution, with the exception of the referendum for the bonds for the completion of the Barge Canal. The workers were asked to favor woman suffrage.

ROOT SAYS CULLEN IS NOT CONSISTENT

Should Have Told Convention How to Shape Constitution, Avers President.

NO MILITARY RULE CHANGE

Proposed Organic Law Leaves Authority of Civil Courts Just Where It Was.

Ex-Senator Elihu Root, who was President of the Constitutional Convention, issued a reply yesterday to the criticisms of Edgar M. Cullen, ex-Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals, who advised voters to defeat the proposed constitution because there was not included in it an amendment to the effect that no military tribunal shall exercise jurisdiction over a civilian "unless engaged in military or naval service while the regularly constituted State courts are open to administer justice."

Mr. Root said that the discussion on this subject has involved some misunderstanding and some misrepresentation to the effect that the new revision changes the Constitution in this respect. Any such idea, he said, is wholly false. The revision, he said, does not add a word to or take a word from the provisions of the existing Constitution affecting this subject and that if the revision is adopted the guarantees of the Constitution against the abuse of military power will be left exactly as they have been since 1821 and as they have been in substance since 1777. He said:

"The present Constitution contains and the revision continues full, adequate, and effective provisions against trial by military tribunals. These provisions are:

"(1.) No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime (except in cases of impeachment, and in cases of militia when in actual service, and the land and naval forces in time of war, or which this State may keep with the consent of Congress in time of peace, and in cases of petty larceny, under the regulation of the Legislature,) unless on presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury. (Constitution; Article I., Section 6.)

"(2.) The trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever. (Article I., Section 2.)

"(3.) No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. (Article I., Section 6.)

Says There Is No Issue.

"No civilian can be tried in this State by a military tribunal, so long as these provisions stand in the Constitution. It is impossible, except by violating all three of them. We have lived under them for more than a century, and no military tribunal has ever tried a civilian because, as everybody knows, no civilian can be tried for crime except before a jury of his peers, and after a Grand Jury has declared upon its oath that it believes the accusation against him to be true. The same provisions in substance, and in almost the same words, are embodied in the Constitution of the United States, and they have proved adequate and effective there against the abuse of military power. Years ago, under the stress of the great civil war, the Supreme Court of the United States declared their sufficiency, and gave them effect in the great case of ex-Parte Milligan (4 Wallace 2).

"It is said, however, that we ought to put an additional provision into our Constitution in dealing with the decisions in some West Virginia cases which sustained trials by military commissions in that State during the strike controversy of 1912. (Nance vs. Brown; 71 W. Va., &c.) The additional provision proposed is as follows:

"'Nor shall military tribunal exercise jurisdiction over a civilian unless engaged in military or naval service while the regularly constituted State courts are open to administer justice.'

"The West Virginia cases show just the contrary. They show the futility of adding such provisions to the broad and uncompromising guarantees of civil liberty which our Constitution already contains, for the Constitution of West Virginia contained such a provision as is now urged upon us. That Constitution provided:

"'The military shall be subordinate to the civil power, and no citizen, unless engaged in the military service of the State, shall be tried or punished by any military court for any offence that is cognizable by the civil courts of the State.' (Article III., Section 12.)

Cites West Virginia Case.

"It provided that 'the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended,' omitting the customary exception of cases of rebellion or invasion. (Article III., Paragraph 4.) It declared:

"'The provisions of the Constitution of the United States and of this State are operative alike in a period of war as in time of peace, and any departure therefrom or violation thereof under the plea of necessity or any other plea is subversive of good government and tends to anarchy and despotism.' (Article I., Section 3.)

"Notwithstanding these provisions," Mr. Root continued, "Nance and others were tried by a military commission for a misdemeanor under the laws of the State and sent to the penitentiary, and the Supreme Court of West Virginia sustained the decision, not upon the ground that the provisions of the Constitution were insufficient, but upon the ground that the Constitution and all the provisions in it were suspended and made inoperative by the insurrection."

Mr. Root quoted this decision of the Court:

"'The invasion or insurrection sets aside, suspends and nullifies the actual operation of the Constitution and laws. The guarantees of the Constitution, as well as the common law and statutes and the functions and powers of the courts and officers become inoperative by virtue of the disturbance. The proclamation of martial law simply recognizes the status or condition of things resulting from the invasion or insurrection, and declares it. * * * The provisions against the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus and trial of citizens by military courts for offenses cognizable by the civil courts cannot, in the nature of things, be actually operative in any section in which the Constitution itself and the functions of the courts have been arrested, set aside, or obstructed in their operation by an invasion, insurrection, rebellion or riot. In such cases the constitutional guarantees of life, liberty and property have ceased to be operative and efficacious.'"

U. S. Constitution Violated.

Manifestly, said Mr. Root, such a decision cannot be met by putting additional prohibitions into a Constitution, and he continued:

"According to the decision, all additional provisions would be worthless. What such a case calls for is, not the enlargement of the Constitution, but the enforcement of it; the punishment of the men who violate it. I have no doubt that the men who were tried by military commissions were deprived of their rights under the Constitution of West Virginia, and also under the Constitution of the United States. They were deprived of their liberty without due process of law against the prohibition of the Fourteenth Amendment. That view appears to have been entertained in West Virginia. Before there could be a review of these decisions of the West Virginia court by the Supreme Court of the United States a decision of that court was avoided by the release of all the convicted men upon pardons by the Governor of the State. The proceedings of the West Virginia military tribunal if they had occurred in this State would equally have violated the Constitution of this State as it now exists.

"If we were to put into the Constitution the kind of provision which is now proposed, that no civilian shall be tried by a military tribunal while the civil courts are open, we put into the Constitution also a necessary implication that civilians may be tried by military tribunals when the courts are not open; that is to say, if we put such a provision into the Constitution, a court martial law has been declared within a given district and the courts within that district have been closed, for the first time in our history the military commander would have the constitutional right to try citizens for offenses against the law. When we reflect upon the ease with which a military commander can arrange that courts shall be closed in time of disturbance, it is apparent that such a provision would be opening the door for the destruction by military power of the most valuable guarantees of our constitutional liberty.

No Change Is Needed.

"If I had been in the committee when the proposed addition to the Constitution was brought up I should probably have voted for it, not because I ever thought it necessary, but as a correct statement of existing law. I should have made a mistake, however, through not realizing the effect which I have just stated of putting that statement into the Constitution. Instead of adding strength to the provisions against military usurpation it would have imposed a limitation upon the provisions to that end already existing, and would have made the constitutional guarantees of civil liberty weaker rather than stronger."

Mr. Root went on to say that ex-Judge Cullen was Chairman of a committee of the State Bar Association appointed to make suggestions to the convention, and that while the committee did make a "very able report" ex-Judge Cullen did not in any way suggest the amendment which he now regards as so important. He said ex-Judge Cullen did not then regard the amendment as important or desirable, and he added:

"I think he was right then and wrong now."

MAYOR UNFAIR, SAYS MEADE.

Fifth Avenue Bus Official Defends Its Franchise Offer.

R. W. Meade, President of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, charged yesterday that Mayor Mitchel, President McAneny, and Borough President Mathewson of the Bronx, as members of the Franchise Committee of the Board of Estimate, had acted without proper investigation in rejecting his company's bid and recommending that a franchise to operate a bus service be given to the New York Motor Bus Company. He also charged that information furnished to Harry P. Nichols, engineer of the Franchise Bureau, was employed in laying out the routes turned over to another company.

"On the question of compensation this company offered $50,000 more than did the New York Bus Company, and on ten miles less of streets," he said. "But its act the committee has refused to give the city immediately a unified bus system of fifty miles operated by a going concern with service and equipment of established experience and efficiency for one fare. Our plan is a fare of ten cents and with transfers to tie up the existing system with the new. The committee, however, seems to have been dazzled by the specious proposition of the New York Motor Bus Company to give a five-cent fare over a few unimportant short lines while requiring a ten-cent fare over the remainder of its system.

"The bus company's offer of $775,000 only means $700,000, for it is predicated on first payment being made after operation has been in force for six months, but the committee has given the company two months more and the chances are for other delays. Our offer was to begin at once and the system to be in complete running order in six months' time. The committee described this difference as unimportant."

MRS. TAFT HOME FROM FAIR.

Canal Closing Causes Brief Delay to Travelers.

Mrs. William H. Taft, with her niece, Miss Louise Taft, and her sister, Miss M. C. Herron, arrived last night from San Francisco on the Panama-Pacific liner Finland and was met at the pier by her husband, the ex-President, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Taft and Miss L. C. More.

While waiting at the end of the pier for the Finland to come alongside, several men assured Mr. Taft that he would get their votes if he ran again for President, and one very persistent man introduced a string of his relatives to the former President one after another.

Purser Matthews said the 419 passengers from the Finland for California left Colon at 11 o'clock on Sunday morning, Oct. 10, and the 438 from the Kroonland left Panama at the same time, so that they were all on board by 4 o'clock in the afternoon and on their way for New York and San Francisco.

Mrs. Taft was met at Balboa by General Edwards, an old friend of her husband, who took her across to Colon in his automobile and showed the slides which prevented the ships passing through.

U. H. McCalter, President of the Fidelity Trust Company of Newark, was a passenger on the Finland with his wife.

SEEKS AUTO THIEVES' BAND.

Prosecutor Questions Two Prisoners Awaiting Arraignment.

Carl B. Doremus, a chauffeur of 746 Sterling Place, and Wallace Seaman of Patchogue, who were arrested at Patchogue on Friday night for alleged theft of automobiles, were committed to the Tombs yesterday to await arraignment. Both Doremus and Seaman were questioned by Assistant District Attorney Gates, who believed they could name members of a band of automobile thieves who have been operating throughout Long Island.

Adolph Beniward, the Sunday school teacher whose confession on Thursday led to the arrest of Doremus and Seaman, told the police yesterday that the stolen automobiles always were stored in a Broadway garage. According to the police, Beniward said the proprietor of the garage knew he was taking care of stolen property. Beniward and Frank Joachim, with whom he was arrested in Middleboro, Ky., are now in the Tombs awaiting sentence on a plea of guilty.

BORAH ADVISES HIS PARTY.

Says Platform Must Be Progressive —He and Burton at Capital.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Two Republicans mentioned for the Presidential nomination were in Washington today—ex-Senator Theodore E. Burton of Ohio and Senator William E. Borah of Idaho. Neither has announced his candidacy, and some of Mr. Borah's recent statements have been taken to mean that he might not be a candidate at all. Mr. Burton returned not long ago from an extended trip in Latin America, to find himself, perhaps, the most frequently mentioned of the half dozen Republicans spoken of for the nomination.

"I am more concerned for the present," said Mr. Borah today, "with the platform to be adopted by the Republican convention than with the possible nominee. Senator Weeks of Massachusetts, Senator Burton of Ohio, and Senator Cummins of Iowa, are regarded as candidates for the nomination and all of them have warm friends in the part of the country where I have been."

Mr. Borah said that if the Republican Party was to win in the next campaign it must have a progressive platform. Those who thought the pendulum had swung back from the progressive doctrines, he said, would find themselves mistaken.

Mr. Burton left here tonight for a short stay at Hot Springs, Va.

WIRELESS WITHOUT TOWERS

Invention Announced by R. S. Woolverton, U. S. Radio Inspector.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 16.—A wireless telegraphy invention eliminating the present towering steel structures for sending and receiving by simply projecting a short wire along the ground was announced here today by R. S. Woolverton, United States Radio Inspector.

In collaboration with Palmer B. Hewlitt of Hollister, Cal., Mr. Woolverton has been experimenting for nine months with the new apparatus. Its inventors assert that the methods has proved eminent successful in receiving messages from Honolulu, Sayville, and Arlington, Va. Freedom from static conditions has been achieved in the reception of messages, but less success has been attained in transmitting messages.

SHED COLLAPSE KILLS BOY.

Score of Women and Children Have Narrow Escape.

Walter Blum, 16 years old, of 380 Waverly Avenue was killed and a score of women and children had narrow escapes from death yesterday in Newark when an old lumber shed at 100 Magnolia Street, which had been condemned by the Building Department, collapsed. The shed was owned by the Hecht & Kugel Company, a sash and door manufacturing firm, now in the hands of a receiver. Several months ago the lumber shed was damaged by fire. Since then people in the neighborhood have been taking away part of the old wreck for kindling wood.

Yesterday there were about a score of women and children gathering wood. Young Blum and Abraham Miller of 121 Magnolia Street were on their way home from an errand, going through the lumber yard on a short cut. Miller heard a cracking noise, and shouted a warning to the wood gatherers. All got out safely except Blum, who was struck by a beam and buried under the debris.

An alarm of fire was turned in and the police reserves of the Fourth Precinct were called. It was at first reported that several women and children had been caught under the wreckage. The firemen pulled the debris apart, but they found only Blum, who was pronounced dead. County Physician McKenzie was notified, and ordered an investigation into the cause of the collapse.

The police believe that the old shed was weakened by the wood gathers. The officials also learned that a few minutes before the collapse several persons were chopping down part of the shed.

DYNAMITE CARGO SOLD.

German Steamer Magdeburg to Unload After Year in Gravesend Bay.

After months of complaint from the residents of Bay Ridge, the cargo of dynamite on the German steamer Magdeburg, anchored for more than a year in Gravesend Bay, has been purchased by the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Company and the unloading into lighters will commence tomorrow morning.

Two weeks ago Captain Heinrich Orgel of the Magdeburg obtained a permit from the Collector of the Port to unseal the hatches where the explosives were stowed to get a sample for the du Pont Company. The Captain communicated with the owners in Hamburg after he had received a definite offer from the powder company, and was notified yesterday by wireless, via Sayville, that he could accept it.

One of the officials of the du Pont Company said yesterday that the dynamite on the Magdeburg was not in accordance with American standards and would be recompounded in the powder factory before being put on sale.

NEW FIGHT FOR RICH BOY.

William Mills, Jr., Starts Another Suit for Possession of Son.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Oct. 16.—In the legal battle for the custody of William Crossman Lee, 12 years old, heir to a $3,000,000 estate, which has been going on in the courts of Westchester for weeks, counsel for William Mills, Jr., father of the boy, today served a notice of motion on Thomas Lee of White Plains, stepfather of the boy, who has his custody, for a new trial of the writ of habeas corpus proceedings.

Several weeks ago Mr. Mills, who has been trying to get his son away from the stepfather, brought habeas corpus proceedings, but Justice Arthur S. Tompkins dismissed the writ and turned the "poor little rich boy" over to his stepfather. The motion for a new trial is based on an affidavit that the dead wife of Mills, who married Lee after she had obtained a divorce from Mills, told the witness that Lee had been unkind to her.

The estate to which the boy is heir is being tied by various other motions.

Beekman in the Somerset County Court yesterday to the charge of being the author of a "poison pen" letter to Miss Anna M. Frawley, a school teacher of Springdale, but said she had written it under the spell of hallucinations of which she was a victim, and pleaded for mercy on the ground that her action was involuntary.

Prosecutor A. M. Beekman said that his investigation of the conditions preceding the writing of the letter convinced him that Mrs. Quick's statement as to her mental condition was true. Judge Beekman then placed Mrs. Quick on probation for two years.

"GO-TO-CHURCH SUNDAY,"

Pastors Expect Movement to Swell Congregations Today.

Reports from the five boroughs of New York City to the "Go-to-Church Sunday" Committee indicate that the observance of "Go-to-Church Sunday" today will be even more general than it was last year, and that the plan of leaving to each church the working out of its own methods for gathering the people is likely to make the increase in attendance more permanent. Episcopal, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Presbyterian, Dutch Reform, Lutheran, and churches of ten other denominations have reported their efforts to bring to church many who do not usually attend.

Many of the pastors believe that the war makes this an opportune time for an aggressive religious campaign, and many campaigns will be launched tomorrow, several of them carrying with them canvasses of the local church neighborhoods with a view of obtaining a religious census, to be made use of for inviting habitual non-churchgoers.

SCHWAB DEAL NOT CLOSED.

His Aid Admits He Hopes to Get Pennsylvania Steel Company.

James H. Ward, assistant to Charles M. Schwab in the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, said yesterday that dispatches from Philadelphia regarding the sale of the Pennsylvania Steel Company to Bethlehem interests were not correct.

"The reports are untrue," he said. "We are negotiating for control of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and the negotiations are progressing. The dispatches from Philadelphia were most premature and incorrect as to details."

The details referred to by Mr. Ward had reference to the prices paid for the Pennsylvania Steel preferred and common stock held by the Pennsylvania Railroad, which were reported to be $100 a share for the preferred and $35 for the common. He declined to comment on the actual prices being considered.

He had not been arrested up to a late hour last night. It was said that an investigation in progress may result in the arrest of several others on the charge of falsifying signatures to primary petitions.

Of the three liners leaving yesterday for European ports, the Ancona of the Italian Line for Naples had the most passengers, carrying 45 in cabins and 1,200 in steerage, all reservists. The American liner St. Louis had 700 passengers of all classes for Liverpool and 2,200 tons of cargo and left at noon. She was followed by the Norwegian-America liner Bergensfjord, with 350 passengers and 5,000 tons of cargo for Bergen.

RACING AT ELKINS PARK—DAY ON GOLF LINKS

JOCKEY INJURED AT J. E. WIDENER'S RACE

Kicked in Steeplechase and Reported Dying—Much Open Betting.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Oct. 16.—Lynnewood Farm at Elkins Park took on the aspect of an English race course this afternoon when Joseph E. Widener gave his annual invitation race meet. It was attended by more than 10,000 people, and there were seventy-one entries. Nearly 1,000 automobiles were parked on the grounds.

The bookies were ribboned to distinguish them from the "welchers" who so frequently fleece the speculators at small meets. Many bookies came from New York. The betting was the most open that has been seen at any of the meets in Pennsylvania in years.

There was one serious accident. Jockey Waugh went down with Sandow in the third race, the Cheltenham Steeplechase, and was kicked on the head by the flying hoofs of one of the horses coming from behind. He was taken to the Abington Hospital unconscious, and late tonight it was said that the doctors feared he was dying.

The Lynnewood Challenge Cup, a steeplechase, was the feature of the card. There was a quiet tip on Knight of Mercy, entered by F. Ambrose Clark of New York, and it proved correct. The few in on the tip gave the books a trouncing at 2 to 1 when Knight galloped past Mrs. Payne Whitney's Web Carter, the pacemaker, and came home a winner. Lampblack, a long shot, took the short end of the purse.

The first half of the first race, which was divided, went to the old Baltimore gelding, Billy Hibbs, now owned by Mrs. J. T. Temple. He beat out the 3 to 5 favorite, Armament, owned by C. M. Williams. General Edward Morrell's Matchfield was third. The Widener colors were carried to the front when Mr. Widener's oft-time winner Valentine raced home ahead of Fadoodle and Otto Floto.

There were seven starters in the Cheltenham Steeplechase, but four of them fell, three going down at the final fence. Flying Peep, owned by Harry La Montagne, with Franklin up, won the race from William J. Clothier's Nelephant, Sky-Foot, F. Ambrose Clark's colt Huguenot, a 1 to 2 favorite, led all the way in the fourth race and easily beat out Doublet, a castoff from the stable of James Butler. Beethoven finished a close third. At-a-Boy was beaten out. The Century Steeplechase, with $1,000 added, brought out some of the country's best jumpers. E. M. Weld's Weldship was the favorite, but followers of the riders did not pass up Allen, on Shannon River. This combination received 5 to 1 support. Hal Parr owns Shannon River, and his brother, Lewis Parr, also had an entry, Exton. The Baltimore delegation, instead of backing Shannon River, played Exton to show. Of course they cashed, but got only even money or 4 to 5 where they could have had 5 to 1 on Shannon River, the winner.

Mortimer Schiff's Swish and Shannon River ran almost as a team for the first mile. Weldship ran a disappointing race and was never prominent.

The bookies rejoiced when Zellwood, an outsider, beat out the odds-on favorite Senegambian and the long shot, Mount Holly, in the last race. The latter ran a good race, but succumbed before the fast pace set by Zellwood from the very start. In the run through the stretch Senegambian beat out Mount Holly for the place.

SPORTS CLEAN, SAYS RUBIEN

President of Metropolitan Association Tells of Graft Investigation.

"It is really surprising how little 'grafting' is done by the athletes of the Metropolitan district," declared President Frederick W. Rubien of the Metropolitan Association of the A. A. U. while discussing yesterday the investigation into the amateur status of Abel Kiviat and Harry Smith, who are now under fire.

"From time to time I have heard persons cast reflections on amateur athletes in general. It is not uncommon to hear the remark that all the star athletes are grafters. This is not only an injustice to the men, but to our great sport as well. These assertions are seldom worth even investigation, but when we are presented with the goods we never hesitate to take action.

"Just to satisfy myself that everything would be done either to clear Smith and Kiviat of the charges made against them or to prove the allegations true, I went up skate last week, and while there I dug up a lot of information that will be useful to myself and the Metropolitan Association. Just now I cannot tell what I learned.

"We cannot prevent persons from casting aspersions on athletics in general, but when they make individual charges it is different. We are trying to make them prove the charges. If it turns out that the boys now under fire are innocent of the accusations made by Handicapper Campbell, I will be highly pleased, but I will be the first to advocate the revocation of their amateur standing if they are proved guilty.

"This has been an unpleasant case from the start, but I am pleased in a way that it has come, for it has given me an opportunity to learn a number of things that convince me more than ever of the honesty of star athletes of the metropolitan district. I also want to say a good word for the New England boys. In making my investigation up State I found that in every instance boys from New England who competed in armory games or in outdoor sports there did so for their legitimate carfare and dinner money, and from their accounts it would seem that their fare was very frugal.

"Amateur athletics are now as clean as they possibly can be kept. We are making, and will continue to make, every effort to rid the sports of the few undesirables. This goes for officials as well as athletes."

BIDDLE AND SCOTT LEAD.

Philadelphians Defeat Allen and Dunn in Hot Springs Tennis.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Oct. 16.—The last day's programme in the fourth annual open lawn tennis tournament of the Hot Springs Golf and Tennis Club closed today with the finals in men's doubles between Craig Biddle and Edgar Scott of Philadelphia against J. A. Allen and McKee Dunn. Biddle and Scott surprised the gallery by winning in straight sets at 6—1, 9—7, 6—3. They played good team work and Biddle was very effective in his serving and volleying, scoring many points at the critical time in the second set.

In the afternoon the largest crowd of the week turned out to see Miss Eleanora Sears of Boston and Craig Biddle play Miss Marian Fenno of Boston and Bernon S. Prentice of New York in the finals of the mixed doubles. Miss Sears and Biddle started off by winning the first four games, but Miss Fenno and Prentice gave the gallery thrill after thrill by reeling off the next five games. Biddle's serving in the next game brought it to five all. From this point on Miss Fenno and Prentice played remarkable team work and had no difficulty in winning out the set and match. The score was 1—6, 6—3.

PHILLIES HONORED.

Prominent Philadelphians Give Dinner for Pat Moran's Men.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Oct. 16.—Pat Moran's Phillies, who won the National League pennant, but lost the world's series, were feasted and praised at a dinner given in their honor at the Bellevue-Stratford tonight.

At the tables were men representing the highest walks of life and the most prominent representatives of the social, financial, political, and business circles of the city and State. E. T. Stotesbury acted as honorary chairman, Joseph P. Rogers, Judge-elect of Common Pleas Court, was toastmaster and the speakers were men who love the game of baseball and are ardent supporters of good clean sportsmanship. Among those present were former Governor John K. Tener, President of the National League, William F. Baker, President of the Philadelphia club; Fred T. Chandler, Vice President of the club; Senator James P. McNichol; E. J. Cattell, Colonel Thomas E. Murphy, one of the stockholders of the club; Connie Mack of the Athletics and the guest of honor, Pat Moran, manager of the Phillies.

Alexander received an automobile, a gift from the Phillies' supporters represented by a committee consisting of W. H. T. Huhn, George H. Brooke, Robert M. Drayton, Edwin J. Hyneman, and Lawrence Fuller.

Alexander made a game effort to respond with a speech of thanks, but after a few words looked appealingly at Manager Moran and said: "I'm getting wild, Pat; you had better take me out." Other players received valuable gifts.

Senator McNichol, E. T. Stotesbury, and Fred Chandler agreed that some worthy and lasting token of Philadelphia's esteem for the Phillies should be given each member of the team, and the three men pledged themselves to bring this about. It is said that each man on the team will receive a handsome present in the near future.

Big Crowd Sees Rutgers Win.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Oct. 16.—Before a crowd of 5,000 this afternoon Rutgers defeated the Muhlenberg football team, 25 to 0, scoring a touchdown and the ensuing goal in each of the first three quarters. The score hardly gives an idea of the real playing of the game, for Muhlenberg fought inch of the way, and after being held at bay all through threatened to score in the final quarter. In this session a series of plunges netted thirty yards, but Rutgers' defense stiffened, and on their twenty-yard line Mr. Fleming tried a placement kick which went wide.

Rutgers suffered heavy penalizations for holding, and their chief fault was fumbling, losing the ball several times on this account when near Muhlenberg's goal. In the last quarter Stephens, the visitors' star quarter, sustained a broken ankle.

Rutgers offensive was powerful after a series of line plunges. Wittpenn scored the first touchdown. It was Bracher who went over the goal line in the second quarter for another touchdown. The third score was made by Elliott, who relieved Bird Wittpenn after being hurt. M. Fleming was Muhlenberg's chief star, though Stephens shone in running back punts. The line-up:

Navy Freshmen Beaten by Peddie.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 16.—Peddie Institute scored a 10 to 6 victory over the Navy freshman eleven this afternoon in a game that was featured by two long runs for touchdowns. Murphy, quarter back for the Peddie team, scored the first points of the game when he caught a punt and dodged through a broken field for a run of 80 yards for a touchdown. The Navy almost duplicated the performance a few minutes later. An attempt to kick a goal from the field was blocked by Warner and he raced down the gridiron for 70 yards for the only score by the Navy men. The deciding points came as the result of a drop kick by Nichols. The line-up:

Outweighed several pounds to the man, the home team was handicapped by the slippery field, which made any open play impossible. Both teams resorted to a punting game in the first half. MILITARY ACADEMY DEFEATS MANUAL

Cornwall Boys Work Hard to Gain Victory Over Training School.

Manual Training High School was defeated by the New York Military Academy at Ebbets Field yesterday afternoon by the score of 13 to 7 in a hard fought and well played game. It was the open style of play which the Military eleven used that had the high school students baffled. Long forward passes and open formations were used time after time by the Cornwall team, but Manual's line was strong and several times when their goal line was in danger Manual braced and held the cadets.

In the first period, with the ball in midfield, Childs hurled a long forward pass to Weston, who galloped down the field for a touchdown, throwing off two Manual tacklers in his dash. Manual scored in the second period. Military held for downs on her own fifteen-yard line and received the pigskin. White punted, but the pass was bad and it was a poor kick. Titus picked up the ball near the side lines and, aided by splendid interference, ran forty yards for a touchdown.

Manual held the Military eleven several times in the third period, when the cadets had the ball within the shadow of Manual's goal posts. Three times the Military team carried the ball to within a few feet of Manual's goal, but there they met a stiff, stubborn defence that knew no breaking. Toward the end of the period another long forward pass, Childs to Weston, caught Manual unaware and Weston ran thirty yards for the touchdown that defeated Manual. A special chartered steamboat carried 250 rooters down from Cornwall and, headed by a band and the goat mascot, the Military students marched around the field in much glee after the game. Winners with the Cue.

J. Cosgrove displayed excellent form in winning from Dr. H. N. Pope last night in the amateur handicap three-cushion-carrom billiard tournament at the Audubon Academy after he had conceded fourteen points to his opponent, by the score of 42 to 16. Cosgrove led practically from the start and completed his string in seventy-two innings, making high runs of 7 and two of 5 points each. His run of 7 is the highest mark of the tournament to date.

A fifteen-point handicap was of no value to Charles Matthews in his game with Dr. H. D. Jennings last night in the amateur handicap 18.2 balk-line billiard tournament at the Knickerbocker Academy in Brooklyn, which the latter won by the score of 215 to 163. Jennings was playing for 215 points, while Matthews was required to score only 200 to win, and the former ran out his string in thirty-seven innings. He had high runs of 28, 25, and 22, with an average of 5.80-37. Matthews made high runs of 26, 26, and 18, and he had an average of 4 19-36. Tomorrow evening Charles White, the scratch man of the tournament, will attempt to score 200 points before Charles Worcester can tally 150.

WIDEN CHURCH SPLIT ON PANAMA SESSION

High and Low Episcopalians to Fight Out the Issue at Meeting Oct. 26.

PRELATE DENOUNCES IDEA

Forbids Catholics to Take Part in Congress for Evangelizing of Latin America.

Dissension in the Protestant Episcopal Church between the High and Low parties on the question of whether the Board of Missions should reverse its decision to send delegates to the Panama conference on the evangelization of Latin America have reached an acute stage. The final clash will come on Tuesday, Oct. 26, when the ritualistic wing will demand at a meeting of the board that no delegates be dispatched to the Pan-Protestant gathering at the isthmus next February on the ground that the sending of delegates would be a direct insult to the Roman Church.

In a pastoral letter of the Catholic Bishop of Panama, a translation of which has just reached this city, he prohibits "under penalty of mortal sin all Catholics subject to our jurisdiction to assist at the sessions of the proposed Protestant Congress." Under his influence, the President of Panama, according to dispatches, has withdrawn consent for the use of the National Theatre for the conference.

The current number of The Living Church, the avowed organ of the ritualists, puts the issue squarely before communicants, whether it would not be well, if the board appointed delegates for the Church to declare its independence of the board. In other words, it would sweep the board out of office.

Opposed by Dr. Manning.

The leader of the forces against the appointment of delegates is the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church. The Very Rev. William M. Grosvenor, Dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, yesterday granted an interview in which he espoused the side of the board, and expressed the hope that the way would be clear for the Roman Catholics to join with the Protestants in the work for Central and South America. The official name of the conference is now the Congress for Christian Work, the word missionary having been dropped out of deference to the Roman Catholics, when criticisms were hurled against the policy of the organization.

The Living Church in its leading editorial says that the denunciation by the Roman Catholic Bishop of Panama supports the view which John Barrett of the Bureau of Latin American Republics and others had taken with respect to the effect which the "unhappy movement" might have on Latin America. It asserts that this conference will do more harm than the Pan-American Bureau will be able to overcome for years.

"It may indeed be said," the editorial states, "that American citizens cannot be shut out of Panama by this protest of a Roman Catholic Bishop, backed up, as it is, by the President of the little republic. Of course, they cannot, but most of us do not care to propagate our religion by an appeal to force, and it is enough for us to know simply that for the purposes that have been advertised, we are not wanted in Panama, not wanted very likely in Latin America at all. Let it be remembered that the City of Panama is not in the Canal Zone; the United States has no control over it whatever. Neither do we care to appeal to the United States Navy to overawe our youngest neighbor among the nations."

The Panama Bishop says in his pastoral letter that "without doubt these Protestants consider the Republic of Panama as something which belongs to them, where they can come to hold meetings, congresses, conventions, at will, as they might in any part of the United States, taking possession of our public buildings for that purpose.

Bishop Warns Catholics.

"Of what will the congress treat? Why, of 'Christian work,' that is to say, of our evangelization, for, according to them, we are ignorant of our morals! In their conception, we are outcasts. They would place us in the road of civilization, for to them we wander in the darkness of heathenism.

"We, in fulfillment of our pastoral duty and in use of our authority, formally prohibit, under penalty of mortal sin, all Catholics subject to our jurisdiction to assist at the sessions of the proposed Protestant congress, even though it should be from curiosity."

"There are those," said Dean Grosvenor last evening, "who think that this movement might be regarded as an intrusion into countries which have for many generations been Catholic and are today largely so. The Roman Catholic Church cannot reasonably object to other bodies coming into so large a country as South America. The Roman Catholic Church claims a world-wide dominion, for its missionary activities go everywhere. It sends missionaries into countries more or less composed of members of the Eastern Church, the church of Russia and Greece. It also establishes missions in England and in all British colonies and in other countries presumably Protestant, such as Scotland and the Scandinavian lands. South America must expect to have within its borders people of different religions. If the sending of missionaries of Protestant Churches is an intrusion, which I maintain it is not, then the criticism should be based on the fact that we have established missions in South America, and not on the fact that we confer with other Christian bodies."

George Zabriskie, discussing the "acute dissension," as he calls it, in the current number of The Churchman, sustains the board.

The Roman Catholics declare Franciscan monks came over to this continent with Columbus, and that in South America for more than four centuries there has been an unceasing effort on their part to spread the Christian religion.

The Executive Committee of the congress is conducting a well-organized propaganda from an office at 156 Fifth Avenue. Many circulars are being sent throughout the country, and bulky reports and papers are being sent among prominent clergymen for discussion and criticism.

SMUTS ANSWERS OPPOSITION

Boer Minister Says Government Is Ready for Armed Protest.

CAPE TOWN, Oct. 16.—In a campaign speech at Potchefstrom, Transvaal, General Jan C. Smuts, Minister of Interior, Mines and Defense of the South African Union, taking as his text the demand of the Nationalists in the present electoral campaign that "Premier Botha and General Smuts must go," declared nothing would suit him better than a deliverance from the hell in which he had lived for two years, but that the Government would stand by the people in the end. He added:

"If the Nationalists, finding themselves in a small minority after the forthcoming general election, attempt an armed protest I can assure them they again will have martial law."

LONDON, Oct. 16.—A Reuter dispatch from Cape Town says:

"General Louis Botha, the Premier, has concluded another electioneering tour on which he addressed many meetings in former rebel centres in the Western Transvaal. At a majority of these meetings he received a peaceful hearing and obtained votes of confidence, but at Christiana he was howled down and his face bespattered with mud."

Women's Handbags "Made in America"

That Europe Might Well Envy

"MADE in Paris"—"made in Vienna." Hitherto the magic of these words has controlled the market for novelties in women's bags. But this year only a few samples have come from foreign centers, and American designers have had their first real opportunity to originate. The results are here—they are wonderful.

Not even those Old-World artisans—expert of eye and hand, with generations of skilled workmen behind them—have created things finer in workmanship, or more pleasing in conception.

American workmen have evolved the first really successful departure from the stereotyped metal frame. They have done things to celluloid that no man ever thought of doing before. They have glorified it—made it semi-translucent and tinted it to harmonize or contrast with miladi's richest fabrics. It is jade, shell or amber and other wanted colors—it is hand-engraved—it is inlaid with gold or silver or pearls.

Formerly all fine bead-work was done across the water. Now exquisite work is turned out in the little shops of our own City.

Bags of Velvet and Silk

are here in pouch, bracelet, and other shapes—with frames of sterling silver, French gilt, and the new celluloid. Some are studded with steel beads. All are exquisitely lined with brocaded or striped silks, and variously outfitted—some with purses attached to chains.

A pouch bag of velvet, run through with a hair-line of gold, has French gilt frame and pale gold silk lining. Fitted with purse and mirror. $14.89

A black velvet bag, with hand-engraved silver frame, lined with gold silk, and fitted with silk purse and mirror, is $38.50

Leather and Suede Bags

Pin, long-grain seal and suede are the popular leathers this season. Dull seal is in especially high favor. In colors, browns, dark greens, and deep blues are chosen. Some of these leathers are so fine and soft that they lend themselves to shirring like silk.

One of these shirred bags, of pin seal, topped with a carved rose knob of real elephant ivory, exquisitely lined, and fitted with purse on chain and horseshoe mirror, is $13.89

A pin seal bag with pleated gusset all around the outside has hand-decorated shell top and richly colored silk lining in Chinese design. This is $14.89

BALTIMORE MAN FOR A. A. U. HEAD

NO CHANCE FOR HUMPHREY

President of the Olympic Club Positively Will Not Accept the Position.

PAWLING ALSO A CANDIDATE

Philadelphia Man Has Been in the Running for This Post for Several Years.

As the time approaches for the annual convention of the Amateur Athletic Union, it is becoming more evident daily that there is certain to be a scramble for the position of President, which will be vacated by Alfred J. Lill, Jr., of Boston, who will retire this year after serving the customary two-year term.

William F. Humphrey, of the Olympic Club, San Francisco, has flatly asserted that under no circumstances will he accept the nomination, which Justice Bartow S. Weeks, Frederick W. Rubien and others high up in the Amateur Athletic Union are trying to induce him to take. It has been repeatedly rumored that Humphrey would reconsider his refusal of the berth, but he stated yesterday that under no conditions would he be a candidate for the leading office of the A. A. U.

After Humphrey's stand became known three weeks ago, local athletic leaders turned their attention to George J. Turner, of Baltimore, present Third Vice President of the A. A. U., who is regarded highly throughout the East and wherever he is known.

The masterly manner in which Mr. Turner directed the national championships at Baltimore last year won for him the admiration of all who attended the sports, including the late James E. Sullivan, and with Humphrey out of the running by his own choice, Turner seems to have the best chance in the race for Lill's position.

Pittsburgh has come to the front with John Tom Taylor, long prominently connected with amateur sports, but it is believed here that Mr. Taylor is not anxious for the job and will retire in favor of Mr. Turner.

George F. Pawling, President of the Middle Atlantic Association of the A. A. U., will have to be strongly considered as a candidate, for if nothing else his campaign has at least six months' start on all his prospective rivals. Mr. Pawling believes this is his year. He has waited some time for it to arrive. The Middle Atlantic President has been imbued with fighting spirit since he won a family squabble at the annual meeting of his association this year, and he will come to the Waldorf-Astoria next month prepared to make the best of his several struggles for the Presidency.

In local athletic circles there has been talk of raising Frederick W. Rubien from the position of Secretary-Treasurer to that of President of the A. A. U., but this move does not meet with the approval of Mr. Rubien or of those who believe he should be retained in his present capacity. He has filled the berth made vacant by the death of Mr. Sullivan to the satisfaction of all.

There are bound to be other candidates in addition to Turner and Pawling, but the chances are that these two will be the rivals when the actual voting takes place.

GILMORE DENIES RUMOR.

Federal League Not Seeking Peace with Organized Baseball.

The Federal League club owners are not importuning any officials of organized baseball in an attempt to bring about peace, said President James A. Gilmore of the independent circuit, in a statement issued yesterday. Gilmore denied the reports that the Federal Leaguers had visited the world's series in any other capacity than that of spectators. He said there was a deep motive in the reports that were circulated to the effect that the Federal League was in distress and was making strong efforts to bring about peace.

Gilmore said that many of the players, who were in organized ball this season have not signed for 1916, and the reports that the Feds are seeking peace are being circulated with the intention of keeping these players from signing with the independent circuit. He said that it was ridiculous to suppose that the Federal League Club owners were attempting to reach an agreement with organized ball in regard to a salary limit for players. He said that the fact that the Feds were able to pay large salaries to players was one of the league's strongest weapons, and there was no intention of throwing it away.

President Gilmore said that the showing of the Federal League clubs in the West was satisfactory, and that the Feds were rapidly gaining in favor in that section of the country. With the establishment of a Federal League club in this city, Gilmore feels certain that the league will win popularity in the East.

McNamara Star "Pro" Golfer.

Without doubt the most successful golf professional in America this year is Tom McNamara of Boston. He is American-born and one of the triumvirate of celebrated home-breds, the other two being Brady and McDermott. It will be remembered that McNamara finished second in the open championship of the United States, which was played at Laitusrol, at which time his score of 298 for the 72 holes was but a single stroke behind Jerome Travers, who won the title. He followed this up by capturing the open championship of Philadelphia at Philadelphia Club with 296 for 72 holes. McNamara went to Chicago and won the Western open title at the Glen Oak Country Club, returning a score of 304 strokes. Such a performance is one of unusual merit, for it will be seen that in the three big tournaments his total for 216 holes was 898 strokes, or an average of a trifle more than four strokes to the hole.

BIG SCORES MADE BY MANY WINNERS IN COLLEGE FOOTBALL—HARVARD'S GAME CLOSE

Capt. Ned Mahan Drops Three Field Goals; One from 41-Yard Line.

VIRGINIA'S OFFENSIVE WEAK

Southerners Who Defeated Yale 10 to 0 Two Weeks Ago, Play Below Expectations.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 16.—University of Virginia today was able to hold its goal line secure against Harvard just as it did two weeks ago against Yale. The Southerners, however, were beaten decisively by the Crimson team, which, through the prowess of Captain Ned Mahan, was able to negotiate three goals from the field, one in each, the second, third and fourth periods of the game.

The Virginians proved less formidable than was anticipated from their 10 to 0 defeat of Yale two weeks ago. They had little in the way of an offense which Harvard did not fathom in the first period, but their defense stiffened as it retreated.

Harvard made many an approach to the Virginia goal, but always was repulsed when it relied on its line plays to score. There was one long consecutive gain of more than half the length of the field, but this rushing effort, like the shorter ones, was not sustained. Mahan's first goal was made in the second period, after his team had carried the ball up the field from its own 37-yard line to within five yards of the Virginia posts. At this point, however, it was fourth down, and all that remained was a pass or a kick. Mahan elected the latter, and his shot from the 13-yard line went over the middle of the bar.

In the next period, Mahan made a longer shot, a beauty. A penalty had set the Crimson back after a thirty-yard advance to the visitors' 25-yard line; and, standing forty-one yards from the goal, Mahan again placed the ball between the uprights. The kick had a lot of power behind it and would have been good for a score had Mahan been stationed at midfield. The third and last score came in the last quarter, and at the end of an advance of more than thirty-five yards almost from midfield. When inside the Virginia 20-yard line, though, the Crimson again was lacking in punch, and Mahan was forced once more to rely on his own effort, again coming through with a goal from the 25-yard line. Before the game ended, Harvard, with a supply of fresh men, came up to the Virginia goal again through a brilliant 50-yard run back of a kick by Rollins. But the Charlottesville forwards broke up a poor pass from centre, spoiling a chance for a drop kick or pass from the four-yard line, and the ball was lost on downs.

The Virginians played straight football, just as Harvard did, but were not nearly so good on attack as on defense. Gilman, Taylor, and Dadmun raised havoc with the visitors' line plays, and the only forward pass Virginia attempted failed. Harvard used the forward pass five times, four going out of reach and the fifth being dropped by L. Curtis, one of the substitute ends. Harvard outrushed its opponents nearly four to one, gaining 213 yards in fifty-eight plays and losing twenty yards in four plays. The Southern players made only one first down all day.

Virginia's total distance gained in twenty-four plays from scrimmage was only fifty-four yards, and the longest consecutive gain came early in the first quarter, being sixteen yards. Poor handling of kicks and a fumble by Willcox gave the visitors three chances to score. While not near enough the Crimson goal to hope to score by rushing, Thurman and Berkeley both had fair chances to count by dropkick. Thurman, however, missed a shot from the 38-yard line in the first period, and after that Berkeley, the quarter back, made drop kicks from the 42 and 29 yard lines, but both of them were blocked.

There was some great kicking today, both by Manan and Thurman, Mahan, however, getting the greater distance both with and against the wind. Harvard handled kicks very poorly while Willcox was in the back field, but later Rollins did some clever work. Harvard showed a lot of all-round improvement this afternoon. The middle of the line stopped many of the Virginia plays short, and when Harvard had the ball all hands got into the interference better than in any other game this Fall. Harvard lost two fine chances to get within scoring distance by using its Indian interference after the referee's whistle had blown.

Virginia was as heavy as Harvard and the men were in prime condition. Harvard's defensive stock took a decided boom, and the coaches here feel much easier than they did in regard to the Cornell game a week hence. The line-up:

Harvard.	Position.	Virginia.
R. Curtis	Left tackle	G. W. Anderson
Taylor	Centre	C. Coleman
Cowan	Right guard	H. Coleman

Kingsley Still Has Clean Slate.

Kingsley School, which for three seasons has gone undefeated on the gridiron, scored another hard-earned victory at Essex Fells, N. J., yesterday, triumphing over the Holbrook School eleven by a score of 6 to 0. Holbrook presented the stiffest front of any team that has opposed the Kingsley combination this season, and it was not until the latter stage of the third quarter that their line was pierced for the only score of the contest. The ball was carried over by Filipin from the two-yard line after it had been brought from the 22-yard line on gains by Field and Arnold. It was a 15-yard end run by Field that turned the tide in Kingsley's favor. Field, Arnold, Bingham, and George played brilliantly for the victors, while the majority of Holbrook's gains were accomplished by Cushman and McCormack.

STEVENS DOWNS HAVERFORD

Pennsylvanians Lose First Game of Season Through Poor Kick.

The football team of Stevens Institute of Technology added another victory to its season's record yesterday at Castle Point Field, Hoboken, N. J., by defeating Haverford by the score of 7 to 0. It was Haverford's first defeat of the year, and the form shown by Stevens indicates that it will present a formidable line-up against the two big New York teams, Columbia and New York University.

For the first quarter the Haverford team appeared to be continually on the point of breaking loose for a score, when Carey, the quarterback, made several long runs. The Stevens defense was unable to pierce the splendid interference which accompanied Haverford's end runs. The Pennsylvanians tried line plunging and forward passes, but met with no success.

Stevens scored on the first play of the second period, when a long forward pass to Captain Todd was successfully worked, which brought the ball to the 5-yard line, and Webb went through for an easy touchdown from which Todd kicked the goal. Haverford also tallied in this period, when short runs and two 15-yard penalties for Stevens enabled the visitors to score a touchdown, but Ramsey missed a difficult try at goal.

The game was marked by clean play on the part of both teams ,but more than seventy-five yards of penalties on the Stevens team for holding cost them at least one touchdown. The line-up:

Stevens.	Positions.	Haverford.
Hopkins	Right end	Chandler
Finke	Right tackle	Moon
Moeller	Right guard	Johnson
Middleton	Centre	Howland
Oldis	Left guard	Buffum
Todd, (Capt.)	Quarter back	Carey
Deghuee	Right half	Crossman
Marshall	Left half	Van Dam
Webb	Full back	Ramsay, (Capt.)

Touchdowns—Webb, Ramsay. Goal from touchdown—Todd. Substitutes—Braun for Finke, Ford for Braun, Spaeth for Johnson, Kirke for Van Dam. Head linesman—Mr. Carter. Referee—Mr. Beavers, West Point. Umpire—Mr. Smith.

Illinois and Ohio Tie.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 16.—With two of their best ground gainers on the side lines, the Illinois football players were held to a tie by Ohio State on Ohio Field today. The final score was 3 to 3.

Standing on the 33-yard line in the fourth period, Half Back Winters of Ohio kicked a goal from placement for the first score of the game. Winters, just before, had handled a forward pass, which placed the ball in a position for him to make his successful attempt at goal. There were but three and one-half minutes left to play after Ohio scored.

With defeat hanging over their heads, Illinois repeatedly made use of the forward pass, but without success. Anderson finally captured one of Macomber's offerings and gave Illinois an opportunity to tie the score. From the 24-yard line Macomber dropkicked the ball through the posts for his team's three points. Line-up:

Ohio State.	Position.	Illinois.
H. J. Courtney	Left tackle	Rundquist
Karch	Left guard	Applegrant
Knoll	Centre	Watson
H. G. Courtney	Right guard	McGregor

Bucknell Easy for Cornell.

ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 16.—Cornell's expected test of strength with Bucknell failed to materialize today, and the Ithacans won easily by 41 to 0. The Bucknell line crumpled like paper before the Cornell attack, Captain Barrett scoring four touchdowns, two of them on sensational long runs. On the very first line-up of the game Barrett, on a fake kick, eluded the entire Bucknell team, and ran seventy yards for a touchdown. A few minutes later, after Cornell worked the ball to within striking distance, the fleet Barrett sped thirty yards for a touchdown.

Collins, Shiverick, Schlicter, and Mueller aided Barrett in puncturing the Bucknell line for steady gains. In the third quarter Cornell's second 'Varsity replaced the first team, and in the final quarter the third-string men were sent in. Each of the new squads scored a touchdown. Line-up:

WASHINGTON, Penn., Oct. 16.—The Washington and Jefferson team defeated Westminster in the annual game this afternoon, 34 to 0. Washington and Jefferson started with a weakened line-up, both Captain Wesbecher and Left Tackle Witherspoon being absent on account of injuries. The Red and Black had little difficulty in rolling up 14 points in the first quarter, and Coach Folwell used a number of substitutes, seven more points being scored in the second period. The regulars went back at the start of the third quarter, when seven points were tallied. The final period saw an entire Washington and Jefferson team in substitutes, when another touchdown was gainered, five in all being made. McCreight starred in the scoring, making all of Washington and Jefferson's touchdowns but one. Westminster was never in danger of scoring. The line-up:

JACK EDDY STARS IN TIGER VICTORY

Princeton Uncovers a Real 'Find' in New Full Back—Lafayette Defeated, 40 to 3.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, Oct. 16.—Princeton uncovered a football surprise on University Field this afternoon in the person of Jack Eddy, who, as full back of the Tiger eleven, played a prominent rôle in swamping the big Lafayette team under a 40-to-3 score. Plastered on Eddy's back was the big figure "13," which proved to be as lucky an omen for Princeton as it was unlucky for the husky youths from Easton, Penn.

Princeton piled up six touchdowns on Lafayette, and three of these were made by Eddy. His work was by far the most spectacular seen here this season, and he gave the crowds of spectators a big thrill in the second period, when he intercepted a forward pass near the middle of the field and raced 55 yards to a touchdown. The new Tiger star has been unfortunate in his football career, and an injured shoulder has kept him off the gridiron much of the time. Two years ago he played on his freshman eleven, and went up to New Haven and cleaned up the Yale cubs single handed.

Eddy sent the Princeton students into spasms of delight by his dazzling runs through the open field and terrific line smashing. The "No. 13" on Eddy's back will bear watching from now on, for he will very likely be heard from in the Tigers' big games. The Princeton team showed much improvement this afternoon, and toppled over the Lafayette giants with little apparent trouble.

It wasn't until Coach Rush had sent in a substitute eleven in the final period that the Lafayette back field ploungers were able to make any impression on the Princeton line. A series of well-executed forward passes, thrown by Weldon, took the Tigers second team completely by surprise. They smashed away at the line until Princeton was pushed back to their own goal line. With the ball six inches from a score, Princeton fought savagely against the Lafayette battering ram, and, repulsing the desperate attack of the Pennsylvania team, they refused to budge and took the ball on downs. It was as stubborn a piece of defense as the Tigers have shown this season.

Princeton has come along rapidly during the past week, and Coach Frank Kavanaugh of Dartmouth and a group of Harvard scouts saw some smooth teamwork, which caused them to open their eyes. For three periods, while the regulars were on the job, the Lafayette line crumpled like paper before the Princeton offensive. Driggs and Eddy, with Captain Glick, were alive with action every minute.

The first Princeton score came as the result of one long uninterrupted march of seventy yards down the field. The Princeton linesmen were on their toes every second and opened up wide holes in the opposing line. Eddy followed his interference closely and was quick to duck his way through unexpected openings.

The Princeton ends, Highly and Brown, went down the field fast under Driggs's long-booming bunts, several of which went more than sixty yards.

Eddy also contributed much toward the second Princeton touchdown. He dashed through the tackles and skirted the ends for big gains until the ball was again down to the five-yard line. Captain Glick carried it over on two plunges through the Lafayette centre. Glick then retired in favor of Ames. The first period ended with the score 13 to 0 in Princeton's favor.

Driggs, Shea, and Eddy played havoc with the Lafayette forwards in the second period and tore through the line for big gains. Lafayette's defense seemed wofully weak in the face of Princeton's effective rushing. Weldon, the right half back of the Lafayette team, bore the brunt of the work, both on the defense and attack. He tried desperately in the last period to jam his way to a touchdown, and after four herculean assauts at the Princeton line, he missed making the touchdown by but a few inches.

When Buzz Law from behind his own goal line, kicked out, Lafayette received the ball on Princeton's thirty-yard line, and after Weldon had gained ten yards on two plunges, Lake kicked a pretty field goal from the twenty-five-yard line.

While Lafayette had no strong expectations of winning today's game, they did not expect the humiliation of the 40 to 3 score. The team was accompanied by a big crowd of students, including a student band of forty pieces. Lafayette may not have a very good football team this year, but they surely have a fine brass band. Dozens of former Princeton players were back today to get a look at Coach Rush's charges. They saw a team which is well drilled in the fundamentals of the game. The line is aggressive and the back field men are fast and keep their feet well. The tackling was a bit ragged at times, but the eleven showed form today, which gives Princeton followers much reason for encouragement.

There was no fumbling to speak of, and both Glick and Ames ran their plays off quickly.

Princeton did not attempt any forward passing until late in the game, and then Eddy and Ames got away several with great success. Eddy's versatility in today's game came as a big surprise, for it is the first time he has appeared in the regular line up. If Eddy can favor his weak shoulder, he should prove a valuable asset to the Tiger eleven.

Lafayette made better progress against Princeton's second string men. Weldon and Blackburn were a forward pass combination which took the Tigers off their feet for a time. One of these long tosses by Weldon went thirty yards into the waiting hands of Blackburn, who raced to the ten-yard line. The noisy band of Lafayette rooters howled for a touchdown, but Princeton's defense rallied wonderfully and Weldon was forced back for a loss and had to surrender the ball. It was soon after this futile attempt, and just before the end of the game that Lake kicked his field goal. Line-up:

Brown Plays Up to Form.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 16.—The Brown football team struck its stride today, defeating Williams, 33 to 0. During the first two periods the Brunonians played smashing football, against which the lighter Williams team had no adequate defense, but during the last two periods the home team slowed up and the scoring stopped soon after the third period had opened. Williams had little to offer in the way of an offensive and time after time the backs were thrown for losses, as they plunged against the heavy Brown line.

The visitors were dangerous but once during the game. After Brown had made her fourth touchdown at the opening of the second half, Williams opened up a series of forward passes that bewildered the Brunonians and on a succession of these plays took the ball to Brown's 10-yard line. Unable to gain through the line Williams tried yet another pass, but lost the ball. Line-up:

Williams Freshmen Scoreless.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Oct. 16.—Excellent defensive play on the part of both the Williams freshman eleven and the Williston Seminary team resulted in the game between the two aggregations going to a nothing to nothing deadlock this afternoon on Western Field. Early in the first quarter the game resolved itself into a punting duel between Bishop, the freshman quarter back, and Lewanguski, the full back of the visitors. Not until the final period was either team able to make any substantial gains, when in the last few minutes of play the 1919 eleven rushed the ball thirty-seven yards to Williston's three-yard line. The ending of the game then prevented a score.

Dartmouth Swamped Vermont.

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 16.—Dartmouth's second football machine romped away with the University of Vermont's light line today, winning 60 to 0. Worthington, a fourth-string quarter back, whom Coach Cavanaugh has been developing this week, was easily the star of the game. His long runs, one of them for 85 yards, were the feature. Most of Dartmouth's gains were made by trick plays and forward passes, the team playing together much better than last Saturday. Line-up:

VICTORY FOR YALE IN UNUSUAL GAME

Defeats Springfield by Score of 19 to 0—Fumble Robs Y. M. C. A. Men of Touchdown.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 16.—A singular game was played on the Yale Field this afternoon when the Blue, apparently more powerful than at any time this season, crushed the Springfield Y. M. C. A. College eleven in a struggle that seemed to combine all of the unusual features that now and then interpolate themselves in a football battle. Yale won with the score 19 to 0, but the ability of the visiting collegians is far from being truthfully represented by the cipher. Actually Yale was always beset by a versatile attack and there were two instances when it appeared certain that the Blue line would have to give way for a touchdown.

There is no question of Yale's superiority, but her very eagerness was a handicap that proved almost dangerous. The total penalties which were counted against the New Haven men amounted, during the game, to 135 yards and there was one for thirty-five yards when the officials penalized the Blue half the distance to the goal line for unfair tactics. This gave the visitors the ball only thirty yards from the New Haven goal, but the Yale line was able to hold off the danger threatening.

Once Springfield got the ball as far as the Blue's five-yard line, and still was not able to take it over for the touchdown. Early in the game Herkimer picked up a blocked kick and raced 55 yards for a touchdown, but under the Yale goal posts he was tackled hard by Harry Legore and a fumble resulted with a Yale man instantly on the ball.

Yale scored the first points while the game was in its infancy. Scarcely five minutes had elapsed when Neville of Yale recovered the ball after a fumble on Springfield's twenty-yard line, and Harry Legore went around end for a touchdown. Before this first period closed Legore almost got through the Springfield team in running back a punt for a distance of forty yards.

In the second period Yale gained steadily by line plunging, but well down into Springfield's territory the advance was stopped and Savage dropped an easy goal from the field over the crossbar.

It was in the third period that Springfield opened up its reserve plays, and the open formations that were tried were a revelation to the New Havenites. Forward passes shot out repeatedly. This attack bewildered the Yale men. They could not for the moment fathom the plays that were beating them back toward their own goal line. A total of eighty-five yards was gained in this attack. Near the close of the period Yale began to recover and the Blue returned like for like by steadily gaining with the forward pass, combined with line plunges. Legore figured prominently in the resulting score, his attack being too much for Springfield, and Neville finally carried the ball over for a touchdown. The line-up:

Springfield	Position.	Y. M. C. A. College.
C. Sheldon	Left tackle	Shea
Von Holt	Left guard	Stine
Way	Centre	Harvey
J. Sheldon	Right guard	Stafford
Gates	Right tackle	Greiman
Allen	Right end	Herkimer
Wilson	Quarter back	Sermon
Neville	Left half back	Smith
Scovil	Right half back	Miller
Legore	Full back	Cooper

Touchdowns—Legore, Neville. Goal from field—Savage. Safety—Miller. Goals from touchdown—Legore, Savage. Referee—Lawrence Banhart, Dartmouth. Umpire—William Okeson, Lehigh. Linesman—Percy Carpenter, Amherst. Field judge—Fred Godcharles, Lafayette. Time—Four periods of thirteen minutes each. Substitutions—Yale, for Neville, Taft for Scovil, Kent for Jim Sheldon, Church for Moseley, Blodgett for Allen, Waite for Legore, Schmidt for "Chub" Sheldon, Higginbotham for Taft, Bentley for Savage, Durfee for Von Holt, Wiser for Neville; Springfield, Marvil for Harvey, Kendall for Smith, Graham for Herkimer.

Easy Victory for St. Lawrence.

Special to The New York Times.

CANTON, N. Y., Oct. 16.—St. Lawrence University completely outplayed the St. Stevens eleven here this afternoon, running up a score of 30 to 0. St. Stevens could offer no adequate defense against the fast play of St. Lawrence, the latter team gaining almost at will with a varied attack. St. Lawrence will play Columbia in New York next Saturday.

Minnesota Wins in Rain.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 16.—Playing in a rain that seriously interfered with the use of forward passes, the University of Minnesota today defeated the University of South Dakota by 19 to 0. Captain Solon scored two touchdowns in the second period, and Long, on a forward pass from Wyman, crossed the goal line in the final quarter for the third touchdown. Solon kicked one goal from touchdown. Frequent penalties marred the Minnesotans' play.

INDIANS' SHOWING POOR.

Glenn Warner's Pittsburghs Crush His Old Charges, 45 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Penn., Oct. 16.—The Carlisle Indians proved very easy today and were defeated by the University of Pittsburgh by a score of 45 to 0. Pittsburgh's entire squad took part in the game. Coach Glenn Warner used his scrub team during the last two periods.

The first score came after the Pittsburgh men had advanced the ball 65 yards on end runs and line plunges, Hastings making the score. Pittsburgh then kicked off to the Indians, who were unable to advance and were forced to kick. Captain Williamson caught Calac's punt and ran 65 yards through the entire Indian team for a touchdown. Two more were added in the second period. The scrub team was held to a goal from placement in the third period, but put over two touchdowns in the last.

Carlisle had only one chance to score. In the third period Calac tried a goal from placement from the 43-yard line, but the ball did not go near the posts. Calac was the only man on the Indian team able to gain consistently, going short distances through the line at every try. All forward passes and trick plays were quickly smothered by Pittsburgh, and the few first downs made by the redmen were the result of Calac's line plunges. The Pittsburgh team played excellent football, their interference being very good. Williamson, the Captain, and Bob Peck, the centre, were the stars, with Calac the only consistent man for the Indians. The line-up:

N. Y. U. DEFEATS UNION'S ELEVEN AND FORDHAM CRUSHES CONNECTICUT AGGIES

N. Y. U. EASILY BEATS UNION COLLEGE, 10-0

Schenectady Football Team Had Not Been Scored On Previously This Season.

Displaying a superior knowledge of gridiron strategy, and watching every opportunity for mistakes by their opponents, the New York University football team defeated the Union College eleven yesterday on Ohio Field by a score of 10 to 0. The Violet players proved superior to the team, from Schenectady in nearly every department of the game, outpunting and outrushing the visitors whenever the ball came into their possession, and offering so strong a defense that the Union eleven never advanced within striking distance of the local team's goal line. More effective opposition on the part of the Maroon players, who until yesterday enjoyed the reputation of not having been scored on this season, and not having been defeated since 1913, had been expected.

New York rolled up a goal from the field and a touchdown and goal during the first period of play. Cann, the Violet stellar performer in the offensive game, proved to be in his usual form yesterday and won the distinction of registering all of the points which the local players scored against their up-State rivals. The Union collegians showed ability in gaining ground with the odds all against them, and on several occasions plowed through the Violet line for short distances, but during the greater part of the time they were obliged to punt in order to avoid losing the leather on downs. The local eleven proved stronger at the defensive game than had been expected, and, repeatedly broke through the visitors' line.

On only two occasions did the Union eleven achieve first downs by straight rushing, although at the forward passing game it showed more ability than the University Heights team. For the greater part of the game the Violet managed to keep the ball in its possession and in Union territory. Although the New York team was not able to cross its opponent's goal line after the first quarter, the Union goal was in constant danger, and it was only because of misplaying on the part of the Violet at critical moments that a larger score was not realized.

By taking advantage of Rosekrans's fumble on the kick-off, the Violet won the feather on their rivals' 35-yard line. After several plays Cann kicked a goal from behind his own line, and from the Union 30-yard line. Union received the kick-off, but was again forced to punt when the New York line had been tried to no avail. A touchdown was made by Cann, who also kicked the goal.

The Violet, through several fumbles on the part of its opponents, made it necessary for the latter to play a defensive game during the greater part of the time, and even when Girling, who has a reputation for dangerous offensive work, was substituted in the Union back field, Captain Somers, at right tackle, and Waldman, who played left end for the Violet eleven, did good service by breaking through the line of scrimmage and preventing him from getting well started. Rosekrans and Girling did all of the kicking for the visitors, but were outpunted through the long 40 to 50-yard spirals which Cann produced. Captain Jenkins, at the defensive game, accomplished some good work for the Union eleven, while Rosekrans, Stoller, and Girling, playing in the latter's backfield, were depended upon for most of the attack. Chicago, 13; Indiana, 7.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16.—The speed of its back field gave the University of Chicago football team a 13 to 7 victory over Indiana today. Captain Russell led the attack of the Maroons. In the first two periods it seemed probable that Chicago would run up a large score, but the Hoosiers braced, and later took the offensive. With Hathaway substituted for McIntosh at full back in the third quarter, the Indiana machine began to tear through the Chicago line, and in the last period McIntosh, who again went in at full, dashed through the entire Maroon team for 28 yards and a touchdown. A 45-yard run by Whitaker was a feature of the game. Line-up:

GLOOM AT ANN ARBOR.

Michigan's Football Prospects Are Far from Encouraging.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 16.—Prospects for Fielding H. Yost's University of Michigan football team are anything but bright, with half the season already completed.

The first hard game will be played at Ferry Field next Saturday, when the Michigan Agricultural College will be opposed. The Aggies have a fine team this year, while the Wolverines have several weak spots to eliminate before they can hope to emerge on the desired end of the score.

Yost's troubles in filling the quarter-back position were lessened considerably by the performances of Roehm at the pilot position during the Marietta game Wednesday. Roehm was a reserve half back last season and equally good at running the ends and carrying the ball through the line. Roehm is the heaviest quarter a Michigan team has had in a long time, tipping the beam at 190 pounds. He covers ground fast and with a little more coaching should develop into a star quarter.

The Marietta game showed the Michiganders as weak against forward passes, the Ohioans scoring a touchdown in the third quarter by means of the pass. Maulbetsch, all-American star, was particularly faulty in mussing up the opponents' passes, most of those which succeeded being tossed around his side of the field.

After the M. A. C. contest Michigan entertains its first opponent from the East, Syracuse being due for a game at Ann Arbor Oct. 30. Judging by the caliber of football O'Neill's players surprised the spectators at the Princeton game, when the orange and black were victorious 3 to 0, Syracuse undoubtedly will send a powerful team West. The Wolverines and Syracuse have a tie to break this year, each team having won three games and the seventh having resulted in a 6 to 6 tie during the football relations of these universities.

Cornell plays at Ann Arbor Nov. 6, being the last game on the home gridiron for the Yostmen this year. By the time the Cornellians visit Ferry Field, however, the Michigan boys should be in shape to display their best, and the aerial attack Coach Yost is working hard to perfect in scrimmage every day should be in working order by that time if ever.

The only game Michigan plays away from home will occur at Philadelphia, Nov. 13, when Pennsylvania will be taken on. Penn has furnished the big attraction at Ferry Field in many seasons and the Quakers have been beaten in the last two years by the wearers of the maize and blue. Arrangements are being made for a large crowd of Michigan students to accompany the team on this trip and it will not be hard to have Pennsylvania money covered, as the supporters of the Wolverines never can be forced to consider their team inferior to one turned out by Penn.

Albright Easy for Lehigh.

Special to The New York Times.

BETHLEHEM, Penn., Oct. 16.—Lehigh plunged through Albright's weak line, slid around the ends, and performed various other football stunts that caused Charley Kelchner's proteges to be defeated 27 to 0 today.

Cahall tried to work a drop kick, but each time he was slow, and Albright's men forced him to run with it once. His other attempt was blocked. Cahall, however, pulled off a number of fine runs, one for thirty yards that figured in the first touchdown, which Boland made one on a line plunge.

Lehigh tried the forward pass a dozen times, only three working, the first of which, Cahall to Maguinnes, carried the ball near enough for the former to cross the goal on a quarter-back run. Hallowell, who replaced Cahall in the second period, started in by ripping off a pretty thirty-five-yard run, and soon after made a twenty-yard sprint which brought the ball near enough for Hazeltine to crash nine yards through the centre for the third touchdown. Heuer, the Philadelphia Northeast High lad, who played a strong game throughout, tallied the last touchdown after long gains were made on line plunges by Boland and Maguinnes.

The only play of consequence made by Albright occurred in the fourth period, when Big Brillhart intercepted a forward pass by Cahall intended for Green and dashed thirty-five yards. This player, together with G. Schambaugh, Elster, and Beamenderfer, played a good game for Albright. Line-up.

Holy Cross Girls Only a Tie.

WORCESTER, Mass., Oct. 16.—Holy Cross and Massachusetts Aggies played a 7 to 7 tie game today on Fitton Field. The Aggies scored their touchdown in the first play of the second period on a forward pass, and Holy Cross tied the score in the fourth period on a similar play, Day putting the ball over for M. A. C., and McCarthy for Holy Cross.

FORDHAM SCORES ON NEW GRIDIRON

Maroon Defeats Connecticut Aggies, 35 to 0, in First Game on Playing Field.

With its line holding strong and by a varied use of many football tricks, Fordham celebrated the opening of its home football season yesterday by defeating the Connecticut Aggies by a score of 35 to 0. The game marked the dedication of the new Macoon gridiron and Fordham took full possession of it, the visitors being unable to score a single first down. The Bronxites presented a line-up with two regulars on the bench. However, Treanor went in during the third period. Cantwell, the only new man in the back field, was easily the fastest man on the field. Time and again the big freshman skirted the ends for gains of from twenty to thirty yards, his longest run of thirty yards accounting for the fourth touchdown.

Fordham scored a touchdown in the first five minutes of play. Yule kicked off to Crowley, who returned to the thirty-five-yard line. The visitors were unable to advance, however, and Anderson punted to Butler at midfield. After a short advance Dunn returned the punt to Renehan at the fifteen-yard line, Corriden downing the Connecticut captain. Another punt was made by Anderson and then Fordham started its first march down the field. With Yule doing most of the work and helped by the offside penalties of the visitors, the ball was sent to the eight-yard mark, from where Cantwell went over for the score.

Connecticut started the second quarter by kicking off to Cantwell at the 40-yard line. Making a good use of the short pass and on several fake formations the Bronxites then made six first downs in succession, Yule plunging through for the second touchdown. In going over the line Yule struck his head against the goal posts, but he was able to continue in the game.

The third quarter saw the Maroon players at their best. Taking the ball on downs after the kickoff, Fordham went down the field, losing the ball once only on downs. Dunn recovered it on an intercepted pass, and on the next play Cantwell dodged through the opposing players for thirty yards and his second touchdown. In the same period Fordham scored again. Connecticut lost the ball right at the kickoff, when Corriden grabbed Crowley's fumble, and after a 20-yard charge by Crowley, Butler crossed the line.

With half a minute to play in the closing period, Fordham scored its last touchdown. After a stirring 60-yard run by Yule, which counted for nothing because of a penalty, the Maroon advanced to the 20-yard line. Here Yule tried a field goal and missed by inches. The visitors were unable to retain the ball after bringing it back into play, and Butler scored once more when Dunn had advanced past left end for fifteen yards. Yule kicked all five goals.

The game demonstrated that Fordham's ends, Conklin and Corriden, are the best seen at the Bronx college since 1909. Frequent penalties were charged against both elevens for offside plays, Fordham losing almost a hundred yards through this fault. The line-up:

Fordham.	Position.	Conn. Aggies.
Mulcahy	Left tackle	Sinclair
Kendricks	Left guard	G. Butler
Delehanty	Centre	Peesky
Kane	Right guard	Hale
May	Right tackle	F. P. Miller
Conklin	Right end	James
Dunn (Cap.)	Quarter back	Renehan (Cap.)
Cantwell	Left half back	Anderson
Butler, J.	Right half back	Clark
Yule	Full back	Cowley

Touchdowns—Cantwell, (2,) Butler, (2,) Yule. Goals after touchdowns—Yule, 5. Substitutions—For Fordham: Treanor for Delehanty, Benson for Kane. For Connecticut Aggies: Davis for Sinclair, Miller for Crowley, Hopwood for Anderson, Murdock for Clark. Referee—Mr. Kirberger, Washington and Jefferson. Umpire—Mr. Hatch, Williams. Linesman—Mr. Hastings, Cornell. Time of quarters—Eight minutes.

Exeter Downs Yale Freshmen.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Oct. 16.—Exeter Academy crushed the Yale freshmen today in the opening game of the season by 13 to 0, scoring both touchdowns within five minutes after kick-off in the opening period. Exeter's line smashing took the ball immediately to the Yale 30-yard mark, where Captain Kempton of Exeter flew around end for a touchdown. Wehner kicked the goal. Three minutes later Guard Hadley broke through and blocked Eastman's punt. Hadley grabbed up the ball and raced 40 yards for a touchdown.

Stuart's run-back of kick-off for 40 yards was Yale's best gain. In the third period a muff punt gave Yale the ball at the Exeter 20-yard line, but the freshmen were unable to advance. The line-up:

Yale Freshmen.	Position.	Exeter Academy.
Violet	Left guard	Noyes
Ross	Centre	Wehner
Carter	Right guard	Hadley
Galt	Right tackle	Braman

Touchdown for Worcester Tech.

WORCESTER, Mass., Oct. 16.—Worcester Tech football team beat Rhode Island State 6 to 0 today, when Moosberg intercepted a Rhode Island forward pass and brought it so close to the goal line that he carried it over on a tackle play. Worcester had the ball within twenty yards of Rhode Island's goal twice during the game, but lost it on downs.

Leo A. Makes New Trotting Record.

Special to The New York Times.

GOSHEN, N. Y., Oct. 16.—Leo A., driven by Supreme Court Justice Arthur S. Tompkins, broke the matinee record of the Goshen Driving Club at the races here this afternoon in the second heat of the Class C trot in 2:11¼. The previous record was 2:12¼, and was held by Raffles. Judge Tompkins won the race and defeated a number of professional drivers, including Budd Murray. George Corwin, and Frank Burgess. Among those in attendance were Mrs. E. Henry Harriman, Miss Carol Harriman, Mr. and Mrs. Rollin W. White, Richard Delafield, Theodore Frelinghuysen, Robert W. Goelet, John R. Townsend, Rensselaer Weston, and B. A. Bulkeley.

Minor Sports at Columbia.

This coming week will see the beginning of activities in several of the minor sports at Columbia. Fencing practice will start Thursday afternoon. Coach Murray of the New York Athletic Club will again direct the thrusts and parries on Morningside Heights. Manager Philip S. Harper is now at work on his schedule. Golf has been officially dropped for this year from the list of Columbia sports. Last year was the first that a golf team did not represent the Blue and White, and this year Manager Craven planned to revive the sport. The cold weather of last week, however, caused him to postpone action, and finally it was decided that the end of the playing season was too near to attempt the revival this year. Manager McCracken of the tennis team will start the annual Fall tournament tomorrow with the first of the singles. The doubles probably will start Wednesday.

The play in the first half demonstrated the superiority of the home team. At half time, Staten Island led by 4 to 0, and two more points were added in the second half. MacWhinnie, Menzies, Kaufmann, and MacPherson shot goals in the order named. In the second half both Kaufmann and Menzies scored again. The Staten Island forwards worked together with clocklike precision. The line-up:

In a Field Club Soccer League match contested at Montclair, N. J., yesterday the eleven of the Montclair A. C. obtained the verdict by the score of 3 goals to 1 against the team of the Bensonhurst Field Club, which was outplayed until the latter part of the game, when the Brooklyn men came to life and shot their only goal.

Playing in championship form against Richmond County in the Field Club League match at Bay Ridge, the soccer eleven of the Crescent Athletic Club won an exciting game by the score of 1 goal to 0. The only tally occurred in the first half, about half an hour from the start, when Maclennan made good on a corner kick by Port.

Teams representing the Brooklyn Field Club and the Columbia Oval Football Club played at Van Cortlandt Park yesterday when, after a hard-fought contest, Columbia Oval won by the score of 4 goals to 3.

Curtis made it three straight in the High School soccer championship yesterday by defeating Commerce at Curtis Field by the score of 1 goal to 0.

The Brooklyns and I. R. T. Strollers played a scoreless tie game at Prospect Park yesterday after the regular league game between them had been postponed on account of the shortening of the field, due to the presence of the Boy Scouts.

De Witt Clinton moved up in the High School tournament yesterday by defeating Townsend Harris by 2 goals to 0 at Crotona Athletic Field. Walther side scored in the first half, but in the second period Pines opened the scoring for De Witt Clinton from a pass by Perrotti. ALEXANDER'S FIRST CURVE.

Learned to "Bend" a Baseball After Long Practice—Barn His Backstop.

If a baseball curve were only an optical illusion American boys would be robbed of a lot of fun, writes Grover Cleveland Alexander in The Public Ledger. "Why, I think the happiest days of my life were those spent in trying to make a baseball 'bend' in a pitch of about 60 feet.

"Like most boys, I bought one of those 'how to curve a baseball' books—almost a correspondence course in pitching. I remember that it said you should grasp the ball firmly between the first two fingers and the thumb, then twist the wrist, with the back of the hand downward, and let the ball go out between the thumb and the side of the index finger. I read that over hundreds of times and committed it to memory. Then I got a baseball and went out to practice.

"Naturally, I supposed that, having read how to do it, I could pitch a beautiful curve the first time I tried it. But I soon discovered my error. I spent a whole day in practice, following the instructions to the letter. Not once could I detect the slightest variation in the course of the ball. I begged my friend who was catching to tell me that the ball was 'bending,' but he assured me that it wasn't. Finally I gave up in disgust and threw the book into the ash barrel, deciding that its instructions were false.

"I found the book again and was back on the job the next day and for many days after that. When I couldn't find a pal to act as catcher, I drew a circle on the side of the carriage house, paced off sixty feet, and pitched at that. The ball would not come all the way back, but I thought nothing of running up for it.

"After many days' practice I thought I detected a slight curve. I held the ball the same way the next time, and it didn't 'bend.' But I persisted, and finally I found the ball curving almost every time I held it properly and gave the twist with my wrist.

"A boy or a man must have a strong wrist to pitch curves. The forearm soon develops, and at last a pitcher can go through a hard game and shoot up half curves and not feel the slightest pain in his wrist, forearm, biceps or shoulder. I mix the curves up so as to distribute the work among the different muscles of the arm, shoulder, and back."

TO PROTECT STRIPED BASS.

Anglers to Ask for Closed Season During Spawning Period.

At the September meeting of the United Anglers' League its Legislative Committee was authorized to introduce at the next meeting of the State Legislature an amendment to the fish and game laws which will make the month from May 15 to June 15 a closed season on striped bass, prohibit the taking of any bass less than 12 inches in length at any time, and prohibit the netting of striped bass in the Hudson River at any time of the year. At present there is no close season, and the limit of length of bass which may be caught is fixed at 10 inches.

The proposition to prohibit netting of striped bass in the Hudson looks like a joke on the face of it. There have been no such bass worth while caught in the Hudson for years either with the hook or the net, so completely is the river exhausted of these splendid game fish. But the members of the league desire to get such a prohibition on the books as an entering wedge to other legislation which may follow in the years to come, and let the ball go out between the thumb and the side of the index finger. I read that over hundreds of times and committed it to memory. Then I got a baseball and went out to practice.

"Naturally, I supposed that, having read how to do it, I could pitch a beautiful curve the first time I tried it. But I soon discovered my error. I spent a whole day in practice, following the instructions to the letter. Not once could I detect the slightest variation in the course of the ball. I begged my friend who was catching to tell me that the ball was 'bending,' but he assured me that it wasn't. Finally I gave up in disgust and threw the book into the ash barrel, deciding that its instructions were false.

I mix the curves up so as to distribute the work among the different muscles of the arm, shoulder, and back."

ARMY ELEVEN SHOWS POOR FORM, LOSES

Colgate, Well Trained and Alert, Sweeps Aside Cadets and Wins, 13 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Oct. 16.—Colgate downed the Army on the grinIron here today 13 to 0 in one of the hardest but cleanest fought games ever staged on the plains. The up-Staters deserved to win, for they presented a heavy and aggressive eleven, splendidly trained and primed for this game and they were on the alert to take advantage of the soldiers' mistakes. Man for man, the Colgate team outclassed the Army. Their line charged quicker and got under the slow Army forwards.

Time and again the visitors crushed the Cadet line and the alert Colgate backs would dart through for good gains. The defeat was a bitter disappointment for followers of the Army eleven, who had begun to believe that the Cadets had at last hit their stride and would give a good account of themselves. The nearest the Army came to scoring was in the second period after a poor punt by Abell had given the Cadets the ball on the visitors' thirty-five-yard mark. Coffin smashed through for a five-yard gain, but Hobe's attempt was smeared. Then Neyland tried a long forward pass to Britton, but the play was incompleted and Oliphant dropped back to the forty-five-yard line for a goal from placement. The kick went short by a few inches, the ball dropping under the bar. Thereafter the Army could not get within striking distance of the Colgate goal.

In the third quarter, when the battle waged hottest, the Army, with its back to the goal gave the visitors their first chance to score. Goode, who played star football throughout, broke through and blocked one of Coffin's punts, falling on the oval on the Cadets' 15-yard line. A penalty for offside playing gave Colgate five yards more and then Hubbell, Spencer and Gillo were sent hurtling into the Army line for the remaining distance. Gillo took the ball over and Goode kicked the goal.

In the fourth period Colgate, playing on the defensive and doing a deal of tackling, punted to Army's 15-yard line. Bringham, a substitute back, muffed the ball and Stewart fell on it. The Cadets, fighting in the last minutes of play, managed to withstand Colgate's attacks until finally Anderson tossed a long forward pass to Roberts, who was waiting at the extreme side of the field, and Worthy went over the line for another touchdown. Goode missed the goal.

Colgate then proceeded to tear the Army's defense to shreds and after the kick-off forced the ball from their own 35-yard to the Army's 10-yard mark, where the whistle ended the game. In the last march down the field the Army forwards were literally bent backward and sidewise, the powerful Colgate offense, with Spencer and Hubbell carrying the ball, crushing the Cadets like so much paper. Gains of from eight to thirty-five yards came on almost every play. The plays were driven directly through the line. McEwan and Oliphant, along with Captain Weyand, did the best work for the Army. Some of McEwan's tackles were spectacular and he was all over the field.

The Cadets' attempts at forward passes were failures, not one of their many trials being completed. Neyland's work at quarter back was only mediocre and the Army's backs lacked drive in their work.

For Colgate Anderson, Captain Abell, Gillo, and Barton all did fine work. The game was marred by frequent penalties for offside play, Colgate suffering most. The line-up:

West Point.	Position.	Colgate.
Parker	Left tackle	West
O'Hare	Left guard	Goode
McEwan	Centre	Genese
Meacham	Right guard	Barton
Weyand, (Capt.)	Right tackle	Abell
Redfield	Right end	Neilson
Neyland	Quarter back	Anderson
Ford	Left half back	Spencer
Mitchell	Right half back	Gillo
Coffin	Full back	Hubbell

Touchdowns—Gillo, Roberts. Goal from touchdown—Goode. Time of periods—Twelve and a half minutes each. Substitutions—Army: Jones for Parker, Parker for Jones, Parks for O'Hare, O'Hare for Parks, Goodman for McEwan, Holmes for Meacham, Britton for Redfield, Hudnut for Britton, Murrill for Neyland, Schwarzkopf for Ford, Cole for Schwarzkopf, Hoge for Mitchell, Mitchell for Hoge, Walker for Mitchell, Hoge for Walker, Bringham for Coffin. Must Have Right Gun.

Trapshooters are getting as fussy about their guns as ballplayers about their bats, according to The Philadelphia Public Ledger. A gun that fits is fully as important to a trapshooter as a bat that suits is to a ballplayer. It is said by a man that has made a careful study of the subject that less than one in ten of the guns sold to trapshooters fit their owners. The result is failure to live up to natural ability.

In England there are many shooting schools, for the most part conducted by manufacturers. The pupils are not only taught to shoot, but are also fitted with guns suited to their physical characteristics. A man having short arms and short neck cannot expect to shoot well with a gun built for a man of giraffe type, nor vice versa. The try-gun plays a very important part in gun fitting. The barrel and working parts are just like similar parts of other guns, but the stock is equipped with set screws whereby the "drop" and length can be minutely regulated. A skilful gunfitter, with a try-gun, can often make a good shooter of a poor one, and a crackerjack of a fair shot.

Moran Used Small Squad.

Patrick J. Moran, though he lost the world's series, dealt an awful jolt to the theory that a whole army of athletes are necessary to win a pennant. The Quaker chieftain had his team out in front almost all season, and he used only twenty-three players. Welser an outfielder from the North Carolina League, was the only rookie retained after the season had started. Additions to the team after the championship gong started were the pair of pitching Georges—Chalmers and McQuillan. One has to hark back to 1908 to find a National League team that won the flag with as small a roster as the Phils of the present year. Then the Cubs employed twenty-five players. When Frank Leroy Chance captured his second banner, in 1907, the Bruins numbered twenty-four, and when he landed his third flag, in 1908, he had twenty-six players. In 1910, the last year of the Chicagoans' greatness, twenty-seven men drew stipends from Taft, Murphy & Co. between the opening and closing dates of the championship season. Pittsburgh finished first in 1909, with twenty-nine performers. The number of men McGraw used when he was winning the flags of 1911, 1912 and 1913 was respectively twenty-eight, twenty-eight, and thirty-two. George Tweedy Stallings, inventor of the reversible outfield, employed thirty-four men last year.

Golf Victory for Hovey.

BROOKLINE, Mass., Oct. 16.—R. H. Hovey of the Rhode Island Country Club carried off the Country Club Golf Cup in the Fall tournament today by defeating J. P. Guilford of Woodland, one of the strongest of the Massachusetts players, in a nineteen-hole contest. Hovey outdrove Guilford from nearly every tee, but the Massachusetts player was stronger with his short irons. The finalists scored decisive victories in the morning round.

Hovey putting out F. I. Emery of the Country Club, 5 and 4, and Guilford eliminating G. W. Bass of Portsmouth, 6 and 5.

SULLIVAN MEMORIAL MEET.

Gov. Fielder Expected to Attend Games Today at Jersey City.

Governor James F. Fielder of New Jersey is expected to be among the many prominent men who will serve as officials at the track and field games to be held today at Reservoir Playground, Jersey City, for the benefit of the James E. Sullivan memorial fund. The late head of the Amateur Athletic Union was a great favorite in Hudson County, and it is expected that a big crowd will attend the games. Three hundred and fifty athletes, the best in the Metropolitan district, will participate in the sports. The program arranged is one of the best and largest of the season, and will bring out not only the leading performers on the cinderpath, but the premier jumpers, vaulters, and weight throwers as well. All the events are handicaps and good competition is thereby assured.

The half-mile run and five-mile event will have the headline positions in the meet. The 880-yard run will bring into action again Joe Higgins, the New England half-mile champion, who throughout the season has shown consistent form at this distance. Higgins will have as opponents Mike Devanney of the Millrose A. A., Willie Gordon of the New York A. C., Sid Leslie, Long Island A. C., and Myles McHugh of the Pastime A. C. In the five-mile event Hannes Kolehmainen will concede big handicaps to Willie Fogel, Charley Pores, Willie Kyronen, Nick Gianakopulos,

GOLF SIMPLIFIED AND ANALYZED

These articles are a part of a series, the object of which is to explain in simple, easily understood form the points which every golfer, young or old, should know. The advice on the fundamental features presented here has been given by Vardon, Travers, Braid, Taylor, Ouimet, Ray, and other great players. The following articles pertain to the drive:

No. 25.—The Flat Swing.

From the top of the swing to the finish, the head of the club is swung in more than a complete circle. This circle, so far as the action of the hands and arms is concerned, would be vertical, but the twisting of the body at the hips, with the revolving of the shoulders, all natural movements, consequent to the original positions, has caused this circle to be an inclined one. It is the angle or degree of inclination of this circle which makes a swing flat or upright. If, as has been said, only the hands and arms were allowed to work, the circle would be practically vertical; if only the twisting motion of the hips took place, then it would be nearly horizontal. The two circles are blended into one inclined circle by the action of the shoulders, which in turn, are influenced by the bending of the body at the waist.

To a certain extent one has no choice as to the kind of a swing he must use—that is something nature has determined for him—and the sooner each one knows the kind of a swing he is adapted to the quicker he will be able to settle down to a fixed system and develop it to the fullest extent in his power. "Never put a square peg in a round hole" is an old saying, and it applies to our physical being in all our athletic endeavors, in golf especially.

It will be found on careful consideration that the flat swinger is of a very compact build, with a full, round body and rather short arms; he is inclined to stoutness rather than the other way.

Alexander Smith. Driving. Top of swing. A fine example of a correct flat swing. Note that the left arm is straight, and the club shaft has been swung inside the point of the right shoulder, right elbow down and in, and the left knee turned in toward the right leg.

On the contrary, the upright swinger by natural qualifications is of a longer, leaner type, with long and supple muscles and a generally free and easy muscular system.

Vardon and Duncan, being of the latter type, are upright swingers; Taylor and Ray, being of a stocky build, incline to the flatter type of swing.

There is no great danger of the swing being too upright, providing the club shaft can be dropped to a horizontal position back of the neck at the top of the swing, the left arm being fairly straight and the body turned at the hips, but there is great danger of the swing becoming too flat, very great danger, primarily caused by swinging the arms around the body instead of making a very decided effort to swing them straight backward and upward.

There is a natural tendency to swing outward at the ball, because it is in front of and at some distance from the player, and this tendency is increased, if the arms are swung around and backward, with a circular motion, around the body. But the ball is on the ground, at the level of the player's feet, therefore it follows that the swing must be more downward than outward.

The essence of the back swing of the driver is to get the club-head as far from the ball as we can and keep it under full control, so there may be time to get the utmost speed engendered in the down swing, for it is the speed at which the club-head is traveling at the moment of impact which counts, not the amount of brute strength we can use. The distance the club-head travels from the ball in the back swing would be that of the length of a string which would cover the same "route" (that word seems to explain my meaning the best) that the club-head covered in its backward, upward, and curving sweep to the point where it stops, the top of the swing.

There is exceedingly great danger in the very flat swing. Swinging flatter than is absolutely necessary is taking an unnecessary risk of failure in results.

No. 26.—The Flat Swing.

In both the flat and the upright swings, the club-head travels in a spiral curve; it is in the horizontal diameter of this spiral, as well as its height, that the swings differ. In the flat swing the club-head is taken back with much more of a circling motion than is the case with the upright swing, because the body begins to twist immediately the back swing of the arms begins, the club-head leaves the straight backward line from the ball almost immediately, and is swinging around the legs, close to the ground. This early pivoting of the body on the hips is necessary in the case of the stout man, otherwise the left arm would either have to bend at the elbow, or the swing would be outward, as the body would be in the way of the left arm. With this quick turning of the body, the arms can be swung straight backward, so far as their own movement is concerned, and the left arm can then be kept straight. The twisting motion of the body continues until it can twist no further without twisting the head around with it.

In the meantime the arms are swinging backward, the right arm, bending at the elbow, is going around the body in a circling motion, with the elbow kept well down and in, close to the body, until it is over or slightly back of the right hip. The shoulders are turning on the "ball and socket," the point between the shoulder blades at the spine, but they have not very much of an up-and-down movement, because the stout man cannot bend sideways at the hips without undue strain, which is what the upright swinger can do easily and naturally.

This turning of the body, pivoting more than the upright swinger, results in bending the left leg very much, and the left foot will pivot on the toe, instead of the inside of the foot, as in the more upright swing.

When the body has twisted as far to the right as it will go without pulling the head around, and the hands have been swung as far upward as they will go without lifting the right elbow more than is shown in the photograph of Taylor, the dropping of the club shaft into position, with the sharp bending down of the wrists, will bring the club shaft back of the neck, close to the shoulders, and the hands will be at the height of the right shoulder, instead of the right ear or higher, as in the case of the upright swinger.

Here will be seen the reason for the varying heights to which different players carry their hands in the back swing, and which, as previously said, were correct for players of similar build. The upright swing takes the hands high as the right ear, as in Vardon's swing, or even higher, as in Duncan's swing; consequently, the right elbow is raised. In the flat swing the hands are kept low, on account of the right elbow being down and in and close to the side, with the shoulders turning on a more horizontal plane than do those of the upright swinger.

There is no necessity for swinging very flat; Taylor's swing is an ideal one for those who do swing flat, and the most round golfer can usually get a fairly upright swing, if he will not try to go back quite so far as shown in Taylor's swing. "Direction first, then distance," that is the thing to consider. And direction will come as the result of keeping the club within the limit shown in the various golfers pictured in this series.

No. 27.—Danger of Swinging Too Flat.

The danger in the very flat swing is the outward swing when swinging at the ball, the mowing motion, which results in one of two things happening, usually, either the ball is hit with the heel of the club, or the player feeling instinctively that the hands are swinging too far out, pulls them in as the club-head approaches the ball and a fearful slice is the result. Even if the very flat swinger is hitting the ball with the centre of the club face and timing well, a pulled ball is the result, and unless the swing is under the most perfect control, a very bad pull will result.

The back swing exerts a most important influence on the down swing, that is obvious, and to get power and rhythm in the down swing, the club must be taken back on the same line the swing at the ball is made, otherwise there will be a hitch in the stroke, all the smoothness is lost, there can be no timing and the result is a hit, more or less powerless, with no control over distance or direction.

Donald J. Ross. Another perfect type of the flat swing. He swings to this position. There is no lifting of the right elbow; he gets all the force of his body wound up for its release into the stroke.

If the club is swung back very flat there is a tendency not only to fail to get the club shaft inside the point of the right shoulder, but not even as high as the shoulder, the left arm will be bent very much at the elbow, the right arm will be in a cramped position, the wrists cannot work easily, and the body is apt to sway backward. Many golfers who swing back quite flat correct the swing for the downward journey of the club head by lifting the right elbow, thus placing the club shaft in the correct position by pushing the right hand in toward the neck, and then they swing at the ball in the same manner as the golfer who has swung back in the upright track. But they do not get the tension that the upright swinger gets, they only lift the club into position, and do so because they have found that swinging from the position they were in before they lifted the right elbow resulted in trouble. And while they do get better results by the lift of the right elbow, they never get the distance nor the control of the golfer who takes his club back on the same track he swings down on.

You must build up the tension during the back swing, it must be a gradual winding up of all the spring there is in the body, not a quick placing of the club at the top of the swing.

One cause of flat swinging on the part of the golfer who could use an upright swing easily, is the conscious turning over of the left wrist and an effort to keep the right elbow down and in and close to the side. As has been clearly pointed out in previous articles, these two actions are not necessary, consciously they will take care of themselves and any effort to do them is wrong and will cramp the swing.

Another grave fault in the very flat swing is a tendency to do all the hitting with the right hand, rather than having the work properly divided between both hands. Further, there is a tendency to start the down swing with the palm of the right hand, the pressure coming from the back of the hand toward the palm, instead of having the initial power of the hands exerted from the thumbs and the first two fingers toward the heel of the hands, as it should be.

J. H. Taylor. Driving. Top of swing. Taylor represents the most perfect development of the flat swing. Every element of correct action in this type of swing is here exemplified, and his success proves that it is as effective as any other swing, when properly used.

AUTO RACE-MAKING.

2,000 Men Needed to Handle Crowds at Sheepshead Bay.

Few of the persons that witnessed the Astor Cup race at Sheepshead Bay on Saturday, Oct. 9, realized the vast and complicated machinery of preparation and management necessary for the running of the 350-mile classic. It was a simple matter for the spectators to enter the speedway, have their seats pointed out by ushers, and sit down and watch the race, but back of those simple arrangements was a big, well-drilled, machinelike organization. It required months of study to work out the many details in connection with the race.

Months ago the work of constructing the great two-mile course and the gigantic grand stands was started. Then the racing fraternity was canvassed for entries. The advertising and publicity work that aroused public interest in the event required time and effort. Six weeks before the race a ticket office was opened on Broadway, with a staff of six ticket sellers.

Circular letters were prepared and sent out by the thousands, giving information as to seats, boxes, and parking spaces. Motor route maps were prepared and distributed throughout the country, and ticket bureaus were established in many prominent clubs in the city.

Then came the day of the race. There were twenty-two ticket booths provided at the main gate, and fifty-four ticket sellers cared for those who came by automobile to the grand stand and inner field, and twelve more looked after the motorists bound for the bleachers. There was no hitch or confusion at the gates, and the arrangements were such that the spectators were able to enter the grounds without the slightest delay. It required 325 ushers to seat the people in the grand stand.

The most complete and minute preparations were made for any accident that might occur. A hospital was established on the grounds and there were thirty-six doctors, including surgeons and specialists of nearly every branch of the medical profession. Four trained nurses were in attendance and three ambulances were on the grounds ready to rush the injured to the hospital. In addition four fast automobiles were available to rush doctors to any part of the track if an accident occurred. Had there been a serious spill anywhere on the track a dozen doctors would have been at the spot within two minutes and the injured driver would have been under expert care at the hospital within ten minutes.

Twelve doctors were stationed in boxes and seats throughout the grandstand, their locations being known to the captain of ushers. Three emergency hospitals equipped with cots and stretchers were on the concourse back of the seats prepared to care for any spectators who might require attention.

The big restaurant in the infield and the dozen refreshment booths employed 600 cooks, waiters, and cashiers. There were 600 special policemen on the grounds during the race. In all the Sheepshead Bay Corporation employed a force of about 2,000 men for different duties.

The apparatus used in timing the race was an electric printing machine in combination with a chronometer which recorded the time in hours, minutes, seconds, and hundredths of a second on a tape, as each car crossed a connecting wire laid across the track at the start and finish line. During the race 100 feet of tape was used to time the racers.

There was an elaborate telephone system at the course. From the judges' stand the information as to the time and place of each car was phoned to the scoring boards and to the megaphone men scattered in the stands. There was phone connection from the judges' stand to the field hospital and to the four judges stationed at different points around the two-mile course. In the pits were technical auto men who phoned all information to the judges' stand, and it was then relayed downstairs to the pressroom, where the working newspaper men were stationed.

NATIONAL MOTOR BOAT SHOW

Annual Exhibition to be Held at Palace Instead of Garden.

The annual Motor Boat Show will be held this year at the Grand Central Palace, opening Saturday, Jan. 29, 1916, and closing on the following Saturday. This is the first year the show has not been housed at Madison Square Garden. Arrangements have been made to accommodate cruising boats sixty feet long, while abundant space will be found for smaller cruisers, rowboats, express launches, racing hydroplanes and miniature power dinghys.

So dependable has the marine motor become that it would seem that there would only be room left for minor technical changes in equipment. Many radical improvements, however, will be shown by the manufacturers in their display of motors for the 1916 season. The manufacturers of accessories, too, have added refinements to their product, and in addition to these innovations will be shown simplifying materially the operation and care of the motor boat.

The Exhibition Committee announces that no show will be held in Chicago in 1916, and the attention of the trade will be concentrated on the New York exhibition. The motor boat exhibition has grown materially since its inception, in 1904, and judging from the activity of the builders and manufacturers and the amount of interest displayed by the public the coming exhibition is expected to be greater than any of its predecessors.

Lacrosse Men Discuss Schedules.

The annual meeting of the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association was held yesterday afternoon at the Park Avenue Hotel. There was the usual discussion of the schedules for next season, but nothing definite was determined. It was, however, decided to offer two championship banners, one for the Northern section and the other for the Southern division. The champions of these divisions will play for the league title on May 27. A game has also been arranged between Harvard and Yale, to be played at Cambridge next Spring. There were no changes in the rules, which were found to be very satisfactory last season. Milton Erlanger of Johns Hopkins was elected President, Rodney Walbridge of Cornell, Vice President, and R. C. Campbell of Stevens was re-elected Secretary and Treasurer. Cyrus C. Miller of the Crescent A. C. was elected a member of the Executive Committee to serve for two years. The delegates from the eight colleges in the association were E. W. Ayerigg, Cornell; E. E. O'Neil, Harvard; J. B. Post, Hobart; F. W. Sutton, Johns Hopkins; E. K. Field, Stevens Tech.; E. J. Clement, Lehigh; F. C. Dennis, Swarthmore, and A. D. Cornell of Pennsylvania.

Recent Yacht Transfers.

The following yacht transfers have been made through the office of John G. Alden: Alfred Johnson of Brookline has chartered the forty-three-foot auxiliary cruising schooner Whistler from Coleman Tousey, for use on the Maine coast. Bayard F. Pope of Brookline, Mass., has purchased the twenty-one-foot cruising knockabout Star from E. P. Durland of Lynn, Mass. Joseph A. Will of Boston has purchased the twenty-one-foot knockabout Alvida from David Jay Ely of New York. Henry T. Hornidge of New York has purchased the fast sonder boat Mingo from Commodore Herbert M. Sears of the Eastern Yacht Club, and will race her on Long Island Sound next Summer.

TAFT AND HALE WIN FOURSOME MATCH

The new 6,200 yard golf course of the Haworth Country Club was formally opened yesterday with a series of events for members and visitors. In an exhibition four-ball foursome Roger B. Taft, champion of the North Jersey Country Club, paired with Edward Hale, champion of the Ridgewood Country Club, beat Archibald Graham, the Arcola Club champion, and I. M. Hedges, the Haworth title holder, by the score of 5 up and 4 to play. The scores prove that the additional distance and the new holes have stiffened the course materially, as all four men play consistently under 80, but yesterday 81 was the best card of the foursome.

The morning round left Taft and Hale 2 up, Taft having a card of 86, Hale 88, Graham 88, and Hedges 90. The afternoon medal scores were somewhat lower, as the players were getting acquainted with the lay of the land. Hale was playing his wood badly, topping many tee shots into the rough, but Taft was more than holding his own with the best ball of his opponents. Graham made a few holes in brilliant style, but spoiled his score by flubbing badly on two long holes. Taft laid his ball within ten feet of the pin on the fourteenth hole in the second round and holed out in 2, clinching the match. Graham, Taft, and Hale all had cards of 81 in the afternoon, and Hedges had a 91.

A driving contest was held near the club house, and all drives were compelled to stay within a narrow lane of stakes or the shot was "out of bounds." Roger Taft entered in this event, but much to his astonishment he finished almost last. He put his first ball out of bounds and topped his second, and his third ball gave him a total of 225 yards. L. S Bridges won the contest by keeping three balls within the lines for a total distance of 600 yards. E. A. Craighill took second place with a mid-iron, sending his three shots a total of 56 yards.

Mrs. G. M. Wager and Mrs. B. P. Buttenheim tied for first place in the clock golf contest with 27 putts each. The tie was played off by moonlight and Mrs. Wager led her opponent with 29 putts against 31 for Mrs. Buttenheim.

C. Baumbach won the eighteen-hole handicap medal play for members with a card of 107—28—79. The worst duffer in the world had a chance to win this event, as the handicaps began at 12 and ran up to large figures. D. L. Hendricks took second with the same gross score as the winner, but his handicap of 27 gave him a card of 107—27—80. F. S. E. Gunnell had the highest gross score, taking 139 strokes to get around the course, but he received no prize for his performance. The new turf received some terrible shocks in this event, and many of the players are carefully avoiding the greenkeeper and Alec Findley, the professional at the club.

While the course is much improved over the old conditions, the turf is still in need of grooming, and additional traps must be built before the links can be considered completed. Cards in medal play:

Handicap.—C. Baumbach, 107, 28—79; D. L. Hendricks, 107, 27—80; L. C. Bostwick, 93, 12—81; B. Connor, 109, 27—82; H. O. Paine, 108, 25—83; E. Van Leuven, 102, 12—90; J. F. Gallagher, 113, 22—91; H. J. Hall, 106, 18—91; G. R. Spalding, 114, 15—99; F. S. E. Gunnell, 139, 33—106. Other cards not turned in.

GREENWICH, Conn., Oct. 16.—Mixed foursomes, eighteen holes medal play, were played at the Greenwich Country Club today for prizes presented by R. A. Cowles. The summary:

In the ball sweepstakes, eighteen-hole medal play, first prize went to A. E. Ranny with a score of 86, 17—78. Second prize went to G. D. Webber for his score of 93, 16—77. G. B. Carhart and James P. Ott won the cups offered by E. Clarence Jones for the best selected scores made between July 1 and Oct. 12. Carhart's score was 88 and Ott's 87.

Golf at Two Plainfield Clubs.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 16.—These scores were returned for the Golf Committee Cup at the Plainfield Country Club today: D. W. Taylor, 91, 20—71; J. R. Shoemaker, 82, 9—73; S. T. Perrin, 91, 17—74; Arthur Murphy, 87, 9—78; Dr. H. Rowland, 100, 21—79; H. H. Craig, 91, 12—79.

The scores in the sweepstakes event were: H. L. De Forest, 89, 22—67; J. R. Shoemaker, 82, 9—73; W. W. Coriell, 96, 21—75; H. J. Cochrane, 102, 25—77; Dr. H. Rowland, 100, 21—79; F. W. Wallace, 109, 27—82.

H. L. Blazier and H. E. Blake, Jr., defeated Royle T. Phillips and W. E. Lough, 3 and 2, for the officers' challenge medal at the Park Golf Club.

These cards were returned for the President's Cup: R. C. Blancke, Jr., 94, 22—72; R. V. Carpenter, 92, 18—74; C. B. Morse, 94, 14—80; A. A. Cannon, 96, 16—80; Walter Whitehead, 96, 16—80; H. E. Blazier, 88, 7—81; Royle T. Phillips, 97, 15—82.

Pacing Champion Back in Form.

After the three defeats administered to the world's pacing champion, Directum I., by his younger rival, William, early in the season, few horsemen expected to see the chestnut horse come back and display such form as he showed at the Fair track in Syracuse. He set a new world's record, eclipsing the mark of 1:58 which he set when he defeated William in the match race at Columbia last Fall. After the trio of defeats at Detroit, North Randall, and Montreal it is apparent that the champion was no match for William. Directum I. first showed that he was recovering his 1914 form at Hartford, when he paced in 1:58¾ in a trial against the track record of 2:00. Later in the week the champion gave a still more remarkable exhibition of speed. Directum I., apparently, is in the form of his life right now, and it seems a pity that he cannot have another try at his great rival, William, but the latter is now a member of the Billings Stable, which means that he will not be seen in public again except in trips against the watch. The mile in 1:58¾ of Directum I. is the fastest ever negotiated in the open without the aid of a pacemaker.

Intercholastic Race Soon.

Plans were completed yesterday afternoon by Manager Walter P. Pfeiffer of the Columbia track team for holding the annual interscholastic cross-country run on the morning of Nov. 13. This annual event, conducted each year by the Blue and White track management, is open to the runners of some 125 high and preparatory schools in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut, and the winner each year is awarded the Gustavus T. Kirby Trophy Cup. Last year Morris High School obtained the largest number of points. The victory by the Schenectady High School two years ago gave that institution two legs on the prize. If Schenectady wins again this year the cup becomes its permanent property. Because of the Columbia-Trinity football game on Nov. 13, the cross-country run will start at 11 o'clock. The course is from South Field to Riverside Drive, around Grant's Tomb, down the Drive to ninety-seventh Street, and back to the field. Columbia will have no Fall inter-class track meet, but the cross-country run for students in all four classes scheduled for the latter part of November. In addition the annual Van Am runs will take place next month.

MATTY'S RECORD BEST.

Pitched Twenty-seven Scoreless Innings Against Athletics in 1905.

Ten years have passed since the record for few runs scored in a world's series was established, and it still holds good. In the season of 1905 the New York Giants and the Athletics of Philadelphia created a new record for tight-score games played in a world's series. A total of 18 runs was scored by both teams, the Giants getting 15, and the Mack men had to be satisfied with 3 runs in five games, all of which were made in one contest. The series just played was a tight-score series and is next to the one of 1905, but for real close decisions the scores of the contest recently fought by the Boston Sox and the Philadelphia National were the greatest ever. Twenty-two runs were scored, but they were divided up in a more even manner than those in the Giants-Athletics series. Boston made 12 and the Phillies 10.

Christy Mathewson still retains the honor of pitching the most wonderful and effective ball of all hurlers in any world's series. Many followers of the game fully expected that the great Alexander would shatter pitching records in the series just played, and many were disappointed when the big fellow failed to work up to expectations. It is an old story, and it will be told until some other hurler arises who will shade the phenomenal pitching of the great Matty in that never-to-be-forgotten series of 1905. For all-around excellence and effectiveness the pitching by Mathewson against the Athletics that season has never been equaled, and remains as the best performance of all hurlers who strained nerve, brawn, and brain to win fame in these contests for the highest honors in baseball.

Mathewson blanked the Athletics for 27 innings—three full games—and the most wonderful thing about the achievement is the fact the hard hitters of C. Mack never had the remotest chance of getting a score. Several pitchers have accomplished the feat of winning all their games in a world's series, but none has approached Mathewson in point of skill and class. Radbourne, Keefe, Miner Brown, "Big Orvie" Overall, together with James and Rudolph of last season's fame, have performed wonders in these blue-ribbon contests.

A NEW NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New South Wales Has One and it Has Played with Fair Success.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SYDNEY, Australia, Sept. 11.—The National League of Baseball Clubs is not the only National League in existence. There is now one below the equator. The latter is, of course, but an infant body compared with the big organization in the United States, whose title it has presumed to copy, but in some future day—after the war—when baseball has gained the measure of popularity which its followers in Australia hope to see it attain "down under," there may be considerable significance in the words, "The National Baseball League of New South Wales, Limited."

At the annual meeting a few days ago of the Summer Baseball Association, Limited, which was projected soon after the McGraw-Comiskey pilgrimage with the idea of making baseball a Summer as well as a Winter sport in Sydney and its environs, it was voted to change the name to the more high-sounding one just referred to. The first annual report of the association, which was read, said:

"It was unfortunate that the European crisis came just at the time we had launched our association, and considering all things we have done very well to maintain our position under most adverse circumstances. Unfortunately, many obstacles were put in the way of the advancement of this association by other sporting bodies for the purpose of strangling Summer baseball in its infancy, but thanks to the loyal support of the players we have come through with flying colors, and we have every reason to be proud of our position.

"From a financial point of view we cannot claim a big success, but under conditions which have prevailed since the opening of the season in September last we are indeed fortunate in being in such a healthy condition as we find ourselves today, and now that most of the big expenses have been cleaned off we should do even better this season. The Directors, after due consideration, have decided to go on with the season's competitions, and trust, now that that decision is made, to have the loyal support of players and public alike."

Baseball Not a Family Trait.

An interesting question for baseball fans to discuss in their leisure moments away from the ball grounds is the seeming impossibility of two brothers attaining great success on the diamond at the same time. While there are in baseball this season three sets of brothers who are possessed of considerable ability—Bill Killifer of the Philadelphia Nationals and Wade Killifer of the Cincinnati Reds; Wally Schang of the Athletics and Bobbie Schang, with the New York Giants; Fritz Maisel and George, who is a sensation in the New York State League, and who will get a trial with Detroit this Fall, family failures have been more numerous. Ty Cobb's brother Paul is only a fair minor leaguer. Christy Mathewson's brother Hank couldn't make a go of it; neither could Roger Bresnahan's brother Joe; Johnny Evers's brother Joe is a minor leaguer, and so is Ed Groh, a brother of Heinie of the Cincinnati Reds. Vean Gregg's younger brother was tried by Cleveland and sent back. Ed Walsh's looked good for a time, then went to the bushes. The same thing happened to Harry Camnitz, a brother of Howard, who started with Pittsburgh. George Tyler, the Boston Brave left-hander, had a brother who was tried by Boston as a catcher and sent back.

Judges for Toy Dog Show.

The judges selected for the first show of the Toy Dog Club at the Hotel McAlpin Winter Garden on Friday afternoon, Oct. 29, are: Pomeranians, Miss E. Laflin; Pekingese, Mrs. A. McClure Halley; English toy spaniels and Japanese, Miss Clarise Lithuar; Boston terriers and English bulldogs, A. Webb; French bulldogs, H. L. Hoffman; all-round and specials, Alva Rosenburg. The meetings and shows, which are open to all owners of the miniature dogs, will be held every second Friday in the month. Many trophies have been offered, as well as ribbons, some to be competed for two or three times; others to be won outright at each meeting. There will be entertainment features provided for each meeting. John Clay and Miss Wilma Wynn will be seen in dance specialties. Judging will begin promptly at 3 P. M., to be preceded and followed by the general dancing and special features.

New Power Boat Rules Soon.

The time for rule making by the American Power Boat Association is near at hand. The annual meeting follows the close of the season, usually being held late in October. It is likely that important changes will be made again this year, but will not affect rating and measurement rules as last year's changes did. Changes are expected to be more in the direction of stimulating the building and construction of racing boats along certain lines. The results of the last season have shown that the rules as they stood gave the high-powered boat a chance.

WOMAN WINS TENNIS CUP AFTER 20 YEARS

Mrs. Blanchard, Once Pacific Coast Champion, 'Comes Back' in Bedford Park Match.

Twenty years ago, when Miss May Sutton and Miss Mary Browne, former national tennis champions, were little girls, and before William M. Johnston, national title holder, was born, Mrs. J. O. Blanchard, then a young girl of 18 or 19, held the tenni championship of the Pacific Coast.

For four years she overcame every effort to wrest the title from her. Then she married and came East, but found the players too much for her. Time and again Mrs. Blanchard tried to recover her old tennis form. She entered many tournaments, but the best she could do was to finish as runner-up. These failures in no way dampened her ardor, though, and at last her patience and perseverance has been rewarded.

Representing the West Side Tennis Club, Mrs. Blanchard entered the invitation tournament of the Bedford Park Lawn Tennis Club, which closes this year's competitive season for women. She failed in the singles, although she made a plucky fight. Not at all daunted, she competed in the consolation singles. In these she captured a first prize, defeating in the final round a club member, Mrs. W. H. Voss, in straight sets at 6—1, 6—3. The victory was a well-deserved one, as Mrs. Blanchard defeated in the tournament a number of the best racquet wielders in the Metropolitan district.

The victory of Mrs. Blanchard was a popular one and formed a fitting feature for a series of well played contests yesterday on the Bedford Park Courts. Following up her victory in the singles, Miss Marie Wagner, the State champion, with Mrs. Spencer Fullerton Weaver as a partner, won the doubles final round from Mrs. William H. Pouch and Miss Bessie Moore at 6—2, 7—5.

In the semi-final round Miss Wagner and Mrs. Weaver won from Mrs. A. Humphries and Miss Bessie Holden at 6—1, 7—5, and Mrs. Pouch and Miss Harper eliminated Mrs. Ingo Hartmann and Miss Amy Harper, 7—5, 5—7, 6—0. It was Mrs. Hartmann's first competition in women's doubles, although she had won many trophies in singles tournaments.

The best match of the day was between Miss Ruth Schwab and Mrs. Percy Wilbourn, which was left unfinished on Friday night. Miss Schwab played clever tennis, while Mrs. Wilbourn did not put up her usually aggressive game and lost by the score of 8—6, 4—6, 6—4.

Miss Wagner and A. J. Ostendorf qualified for the semi-final round of the doubles, defeating Miss Ruth Schwab and Erwin Lewisohn, who put up a plucky contest and made a closer fight than the score indicates, as several of the games went to deuce.

The final matches in the mixed doubles will be decided today and the Women's Ranking Committee will then begin their work of rating the players on the past season's performances. The summary:

Bedford Park Lawn Tennis Club, Women's Invitation Doubles.—First Round—Miss Marie Wagner and Mrs. Spencer Fullerton Weaver defeated Mrs. A. Humphries and Miss Bessie Holden 6—1, 7—5; Mrs. William H. Pouch and Miss Elizabeth Moore defeated Mrs. Ingo Hartmann and Miss Amy Harper 7—5, 5—7, 6—0.

Final Round—Miss Marie Wagner and Mrs. Spencer Fullerton Weaver defeated Mrs. William H. Pouch and Miss Elizabeth Moore 6—2, 7—5.

Mixed Doubles.—First Round—Miss Elizabeth Moore and Frank Oliver defeated Mrs. Percy Wilbourn and Eugene Nolan 6—3, 6—2; Miss Corona Winn and June Fox defeated Miss Helen Punnett and Charles Street 6—2, 6—4; Miss Ruth Schwab and Erwin Lewisohn defeated Miss Moore and partner by default.

Second Round—Miss Marie Wagner and A. J. Ostendorf defeated Miss Ruth Schwab and Erwin Lewisohn 6—2, 6—2.

Women's Singles, Consolation.—Second Round—Miss Corona Winn defeated Miss Helen Punnett 6—2, 6—3; Miss Ruth Schwab defeated Mrs. Percy Wilbourn 5—6, 4—6, 6—4; Mrs. W. H. Voss defeated Miss Droogan 6—3, 0—6, 6—1.

Semi-Final Round—Mrs. J. O. Blanchard defeated Miss Corona Winn 6—2, 6—2; Mrs. W. H. Voss defeated Miss Ruth Schwab 8—6, 1—6, 6—4.

Final Round—Mrs. J. O. Blanchard defeated Mrs. W. H. Voss 6—1, 6—3.

NOTES FOR DOG FANCIERS.

The wire-haired fox terrier Wire Boy of Paignton, the international champion, has "come back." He was easily able to account for all comers at the Danbury show last week. This dog cost more than $5,000 and was the most expensive of his breed. Wire Boy is owned by George W. Quintard. He was put down in rare form by Charles Button, the Ridgeway Kennels' Superintendent. The dog's coat handled like pinwire and had great density. A litter with Champion Gromwell Cheeky as dam and Wire Boy as sire are expected to hold their own anywhere. There are four dogs and three bitches. Champion Matford Vic has a family of four bitches and two dogs, sired by Wire Boy. The litter is three months old. Wicollar Boy, a son of Wire Boy of Paignton, has just won his championship in England.

Professional show dog handlers are now feeding their charges canned salmon mixed with farinaceous foods. Many of the best known exhibition dogs are sent from show to show in crates; the animals have full freedom rarely. The result is poor appetite and consequent falling off in condition that fleips a dog to win in close competition. Canned salmon was first tried as a tonic a few weeks ago. The Alaska product is generally used. The use of fish food for dogs is not new, for dried fish is fed to draught dogs in their hardest work in the arctic.

Durbar, winning black cocker spaniel at the Danbury show, was purchased by H. K. Bloodgood of New York, proprietor of the Kennels at New Marlboro, Mass. This dog was "spotted" by E. Lewis, Jr., of Landsdowne, Penn., at the Toronto show. Durbar is built on the lines of the English type, being closer to the ground and less leggish than the small cocker of this country. The dog's career has been successful. Among his victories were first prize at the Live Stock Show, Toronto, 1914; first limit, open and winners' class, Toronto, 1915; first limit, open and winners' class, Ottawa; first and special for the best of all breeds at Winnipeg.

The black Pomeranian Haughty Boy has been sold by Mrs. R. F. Mayhew of New Hyde Park, Long Island, N. Y., to Mrs. L. W. Lower. Haughty Boy was entered in the open class at the Danbury show last week, but did not appear because of change of ownership. Haughty Boy was bred by T. Croft, by Ashton Victor out of Minnie.

Alf Delmont took twenty-one dogs to the Kansas City show last week. He won thirty-two first prizes, besides special premiums and minor awards. Some of the dogs returned to compete at the Danbury show. In poor condition, Clement M. Bernheimer's terrier, Ridgetown Play Boy, won third to King Nobbler's Double and Leed's Reformer.

Harry Mortimer may succeed his father, the late James Mortimer, as Superintendent of the annual show of the Ladies' Kennel Association of America.

C. L. A. Whitney of Albany, N. Y., is establishing a kennel of cocker spaniels. He intends to breed woodcocking spaniels of white and red color.

J. Robinson Beard purchased the novice Scalyham terrier Senny Bumble Bee from Tom Harris of Senny Bridge, South Wales. Bumble Bee was brought out to this country by Mr. Harris.

GROWTH OF POLO IN STATES.

1,407 Players, Including 579 from Army, Listed with Association.

Statistics compiled by officials of the Polo Association show that the season which has just concluded has been one of the most successful in recent years.

"In spite of the general business depression in the early part of the year and the disturbances created by the war, polo has shown a rapid increase in popularity," said H. L. Herbert, Chairman of the Polo Association, yesterday.

"One of the most gratifying features of the past season is the number of young men who have taken up the sport and the skill they have displayed. This more particularly applies to the younger members of the Long Island and Pennsylvania clubs, which are particularly fortunate in having such promising material to draw from," continued Mr. Herbert.

"With an idea of further encouraging competition among the clubs, the officials of the association are outlining the conditions for a number of new trophies to be played for under most attractive conditions. The full particulars of these contests will be given to the members for their aproval at the annual meeting, which is held in February."

The outstanding feature of the past season was the universal tournament, which was held at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, starting in March and closing May 1, or sixty days of actual play, during which thirty-seven matches were played and many valuable trophies awarded.

The entry of Boise, Idaho, and Portland, Ore., with the many California teams, and the presence of leading Eastern and Chicago players, with a strong aggregation from the United States Army, made the tournament a most successful one.

Polo in various sections of the country has been greatly stimulated by the institution, some two years ago, of the Polo Association Circuit Cups. These trophies are played for by clubs within a certain radius of each other, and in every case last season drew five and six entries.

Figures compiled by the Polo Association to date show that 150 players have registered 671 mounts, or an average of four and a half mounts to each player. The idea of having the horses officially registered, while very old in England, was only started in this country at the beginning of the year, and is meeting with the general approval of all the players.

The list is far from complete, as there are many more to hear from, who up to the present have not sent in to the association the names and numbers of their mounts.

At the present time there are 1,407 players listed in the various clubs affiliated with the Polo Association. Of these 579 belong to various branches of the United States Army. The remaining 828 are connected with the various clubs in the association. While there is no distinction, the list has been divided into two parts, the active and the listed players. They are as follows:

	Listed.	Active.
N. Y., N. J. and vicinity	297	100
Philadelphia and vicinity	69	24
Rhode Island and vicinity	80	26
Mid-Western Circuit	86	59
Western Circuit	76	50
Southern Circuit	53	12
Pacific Coast and Hawaii	173	85

The Senior and Junior championships were played at Point Judith Club, Narragansett Pier, which is now recognized as the Hurlingham of America. The Senior event was won by Meadow Brook, the players being Raymond Belmont, J. M. Waterbury, Jr.; Malcolm Stevenson, and Devereux Milburn. Bryn Mawr of Philadelphia won the Junior title.

One of the notable matches of last season was the final for the Governor's Cup, held during the Rockaway Hunting Club tournament, in which the Meadow Brook team defeated Great Neck. This game marked the only appearance of Harry Payne Whitney during the year. The line-up was J. C. Phipps, J. M. Waterbury, Jr., H. P. Whitney, and Devereux Milburn. The Westbury team won by the score of 10 to 8¾ goals.

TWENTY-TWO IN TITLE RUN.

Biggest Entry on Record Received for A. A. U. Ten-Mile Championship.

Twenty-two long distance runners from New York and vicinity are entered in the ten-mile championship run to be contested at New Brunswick, N. J., next Saturday. This entry is the largest on record for the ten-mile championship, and undoubtedly was attracted by the offer of a regulation silver die medal to all contestants who finish inside of 58 minutes.

Those nominated are Harnes Kolehmainen, Irish-American A. C., the present champion; Frank Zuna, Irish-American A. C.; Hugh Honohan, New York A. HUGE PROBLEMS FOR CARRANZA Mexico City Thinks That He Can Never Overcome the Enormous Difficulties.

A DEBT OF $1,000,000,000

The Annual Budget Will Be Far Beyond That of the Diaz Regime.

MANY POLITICAL TANGLES

Observers Doubt If People Can Be Aroused to Take a Share in Nation's Affairs.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 24.—The Washington dispatches announcing the probability of recognition for the de facto Government of General Venustiano Carranza are widely commented on here and excite varied feelings.

Mexicans for good and sufficient reasons are reluctant to express themselves on political affairs; their opinions or feelings can easily be surmised, but they are non-committal. In general it may be said that the sentiment of this city is adverse to Carranza and his set. Not that there seems any likelihood that this sentiment will take shape in overt acts; but it exists. This the Carranzistas know well enough themselves, and it is what they mean when they describe the City of Mexico as abounding in reactionary elements—the word "reactionary" has come to have as loose and arbitrary a meaning as the term "cientifico."

For the reason that the Mexicans are reticent, it is necessary to feel the pulse of public opinion in non-Mexican circles in the greatly reduced American colony and among European residents.

From these sources THE TIMES correspondent has gathered the impression that so far from recognition being a benefit to Carranza, his real troubles will just be beginning when, or if, he gets it.

It is not uncommon to hear this comment: "If the United States and the Pan-American combination think that Carranza is entitled to recognition, the sooner they extend it the better. We shall then know where we stand. Carranza will then have the finest opportunity possible in the circumstances to establish a settled Government. It is just as well that his ability to do it should be brought to a practical test as soon as possible. If he succeeds, well and good; if he fails, it is desirable, seeing that his faction now seems the strongest, that his incapacity should be demonstrated quickly rather than at the cost of more prolonged suffering to the country, and that his place should be taken by some one offering greater prospects of success."

It is also pointed out that, after the chaotic conditions that have prevailed in Mexico for a year past, it may be satisfactory for the United States and other powers to focus responsibility in Mexico on a given Administration.

In this connection, many say that recognition is the last thing that Venustiano Carranza should wish for. There are numerous questions that can be brought up with awkward pointedness to a responsible executive that cannot always be discussed with one who, in foreign estimation, is merely a more or less irresponsible factional chief. Such questions are the resumption of interest and sinking fund service on the national debt, the return of railways and other public utilities to their legitimate owners, the question of indemnities to foreigners for lives and properties lost during the past five years of revolution.

All this holds good whether Carranza himself assumes the headship of the Government to be recognized or appoints one of the men who have stood by him, such as Pablo Gonzalez or Salvador Alvarado, while he himself makes his preparations to run for the full term 1916-1922.

Can Carranza Control the Situation?

One of the questions discussed here with most interest, in the foreign circles above mentioned, is whether Carranza, even with recognition, can establish a solid Government and control the situation throughout the Republic. And the answer inclines to the negative, not out of prejudice against Carranza, but because it is thought that the difficulties of the task will be too much for the capacity of Carranza or any of the men surrounding him.

First, there are the political difficulties in the sense in which political matters are understood in Mexico. It is taken for granted that politics in Mexico will continue to be what it always has been—i. e., purely personal. It is considered absurd to expect at the present time that the Mexican people will take part in any political contest. Some semblance of popular interest may be gotten up, but those who know, or ought to know, Mexico through long residence say that there has never been a time when the Mexican people have displayed a more fatalistic apathy in the presence of political developments than now. They are asking themselves chiefly: What shall we eat? Wherewith shall we be clad? As one man put it, to ask Mexico to arouse herself politically just now is like what it was to urge on Mrs. Dombey to "make an effort." Mexico is in no situation just now to make an effort.

It is, therefore, assumed that any political settlement reached will be in the shape of a personal deal between Carranza and his chief followers. National character, it is argued, does not greatly change, and the defects that have been observed in Mexican political régimes in the past are not confined to any one party or group of men, but spring from peculiarities of the Mexican character, and, therefore, are not likely to disappear.

Division of the Spoils.

Now, it is not denied that Carranza so far seems to have maintained in his party a cohesion and an apparent discipline superior to those of the other factions, but it is maintained that Carranza has achieved this result by allowing his chief subordinates considerable latitude in their acts, as, for example, when Obregon held this city in the early part of the present year and did more harm to the Carranzista cause, it is thought, than Zapatistas and Villistas together by his oppressive misgovernment. At any rate, it is believed that the real test of the cohesion of the Carranzistas will come when they attempt to establish a regular and settled government, and when it shall seem that they no longer have a formidable enemy in front.

Pablo Gonzalez has through good and evil repute been the most faithful of all to Carranza, but it is assumed that there is a definite understanding between the two men for the division of power.

Alvaro Obregon is a more uncertain factor. He has for some time past professed loyalty to Carranza, but it is known that at the time of the first occupation of Mexico City by the Carranzistas a year ago he criticised Carranza in no uncertain terms in his conversations with friends in the foreign colonies, and it is not forgotten here that it was Obregon who, in union with Villa, submitted to the First Chief a series of proposals which would have debarred Carranza from the Presidency for the full regular term, inasmuch as one of the proposals was that Carranza should at once assume the title of Provisional President, and another, that any one occupying the office of Provisional President should be ineligible for the office of Constitutional President. These propositions are dated at Chihuahua, Sept. 3, 1914, and are signed both by Villa and Obregon. It is recalled now with amusement that Carranza, in rejecting these proposals, told Obregon and Villa that matters of "such transcendent importance" should be discussed by the convention which Carranza and his followers have since so unmercifully vilified. The question is incidentally asked: Would Carranza, as President, get up any state with a freely elected Congress than he did with the convention, of which, before it assembled, he augured such great things, saying that its deliberations were going to be "enlightened by the soundest intelligences and most energetic spirits that have sustained the ideals of the revolution."

Obregon, at that time and at the assembling of the convention, was evidently on the fence. Despite the disastrous failure of his administration of the City of Mexico in the early part of the present year, he is an important element for the Carranzistas, as all the chief military successes of late have been his.

Obregon and Pesqueira.

Obregon is from Sonora, as is also Ignacio L. Pesqueira, Carranza's War Minister, who is attached to Carranza's cause by the fact that Carranza took his part in the local squabble in Sonora between Maytorenistas and Pesqueiristas. Obregon and Pesqueira are both enemies of Maytorena, but if Maytorena is eliminated the State of Sonora may prove a bone of contention between them, as each will want to have a considerable say in the direction of its affairs, and their views and interests may not coincide. Carranza, it is surmised, whatever external attitude diplomacy may impose on him, prefers Pesqueira to Obregon, and as the latter is expected to look for ample recognition of his important services, he may yet prove a perturbing and perplexing factor in the Carranzista camp. Obregon's relations with Pablo Gonzalez are not of the best just now, it is said.

Another man for whom substantial provision will have to be made is Salvador Alvarado, at present Governor of Yucatan. Though a native of Northwestern Mexico, he is believed to have been very successful in his administration of an extreme southern State, whose people hitherto have always been regarded as of independent and somewhat defiant character, and Carranza is known to be well satisfied with his work in the peninsula and to think highly of him. His name has been coupled with that of Pablo Gonzalez as Carranza's possible choice for the Provisional Presidency.

Then come a lot of lesser lights, but each of some importance in his own estimate and the estimate of his circle—Coss, Dieguez, Murguia, Treviño, Zuazua, Amaro and many others. All will have to be considered and rewarded, and if there is no quarreling over the process all experience of Mexico is at fault.

One Constitutionalist ex-General, Carlos Bringas, and his son have already been shot as a result of dissensions and intrigues, and the relations between Pablo Gonzalez and Francisco Coss are believed to be strained.

Military Abuses.

Besides the chiefs whose names figure in dispatches, there are hundreds of others, as well as the rank and file of the Revolutionary Army, that will have to be dealt with. With a periodicity which newspaper readers have learned to forecast with tolerable accuracy, official notices appear in the press to the effect that the authorities are determined to put a stop to abuses (atropellos) of the military, and sufferers are invited to report their wrongs to headquarters. The frequency with which these notices appear is taken as the best proof of their inefficacy. But when it is sought to establish a settled Government, it will be necessary to call a halt on practices which have been condoned on the plea of abnormal conditions, and when it comes to paring the army's claws and clipping its wings, serious dissensions and complications may arise.

The conclusion is, then, that when Carranza, or his nominated substitute, is confronted with the task of satisfying the military chieftains, as well as the Revolutionary Army in general, while at the same time bringing it into line with normal governmental conditions, the cohesion of his party will be put to a crucial strain.

The Question of Pacification.

But, aside from that, the optimism of the Carranzistas as to the early pacification of the country, if they get recognition, is not shared by the community at large. It is held that even if Carranza's enemies are reduced to guerrilla warfare, they can keep it up indefinitely and cause his Government infinite trouble and expense. Villa has to be counted with in the North, and if he disappears it is thought that somebody will be found to take his place, as opposition sentiment there is considered likely to stiffen as soon as Carranza attempts to establish a regular Government.

And there is the South of Mexico, where, beside the Zapatistas, there are other elements of disaffection. There are the warlike Sierra Indians of the State of Puebla, who are the ones that have crippled Mexico City's electrical transmission plant. There is the State of Oaxaca, which, now that Porfirio Diaz is dead, is likely to feel an increasing affection for his name and to resent the harshness with which the memory of her distinguished son is constantly being assailed by the Carranzistas. Chiapas is the theatre of anti-Carranzista movements, which have their base, it is said, in Guatemala, a thing which the Guatemalan Government finds it difficult, perhaps, to prevent altogether, just as the United States finds it difficult to prevent the passage of arms and armed men across the border into Mexico. Though Yucatan seems quiet just now under the rule of Salvador Alvarado, it will have to be watched, it is said, and the same applies to the States of Campeachy and Tabasco.

The Financial Difficulty.

But of all the difficulties which will face a recognized Carranzista Government the financial difficulty is the most formidable.

First, there is the question of the public debt. It is calculated that a settled Administration, in charge of national affairs, will have to recognize and provide for a public debt of about 2,000,000,000 pesos, which will have to be met, principal and interest, at the par of exchange, viz., 50 cents American currency equals 1 Mexican peso.

This debt will consist mainly of three factors:

1. The old public debt.
2. The fiat currency to be retired.
3. Indemnities to foreigners for losses during the last five years of revolution.

As for the old public debt, there is no part of it that can be repudiated or questioned, as all the loans constituting it were negotiated with every circumstance of validity and on terms extremely advantageous to Mexico—more advantageous, as events have proved, than Mexico deserved.

On June 30, 1910, at the close of the fiscal year 1909-10, the last fiscal year before the outbreak of the revolution, the public debt of Mexico amounted to 338,648,528 pesos, of which 300,524,936 pesos was payable in foreign currency, but as the balance is payable strictly in Mexican silver, to the exclusion of paper, there is really no very substantial difference between the two categories of the debt.

Since June 30, 1910, the public debt has increased through floating indebtedness, and short-time obligations, contracted by the Madero and Huerta régimes, and, of course, the debt has been piling up at compound interest since Huerta defaulted in January, 1914. While below the mark, it is thought that for the sake of convenience and conservatism, the old public debt will have increased to at least 500,000,000 pesos already.

Any settled Government that may be set up will, it is assumed, have to arrange for the retirement of the fiat currency or provide a cash guarantee fund, which amounts to the same thing. No one pretends to fix the amount, beyond saying that it will be very large, perhaps 1,000,000,000 pesos.

Shortly after Carranza occupied this city in August, 1914, he promulgated a decree authorizing an issue of 130,000,000 pesos in fiat currency, of which a large part was to be used for the purpose of retiring bills that had been issued by revolutionary chieftains in the field, including the bills of the State of Chihuahua, or, in other words, the bills issued by General Villa.

Now this decree is being referred to with interest just now, because it proves conclusively that, on Sept. 19, 1914, the date on which the decree was issued, Señor Carranza recognized that the Villista bills represented rights in favor of third parties, their holders, and it is asked: On what ethical or legal grounds can those rights have been forfeited simply owing to the subsequent quarrel between Carranza and Villa, a quarrel with which the persons in whom the rights are vested, viz., the holders of the notes, had nothing to do?

Owing chiefly to the break with Villa, practically no part of the issue of 130,000,000 pesos was used for the retirement of previous revolutionary issues. But this is not all. As Carranza's decree creating the 130,000,000 pesos issue was promulgated before the Carranza-Villa break, the Conventionists, when they assumed control in this city, regarded it as valid, and continued to issue notes under it, called Revalidados Altos, while Carranza was doing the same at Vera Cruz. The Carranzistas have even said that part of the issue made by Carranza before he abandoned Mexico City in November, 1914, has been duplicated by the Conventionists. This is only one of the many currency complications with which the people of Mexico have had to contend for a year past, as neither faction recognizes the issues of the other.

Carranza promulgated, in July last, a decree authorizing a note issue of 250,000,000 pesos, which it was again said was to be used for the retirement of existing recognized notes, excluding the Villista issues, popularly known as sábanas and dos caras. But as circumstances prevented the application of the former issue of 130,000,000 pesos to the retirement of previous issues, it is asked whether the same may not happen again.

As to Carranza's right to repudiate the Villista issues it is seriously questioned here. It is undeniable, people say, that a large part of the Villista issues were made to pay the Constitutionalist forces at a time when Villa was winning victory after victory for the cause, when he was taking Chihuahua, Ciudad Juarez, Torreon and Zacatecas, and all the other revolutionary chiefs seemed to be doing nothing. Furthermore, the Villista issues were made by a faction which was twice in control for considerable periods in this city, when creditors, including many foreigners, were compelled at the point of the bayonet to accept the Villista notes in settlement of all debts, including mortgages, even though the deeds called for payment in specie, and when merchants had to choose between receiving Villa's paper or closing their stores and winding up their business. But special stress is laid on the fact above mentioned, viz., that when he promulgated the decree of Sept. 19, 1914, Carranza evidently considered that the Villista notes issued until then were valid and would have to be withdrawn.

It is a very general opinion here that any constituted Government established in this city ultimately will have to make provision for the retirement not only of the Chihuahua bills, but also of the Durango, Monclova, and other miscellaneous issues, the amount of which is unknown, besides (and this Señor Carranza has fully recognized) the bills issued during the brief Presidency of Francisco Carvajal, all in addition to the Carranza issues.

Altogether, 1,000,000,000 pesos is not considered an exaggerated estimate of the amount of the fiat currency that will have to be retired, especially as there is no assurance that the last issue has not been made.

The third time of Mexico's future indebtedness is that of indemnities to foreigners, that will need to be adjusted by a mixed commission or international tribunal, for damages to person and property during the last five years of revolution, inflicted in the great majority of cases not out of any military necessity, but from sheer vandalism or spirit of plunder. The lowest estimate heard of these indemnities—that is, of the sum likely to be awarded—is 500,000,000 pesos.

Thus, with funded debt likely to figure out at 500,000,000 pesos, currency to be retired at 1,000,000,000 pesos and indemnities at 500,000,000 pesos, we get a total of 2,000,000,000 pesos which will have to be met at the par of exchange—for Mexico a crushing load of debt.

The Annual Budget.

The debt in question is only one of the items that will swell the annual budget of expenditure. Interest on the increased funded debt will have to be met and annual provision made for the retirement in installments of the paper money and the payment of indemnities. Aside from that, while the work of "pacification" lasts—and it bids fair to last a long time—the army and military requirements generally will cost the nation annually more than the entire disbursements, perhaps more than the entire receipts of the Diaz Administration, even during its closing years, when the country's financial prosperity was at its height. People looking back now are surprised to find how economical the Diaz Administration was, and how, by laying on the people a minimum burden of taxation, it met all its expenses and added a surplus each year to its cash reserves. The revenue and disbursements in cash of the Diaz régime during the last five fiscal years of its existence were in pesos as follows:

Fiscal Year.	Revenue in Cash.	Disbursements in Cash.
1906-1907	114,286,122	85,076,640
1907-1908	111,771,807	93,177,441
1909-1910	106,328,485	95,028,630

The new Government will have to raise twice at least, more probably three times, the amount of revenue raised by the Diaz Government. And how it can do this, when nearly all the sources of revenue have been seriously crippled, is not clear.

Mexico's Trade Balance.

A consideration of the economic outlook of the country in the broadest sense is not more encouraging. Even in her most prosperous times the trade balance in Mexico's favor, the excess of exports over imports, never sufficed to cover the nation's annual liabilities abroad, and the difference was only made good by the influx of foreign cash into the country in the shape of investment.

The record trade balance in Mexico's favor was attained in the fiscal year 1908-1909, when it was 74,567,592 pesos, exports amounting to 231,100,618 pesos and imports to 156,533,026 pesos. But even the balance of 74,567,592 pesos was far from equaling the sum that Mexico had to pay abroad in various forms in that year, and, as in other years, the deficiency of exports was eked out by the entry of foreign capital for investment.

Now, for years, it is thought that little or no foreign capital will come to the country for investment; first, on account of the European war, the effects of which, in the curtailment of available capital, will be felt long after it is ended; and, secondly, because Mexico herself for an indefinite period will be viewed with distrust as a field for foreign investments.

How will Mexico tide over this long series of lean years? To do so will tax to the utmost the ability of the new Government.

The Task of Administration.

But, it is asked, has Señor Carranza any real talent for administration? The wisdom of many of his administrative acts is questioned, and his choice of advisers is not thought to stamp him as a good judge of men. The mere task of reorganizing the Administration, aside from its financial difficulties, will be enormous, as all branches of the Government are in a state of bewildering confusion.

It is often asked whether Carranza countenanced the administrative blunders and economic heresies committed by Obregón when he was in control in this city from the end of January to near the middle of March in the present year. If he did not, people say, the fact proves that Carranza, for reasons of expediency, has to tolerate in his military chieftains acts that run counter to the general welfare; and if he did, it is remarked that the inference as to his ideas of administration is not encouraging.

Carranza's Press.

Not the least of Carranza's difficulties will consist in his relations with the press.

One of the chief charges against the Diaz Administration was its attitude toward the press. It was criticised for subsidizing El Imparcial and for harassing opposition editors.

But it is notorious that none of the revolutionary factions has made any improvement in this direction. On the contrary, the movement has been retrograde.

Not only is there a most fulsome subsidized press, but the existence of even a mildly independent press is inconceivable. Foreign correspondents well know that they have never labored under greater restrictions in Mexico than they have during the year that has elapsed since Carranza's entry into this city in August, 1914. And none of the local papers dare publish a word of censure of Governmental acts. Now, under Diaz, an opposition press always flourished, criticising the Government and caricaturing him personally with great freedom. Now and then, when the editors went too far, they got into prison, but opposition papers never ceased to be published, a thing which is impossible now. La Revolución, a revolutionary paper, edited by a Major of the Constitutionalist Army, was immediately suppressed and its staff imprisoned, because it published the other day a timid criticism of some administrative acts of the Carranzista Governor of Puebla.

There are many newspapermen in the ranks of the Carranzistas, and they all want to publish papers; so there will be many disappointed ones, and in some form or other their discontent is likely to break out.

The Problem of Hunger.

The authorities speak with airy confidence of their ability to grapple with the food crisis, but competent foreign observers, including American Red Cross representatives, have their doubts.

Though in some portions of the Bajio, controlled by the Constitutionalists, the cereal crops are looking well, according to the reports of Americans arriving from that region, there is little doubt that as a whole the corn crop for be harvested in November will fall far below the country's requirements, and unless outside assistance is forthcoming, the dearth next year will be worse than it is at present.

The new Government, in addition to its financial and administrative difficulties, will have to rule a people if not starving, at any rate feeling the pinch of want.

Such are some, not all, of the difficulties with which a Carranzista Administration will be confronted. But the foreign observers who point them out have no prejudice against Señor Carranza, and if he succeeds in establishing a strong and reasonable Government here, all, except the extreme partisans of the opposite side, will be glad.

ALLIES' LOAN PAYMENTS SWELL STATEMENT

Payments made to J. P. Morgan & Co. on account of subscriptions to the Anglo-French loan resulted in some striking changes in the statement yesterday of the Clearing House banks. The total of demand deposits made and reported in the "actual" statement of the Clearing House with the various Clearing House members was $3,055,923,000, the greatest total ever reported, and a gain of $177,772,000 over the preceding week. It was estimated that fully $250,000,000 was paid in on Thursday and Friday for bonds taken up by underwriters, and the large increase in deposits of Clearing House banks indicated that most of the bond payments represented money drawn from private banks and from institutions outside the city.

Loans made during the week aggregated $2,973,542,000, an increase for the week of $149,295,000. This increase, too, was expanded by operations incident to the initial payment on the loan. Another large transaction made itself felt in the bank statement, which, in itself would have swelled the deposit and loan accounts in a normal week's business. This was the payment of $50,000,000 to the Guaranty Trust Company by subscribers to stock of the Midvale Steel and Ordnance Company.

The Clearing House reported clearances amounting to $813,946,423 and balances amounting to $61,892,083, both high records for any day since the clearing system was organized. These figures, issued yesterday, represented Friday's transactions, the day when the Anglo-French loan payments first made their appearance in banking transactions. While the totals were larger than ever before, they did not represent additional labor on the part of the banks or the Clearing House, as vast sums were covered by a few checks.

LONDON MARKET IS QUIET.

British Government Buys Canadian Pacific Bonds to Help Exchange.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—Money supplies continued plentiful today. Discount rates were easy. The banks are offering weekly loans at 4 per cent.

The usual week-end quietude prevailed on the Stock Exchange. The only feature was an advance in Canadian Pacific, which, it was stated, was bought by the Government to assist American exchange. American bonds were also bought for the same purpose. American securities were idly steady and a fraction under yesterday. The market was dull in other directions.

Weakness developed in American exchange following yesterday's rise in cable transfers to 4.69¾.

Not Specific Enough.

Consul General George E. Anderson, Hongkong, reports to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that the unwillingness of American exporters to meet the customs and needs of Hongkong and other Far Eastern ports in the matter of cost, insurance, and freight quotations for goods, is costing them a very material share of the business now being placed in almost all lines. The disadvantage of quoting free on board, he points out, is that it leaves the prospective customer in ignorance of the actual landing cost of the goods, which may prove to be higher than the customer can afford, or at least higher than a European competitor's goods. Furthermore, he adds, there is sometimes a dispute between buyer and seller about what free on board really means. It is not infrequent that American goods, quoted on the free on board basis, are refused in favor of European merchandise quoted cost, insurance, and freight, even though the former might prove to be cheaper.

Duty on Buttonhooks.

Marshall Field & Co. imported quantities of a combined buttonhook and shoehorn, and an ordinary buttonhook composed of metal. Both were described as ornamental, and so arranged that they may be folded into compact forms adapting them for convenient carriage in the pocket or handbag. They were valued at above 20 cents per dozen pieces, and returned for duty at 60 per cent. ad valorem under the tariff as metal articles carried on or about the person. The importers contended for a duty of 20 per cent., but offered no evidence before the appraisers in support of their contention, merely submitting the case on official samples. The protest was overruled and the Collector affirmed.

Henry Clews's Christmas Fund.

Henry Clews announces that the committee which last year raised a Christmas fund of $50,000 for the Belgian sufferers will endeavor to collect a similar fund this year, and he hopes that it will be at least twice as large as the fund collected last year. Mr. Clews is the Treasurer of the committee and the other members are Colonel George Harvey, Dr. William T. Hornaday, Victor F. Lawson, Adolph S. Ochs, Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, Melville E. Stone, W. C. Reick, Oscar S. Straus, and George T. Wilson.

"This year, as last, our Dollar Christmas Fund," Mr. Clews said yesterday, "is in complete sympathy with every other appeal in behalf of the Belgian destitute, and differs from other appeals only in the sense that the total sum received will be forwarded as a special Christmas contribution from the people of this country to the destitute people of Belgium, an expression of sympathy for a sorrow from one people to another, and a tangible proof that Christmas goodwill, even in these days of strife and bloodshed, has not disappeared from the earth."

Contributions to the Dollar Christmas Fund should be addressed to Henry Clews, Treasurer, 15 Broad Street.

There were no new influences at work back of the stock market yesterday, so far as could be seen, and trading again reflected the unwillingness of the outside public to increase their commitments until there is something more tangible on which to base an expectation of a further advance. The professional speculator cares little whether the market goes up or down so long as he can forecast the direction, but the rank and file of outside traders operate only on the buying side, except as they sell stocks which they actually own. The volume of activity yesterday was fairly large for the two-hour session, running about 400,000 shares, but was less than the Street has become accustomed to.

Price changes were again most irregular, but with a preponderance of gains over losses due to a strengthening of the market shortly before the close. Some of the war order industrials forged ahead with their old-time strength, notably Baldwin Locomotive, Bethlehem Steel, Continental Can, General Electric, and Studebaker. The popularity of the railroad issues seems to have been shortlived, for while they have succeeded in holding the substantial gains made ten days ago, they have not added materially to them. The temper of the public is such that moderate profits or the yield from a railroad investment makes little appeal when contrasted with the possibilities in some of the industrial companies.

The most striking feature of yesterday's news was the remarkable statement of the New York Clearing House. It was known, of course, that payment of a large installment on the $500,000,000 loan on Friday would work great change in the statement, but the results were nevertheless surprising. There was an increase of $149,295,000 in loans, and an increase of $177,772,000 in demand deposits reported in the actual statement as of the close of business on Friday. The strength of the bank position was only slightly impaired, as indicated by a decrease in surplus of only $1,111,000, due to the fact that there was a large gain in cash holdings. Yesterday's statement of bank clearings showed a total of $813,845,000, which establishes a new record. The previous high record was $776,401,000, made on Nov. 3, 1912.

Payment of the first installment of 25 per cent. on the big loan was arranged to create as little disturbance as possible. For that reason, wherever banks are subscribers to the syndicate the payment of their 25 per cent. installment on Friday was made by the transfer of a credit on their books, and such transfers, of course, did not figure in any Clearing House reports.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Unsettlement.

Traders left Wall Street yesterday in a more uncertain frame of mind, probably, than on any other Saturday since the bull movement began to gather impetus. The decline of over 3 points in Consolidated Gas appeared to result from realizing sales, but from another point of view it reflected the sentiments of many speculators in regard to the market generally. That is, the change from bouyant strength to weakness in this issue tended to cause doubts whether the market had not lost some of its buoyancy. Declines in other stocks added to this impression. Still the war stocks, especially Bethlehem Steel and Baldwin, were rampant, and the price list at the close did not look unpromising for further progress forward.

Market Loses Snap.

Efforts put forth last week and the week before to switch trading from the industrial specialities to the railroads were not altogether a success. The railroad stocks were bought extensively, and scored fair increases, but there was not much snap about them. And when interest was again largely centred in the industrials the snap in these also seemed to be considerably reduced. The war stocks which continued to rise with power were fewer in number than in the preceding week. In a way, the slackening of business and the devotion of more attention by the trading "talent" to short selling afforded a breathing spell to the clerical forces of the commission houses.

The Cost of Saving.

The rigid economy which the railroads of the country have been exercising for the last two years is now having its reaction. Certain lines are overtaxed because the normal amount of supplies were not purchased during the time of business depression. A warning that the time would come when there would be a car shortage was issued months ago, but it seemed to attract little attention. To a certain extent the railway lines are always hard pressed for transportation facilities when the crops begin to move, but there are evidences that an unusual pressure is to be exerted on the roads this Fall and Winter. The Interstate Commerce Commission sent out a warning on Oct. 7 citing complaints from shippers about delays in transportation. The commission urged the shippers to hasten the prompt and full loading of freight cars and also urged the railroads to use extraordinary care to eliminate delays in the movement of the cars. But the commission did not admit that there was anything unusual about the transportation conditions facing the country. It referred to the condition as an "annually recurring failure of transportation facilities."

The New Haven's Case.

Howard Elliott, President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, has called attention to the Interstate Commerce Commission's warning, and he makes it plain that the New Haven road is overtaxed in many places. Mr. Elliott's statement seems to substantiate the reports that the New Haven is making great strides in the growth of business in the country. This is especially true in New England, and there is danger that there will not be transportation facilities enough to meet the daily demands. The condition of the railroads in this respect is not different from many other large industrial plants that have more orders than they can fill. The New Haven management is using every effort it can put forth to obtain the full use of all its facilities and to furnish all the transportation it can, and asks the help of its patrons at this time when facilities in many places are overtaxed."

NEWS OF THE CORPORATIONS AND THE BANKS

GREAT MORTGAGES FOR RAILROAD ILLS

Reorganization Plan for the Missouri Pacific Includes Two Big Bond Issues.

PROVIDES FOR THE FUTURE

Program Laid Out by Kuhn, Loeb & Co. So Satisfactory It Arouses No Serious Opposition.

The colossal undertaking or reorganizing the Missouri Pacific and Iron Mountain Railways, a system aggregating more than 7,000 miles of track, is proceeding successfully, it was announced yesterday, and it is expected that by the beginning of the year the Missouri Pacific system will be on its own feet with a good credit in the financial market and fully equipped to profit by the expected improvement in the railroad business. The time for depositing the fifteen different varieties of the system's securities expired on Friday, but an extension will in all probability be granted when the reorganization managers meet early this week. The favorable reception of the reorganization plan is said to have exceeded expectations.

The receivership for the system was announced on Aug. 10, but the reorganization plan as it exists today had been announced more than a month prior to that date. At the moment of receivership the reorganization managers were in a position to announce a definite course of procedure to set the railway on its feet again. Long negotiations were thus eliminated. Protective committees representing the two principal bond issues and another committee representing the stock were agreed on a course of procedure and had placed the work of reorganization in the hands of competent managers. These committees were so strong that they were able to say that any concerted opposition to the plan would be overridden by force. The financial district accepted this ultimatum as final, and the reorganization work has proceeded smoothly.

Opposition Not Serious.

It is not denied that some opposition to the reorganization plan, as announced on July 26, has developed. There are no fewer than six committees working independently of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the reorganization managers. Some of these committees have asked for the deposit of securities, and in at least one case a committee has obtained a majority of a certain class of securities outstanding. There is a prospect, therefore, of slight modification of the plan, but it is not admitted officially that this will follow. It is regarded as significant that the stockholders, who face a $50 assessment on the stock, have not opposed the plan. The activity of the six independent committees will help to gather in all of the securities and will make it easy, it is contended, to get together.

Probably the most active of the independent committees is the Brown Bros. & Co. committee, representing holders of the Missouri Pacific System 5 per cent. trust bonds, due 1917, and the first collateral mortgage 5 per cent. bonds, due 1920. A majority of the former issue has been deposited with the independent committee, and here is an instance where a compromise seems most imminent. There are two Dutch committees, one known as the van Lutterfelt Committee, which represents holders of the Missouri Pacific's 5 per cent. refunding bonds, and the other, known as the Roelofsz Committee, representing the 4 per cent. gold loan bonds. The deposits obtained by these committees will be limited to holdings in Holland. Each of these committees maintains that the other is treated too well under the reorganization plan. Neither has objected to the plan as a whole.

Providing for the Future.

The Welsh Committee represents holders of the Central Branch first mortgage 4 per cent. bonds, due 1948, but it has not asked for deposits. The Peabody Committee also represents a minor issue of bonds, but has asked for no deposits. The Boisot Committee represents the Kansas City Northwestern first mortgage 5 per cent. bonds and is asking for deposits. The Merrill Noteholders' Committee represents the $24,845,000 short-term notes of the Missouri Pacific, which were only recently extended for a year. It has not asked for deposits and does not oppose the plan. The plan provides directly for the payment in full of the short-term notes.

As a whole, therefore, it is contended, the main planks in the reorganization plan are not menaced seriously by the opposition which has developed. No attack has been made on the reorganization managers on the ground that the plan is a "freeze out" designed to place the reorganized company into hostile hands. Such charges have been common in other reorganizations.

An effective argument put forward by the sponsors of the plan is that under the reorganization the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain System will have one big unifying mortgage, which will provide for the future of the company for decades to come and will serve as a protection from excessive interest charges. This proposed issue is the first and refunding mortgage, limited to three times the amount of stock outstanding. It is proposed to issue about $47,000,000 of the bonds under this issue, but the issue ultimately may approximate $500,000,000. The only other issue to be authorized is a general mortgage, limited to $100,000,000, out of which $44,000,000 would be issued immediately.

To Reduce Fixed Charges.

It is these mortgages of $600,000,000 on which the future credit of the Missouri Pacific must rest. It is contended the railway will be able to go freely into the open market for cash whenever required and get it on reasonable terms.

The Missouri Pacific System has a total funded indebtedness of about $280,000,000. Of this amount $128,000,000 underlying securities will remain unchanged and practically all of the remainder of the funded indebtedness is subject to exchange for bonds of the two new issues. The stock is preferred and common stock, aggregating about $150,000,000. The interest bearing securities will be reduced by more than $60,000,000, and the annual fixed charges will be reduced by more than $3,000,00. The experts have estimated that even in a very bad year there should be available a surplus of $2,000,000 after meeting all charges and after paying 6 per cent. on the preferred stock.

It is contended that the new mortgages, since they represent all of the 7,000 miles of system, will represent also the diversified earnings of the system. The man in Iowa who now holds a first mortgage bond on a single track road which must depend on the success of the wheat crop will get in return a unified mortgage bond which will not be affected seriously by failure in any one commodity. This is the kind of mortgage adopted by the large railroad systems of the country, and it is contended it will effect the same change in the credit of the Missouri Pacific that was effected some years ago in the Atchison, the St. Paul, the New York Central, the Pennsylvania, and other big systems.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

It was a market on the Consolidated Stock Exchange which displayed considerable irregularity in the short session of two hours. The closing tone, however, was firm, with some stocks moving upward very sharply. At the start of the day, the general market displayed hesitation, and, as the session progressed, there was evidence of a continuation of the sort of selling that had been going on recently, and prices gradually weakened throughout the first hour of trading.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

THE MERCHANT'S POINT OF VIEW

As time goes on, the continuance of the exceptional conditions arising from the war makes normal what at first was the reverse, and enables business men to accommodate themselves to the new order of things. This is the reason why now, in many mercantile lines, commitments or contracts are being made far in advance, it being pretty well agreed that there will be no unusual disturbing factors to interfere with either foreign or domestic trade before the end of next year at the earliest. In the export field this is a particularly cheering thing, because the lapse of time that ensues in that kind of trade between the soliciting of goods and the delivery of the orders is one of the important things to be reckoned with. Quicker adjustments are, of course, possible in the purely domestic trade, but, even in this, the interval is quite large between the ordering of fabrics at the mills and the sale of the garments made of the materials so ordered. The nearer the equality of conditions at both ends of the line, the greater is the confidence felt which means so much in increasing business.

As to Basic Conditions.

The general improvement in basic matters which began some months ago is going ahead at an accelerated pace. If the production of iron and steel, which is often referred to as the barometer of trade, was to be taken as a typical illustration, the country's condition would be described as phenomenally prosperous. The output of these metals was never before so great, and the unfilled orders are piling up with each succeeding month. While a large percentage of the output may be credited to war orders, it is easy to assume that much more is for these purposes than is really the case. For the seven months ended with July 31 of this year the exports of iron and steel manufactures of all kinds were $174,070,645 in value. For the same period in 1913 they were $179,703,554, or nearly $5,000,000 more. But all the iron and steel exports form only a small percentage—not 15 per cent.—of the domestic output. The production and outbound shipments of the breadstuffs cut a much larger figure, and in this the present conditions are exceptionally favorable. It has been figured out that the cereal crops of this year, even at the lower prevailing prices, show an increase in value over last year's record yield of more than half a billion dollars. This alone would be sufficient to more than take up the entire Anglo-French loan that has just been arranged for. The fact is that, in produce, half a billion dollars makes a small showing. It is little more than enough to pay for the crop of eggs which the hens of this country annually lay. A wider and larger distribution of the profits of various industries which is now in progress is one of the factors making for an extension and broadening of domestic trade in different lines.

Position of Cotton.

Each succeeding week seems to put the position of cotton on a more secure basis. Increased exports and enlarged consumption by the mills indicate that whatever surplus there may be at present is likely to dwindle to small proportions before next August. The advanced prices of the staple on the Exchanges merely reflect this general opinion. Long staple cotton is in especial demand, and the prices for these varieties are extremely high. It is well known that there is no surplus of them. The prices for cotton goods have been advancing steadily, to keep pace with the rise in the cost of the raw material. In a number of kinds of cotton cloths, especially of the bleached and printed varieties, the general disposition is to place them "at value." The upward trend has also been quite marked in knit goods, particularly the cheaper balbriggans, the price cutting in which earlier in the season threatened for a while to demoralize the trade. Within the last thirty days the advances have not only been made and maintained, but business seems to have been materially helped because of them. Buyers who had been hesitating came to the conclusion that there was a greater likelihood of a raise than a decline, and have hastened to place their orders for next Spring. Quite a number of merchandise buyers seem to imitate the unversed purchasers of stocks in buying on a rising rather than on a falling market.

In the Other Textiles.

In the primary markets of the other textiles—wool, silk, and linen—the prices of the raw materials remain high. The wool auctions in Australia begin tomorrow and will attract much attention, though the interest in the offerings will not equal that which later on will mark the sales of crossbreds in New Zealand. The only easing off in prices has been in faulty wools. The market for these is usually in those parts of Continental Europe which are now the theatre of war. A disturbing factor was mooted the other day in the suggestion that Great Britain meditated the fixing of an export duty on wool. This has been urged as a revenue measure. There is now such a duty on rubber, and it was proposed to have a similar tax on jute as well as wool. The effect would be to add to the cost of the wool imported into this country from any British possession, and it might also lead to export duties being placed by South American countries on the same article. In turn, this would add to the price of domestic wool as a matter of sympathy. Such a duty would also enable British manufacturers of woolen goods to get their raw material at a less cost than those in this country. Still, at last accounts, this policy had not been determined on. In silks, despite the closing of the German and Austrian markets, the price of the raw material, especially the Japanese variety, has been advancing steadily. The demand for it here is quite large, the mills being busily occupied in turning out goods. In linens, the scarcity of flax has been the cause for the higher prices.

More as to Dyestuffs.

Even the fifty tons of dyestuffs which came in on the St. Louis the other day will give some relief to certain of the New England cotton mills, although, of course, it is a mere drop in the bucket as compared with normal imports of colors. The dyes are of German origin, and there is a chance of other shipments of the kind being allowed to pass through the British blockade. None are more interested in seeing them supplied here than are the German makers of them. One of their agencies here, in a bulletin just issued to the trade, is particularly solicitous to explain that the embargo placed on dyes was primarily to enable the German Government to safeguard its supply of munitions, and that the producers "worked earnestly" to supply the needs of the American textile trade. Coincidently with this comes one of those inspired utterances which the American Association of Commerce and Trade at Berlin gets out from time to time. This one refers to the dyestuffs and general chemical industries and states that German manufacturers "face calmly the efforts of the enemy to produce such chemicals which before the war were imported from Germany." It adds, however, this significant statement: "German manufacturers follow closely any such effort and, although knowing the failure of such attempts, realize that each foreign competitor, no matter how small, will eventually render difficult the installation of old business connections." To this may be subjoined that no efforts are being watched more closely by the German makers of dyes and chemicals than are those in this country which have made greater progress and offer more promise of success than do those of all other countries combined.

A Tariff Propaganda.

Once again the unconscious humorist who is styled the Chairman of the Hosiery Manufacturers Legislative Committee has projected himself into the arena of tariff discussion with some new absurdities. Just now and for some time past the domestic hosiery business has been prosperous. The exports are large and are constantly getting bigger. The imports are restricted and are likely to remain so permanently. New knitting mills are being erected to care for an expanding trade. This condition makes it hard for a partisan political committee, whose purpose is to secure a higher tariff on hosiery. So the Chairman, calmly ignoring the condition of the trade he is supposed to represent, makes tabulations of other articles, the imports of which he either shows or says have increased during the continuance of the present tariff. These tabulations include such things as sugar beet seeds, which the growers of sugar beets in this country insist they must get from abroad; breadstuffs, of which less than $3,500,000 worth were imported in the last fiscal year above what was brought in under the Payne-Aldrich law, while the exports of the same articles have increased by over $360,000,000; artificial silk yarns, which were largely exported after being manufactured here into goods of divers kinds, and wool, of which this country never yet has been able to grow enough to provide for its manufacturing needs, to say nothing of taking care of the immense export trade in woolen goods, which has been under way for the first time in the last few months. The tariff beggar's lot is getting harder and harder as time goes on.

Something About Apples.

Actual happenings seem to be playing hob with accepted theories and many apparently well-founded apprehensions. Illustrations of this are numerous, but one is somewhat pertinent just now because of fears that have been expressed as to the disposition of the country's apple crop. Last year the yield of this fruit was extremely large, amounting to more than 84,000,000 barrels. This was nearly 25,000,000 barrels in excess of the biggest crop ever gathered in this country. It came at a time, also, when it was naturally taken for granted that, with certain big European markets like that of Germany cut off, prices would go to smash. But the unexpected happened, and the exports for the year ended June 30, 1915, showed up with an increase of about 9,000,000 pounds of dried apples and of over 800,000 barrels of the green and ripe fruit beyond that of the preceding year. For the seven months ended with July 31 this year the exports of dried apples were over 11,000,000 pounds above those of the corresponding period last year, and the increase in exports of green and ripe apples was over 800,000 barrels. This year's apple crop is figured at about 20,000,000 barrels less than that of 1914, and it would seem that, if the marketing is looked after properly, the grower should have no cause to complain of the result. In one market, at least—the British—there ought to be good prospects, because the apple crop of that country is short. With regard to fruits in general, the foreign trade this year has been particularly good. The exports for the seven months ended with July 31 were valued at $16,168,856, as against $10,920,744 in the corresponding period last year.

WHAT IS BEING SHIPPED ABROAD

Wide Variety of Articles Now Exported to Places Not Before So Supplied.

The kinds of American goods being shipped to unusual or out of the way places not hitherto supplied from the United States are revealed in manifests of outward bound vessels now leaving this port. While the shifts in international trade caused by the war are set forth by principal countries and geographical divisions in the Government's Monthly Summary and other official publications, the Department of Commerce figures have a way of ignoring the smaller countries and localities by grouping them under the catch-all designations of "all other," "other Europe," "other Asia," &c.

The manifests on the other hand, while not showing the bulk exports set forth in a general way in the more pretentious statistical official publications, do show nevertheless in a very direct and even impressive manner just what is going out from here to foreign points formerly depending upon Europe for such commodities and articles. Among the manifests released the past week at the Custom House, for example, was that of the Fabre Line steamer Roma, bound for Barcelona, Naples, and Marseilles.

This vessel unloaded at Barcelona American products to the value of $73,676. Some of these articles for Portugal included such items as marine gas engines, preparations of breadstuffs, textile machinery, typewriters, railway track material, men's shoes, perfumery, playing cards, and "beverages." The Roma carried to Gibraltar 12,632 barrels of wheat flour, valued at $92,811, consigned to the British Government for army purposes. Also on the same steamer went chemicals, drugs, glassware, stoves and ranges, lamps, leaf tobacco, malt, medicines, and hardware. The Roma's consignment for Spain included automobile tires, cash registers and parts, while goods for Portuguese, South Africa, to be transshipped at Barcelona, covered such items as textile machinery, clocks, furniture, leaf tobacco, and manufactures of wire. Items on this steamer's manifest for Morocco were lubricating grease, lubricating and heavy paraffin oil, paraffin, and paraffin wax.

Another steamer, the Border Knight, leaving this port, carried additional lines of American goods to Portuguese, South Africa. Some of these items were plows and cultivators, wheat flour, canned fruits, baking powder, wearing apparel, stoves, ranges, hardware, and sulphuric acid. Manifests of steamers bound for British South Africa show heavy and increasing purchases of the following American goods: Mowers, reapers, passenger automobiles, motor cycles, wheelbarrows, push carts, hand trucks, clocks and parts of, corsets, knit goods, other wearing apparel, fertilizers, motors, hardware, windmills, metal working machinery, gasoline for automobiles, transformers, canned beef, condensed milk, toys, perfumery, cosmetics, toilet preparations, fancy soap, refrigerators, paraffin and paraffin wax, fly paper, chewing gum, and furniture.

That Australia is buying here a great variety of merchandise formerly obtained in the English or German markets is evidenced by the heavy cargo taken out of this port by the steamer Clan Farquhar. This merchandise, according to the Custom House statement, had a value of approximately three-quarters of a million dollars. The vessel carried twenty-three commercial and passenger automobiles, besides a liberal consignment of American toys for the Australian Christmas.

Some of the other items were bleached cloths, valued at $39,898; cloths dyed in the piece, $31,050; all other cloths, $40,942; knit goods, $17,974. In addition, there were large-sized exports of medicines, chinaware, extracts for tanning, wagons, athletic and sporting goods, dynamos, generators, dental goods, batteries, metal working machinery, wire fencing, other wire; men's, women's, and children's shoes, organs, player pianos, table cutlery, hardware, phonographs, wearing apparel, and leat, plug, and smoking tobacco. This separate cargo for New Zealand was similar to that carried to Australia. Although a British vessel, the Clan Farquhar's manifest contained watches, perfumery, and cosmetics for "German Oceania."

Outward manifests of vessels clearing for South American countries show that, despite the dyestuff famine in the United States, energetic agents of tanneries and textile establishments on the Continent have succeeded in picking up small lots of chemicals and coal tar and natural dyestuffs. The fact that some of the lots have no greater value than $100 did not deter their shipment. Other conspicuous items making up the manifests to this part of the world include cotton cloths, hosiery, hardware, typewriters, wearing apparel, phonographs and records, illuminating oil, pumping and other machinery, table cutlery, agricultural implements, sewing machines, tools, and medicines. Much the same lines appear on the manifests for Cuba and the British, French, and Dutch West Indies.

Among the items manifested by the steamer Florizel on her last voyage to Newfoundland and Labrador were bathtubs, blacking, bread and biscuits, cloths of different kinds, hosiery, knit goods, mining machinery, green apples, confectionery, peanuts, telephones, jewelry, stoves, ranges, sole leather, and hardware.

The Danish steamer Oscar II., sailing for Scandinavian ports, also carried American goods for Iceland and the Faroe Islands. This part of the cargo comprised such things as canned fish, preparations of breadstuffs, cocoa, chocolate, confectionery, salmon, prunes, raisins, green and ripe fruit, cigarettes, spices, and lard. Notwithstanding the Balkan crisis, steamers for Greece are carrying player pianos in fair quantities. The same vessels are handling wearing apparel and leather goods destined for Egypt. Merchandise going to Switzerland direct from New York by steamer Hathar covered emery wheels, acids, lamps, and machinery for metalworking, milling, pumping, and woodworking.

Exports to India from this port at the present time include staves and heads, nails, groceries, hardware, shoes, drugs, automobiles and parts, steel manufactures, lathes, lamp goods, and firearms. Singapore shipments include cotton duck, domestics, cutlery, cereals, belting, clocks, canned goods, electrical apparatus, cigarettes, telephones, and lubricants. Bangkok consignments from here comprise nails, hardware, automobiles, electrical goods, shoe tacks, and iron manufactures of various kinds.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

All More Active, with a Little Lower Prices in Japan.

The Yokohama raw silk market, which had advanced too rapidly during the past ten days, has become quieter, and reelers are offering again at a little lower prices. The available stock is estimated at 8,000 bales.

Canton forecasts a decided shortage in the sixth and seventh crops, and, consequently, reelers are asking the highest prices. Moreover, they are getting them, as it is reported that there are more buyers than sellers on that market. Coarse sizes are practically unobtainable.

Shanghai reports an increased activity on tsatlees and tussahs, while there is a steady demand for steam filatures. Prices of tussahs have gone up considerably during the past few days, according to A. F. Villa Bros. of this city.

The Italian market is holding very firm at recent prices. Reelers are offering sparingly in anticipation of a further increase in prices, as the market has become active again.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Decisions Under the Metal, Paper, and Textile Schedules.

While the Board of General Appraisers has given a liberal interpretation to the provision in the present tariff for agricultural implements, it drew the line yesterday against including rice mills in the above named category. R. Ballantine of San Francisco, the importer of the mills, objected to the Collector's action in returning the articles for duty at the rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem as manufactures of metal not specially provided for. An appeal was made to the customs tribunal to reverse the Collector, but Judge Sischer said the importer's testimony was wholly insufficient to prove the claim made in the protest.

T. J. Foley, Philadelphia, imported tea strainers, wash basins, and other articles composed of enameled iron. The Collector took duty at 25 per cent. ad valorem under the provision for table, kitchen, or other utensils of hollow ware composed of iron or other metal, whereas the importer's contention was for a rate of 20 per cent ad. valorem as plain manufactures of metal. The board ruled that the tea strainers were properly assessed as named, and affirmed the Collector as to the remaining articles.

Marshall Field & Co. were upheld in a contention as to gold-plated metal tops or clasps for silk, leather or beaded hand bags. The importers objected to the Collector's rate of 60 per cent. ad valorem as metal articles valued at above 20 cents per dozen pieces, carried on or about the person. The claims were for duty at either 50 per cent. ad valorem as gold-plated articles, or at 20 per cent. as plain metal manufactures. It was shown at the trial that the articles as imported were useless since they had to be attached to bags before becoming of practical use. The Collector justified his high assessment on the ground, among other things, that the articles were "parts of mesh bags." The testimony was to the effect that these articles cannot be used for mesh bags since the holes were drilled for use with leather, silk, &c., rather than mesh. Judge Sullivan reversed the Collector, and held that the merchandise was properly taxable at 50 per cent. as gold-plated.

Birn Brothers imported so-called paper wafers under the Act of 1909, which the Collector returned for duty at 30 cents per pound as "labels." The paper was lithographically printed, did not exceed 10 square inches cutting size in dimensions and was embossed. The Board sustained the claim for entry at 20 cents per pound as lithographic prints not exceeding 5-1000 of an inch in dimensions.

C. H. Langley and Davies, Turner & Co., Boston, obtained a favorable ruling on crude white resin. It was valued at 10 per cent. ad valorem under the provision for a drug advanced in value, while the claim was for duty exemption as a crude drug. The test case in controversy, which came from the Malay Peninsula, was ordered admitted free.

Nathan Weiner & Co. failed to upset the Collector's assessment of 45 per cent. duty on pile fabrics imported as in chief value of the hair of the Angora goat. The claim was for entry at 35 per cent. as cloth composed wholly or in chief value of wool.

AT FALL RIVER MILLS.

Quieter, Because Mill Men Unwilling to Contract Far Ahead.

FALL RIVER, Oct. 16.—Conditions in the cotton cloth market were rather quiet during the week. The volume of business could have been materially increased had manufacturers been willing to trade in contracts through the early months of next year. Business is of such a nature that few manufacturers of medium count goods will entertain new business for much more than two months ahead. As regards fine goods manufactures, the situation is very much different. It is reported that some business was done in future deliveries, but the volume is believed not to be large.

During the closing days of the week the attention of buyers lessened and they, with manufacturers, paid considerable attention to the condition of the cotton market, which is very firm. Prices remain the same this week as they were the week previous. Wide and medium wide styles sold in fair quantity, while narrow cloths declined in demand, although this end of the market may be regarded as being firm. Sateens picked up to some extent during the week, and prices which have been named by the concerns making this construction are profitable. It is stated that more than a majority of the mills are provided with cotton, and this condition is most favorable for the mills.

The total sales for the week are estimated at 140,000 pieces, of which about 50,000 pieces are spots. Contracts accepted by the mills will mature in most cases during the next two months. The week closed with the demand for goods somewhat lighter than it has been for the past three weeks, but with prices very firm and very few weak spots in the market.

Neckwear for Spring.

Of the orders taken in men's neckwear for Spring, De Joinville scarfs are showing up very well, although open-end goods cut on the bias are also favored. Cotton goods in the better grades have sold in fair quantities, and wash crepes to match silk suitings have been well taken up by the buyers. Figures and cross stripes seem to rule as far as designs are concerned. The brisk tone to immediate business and good prospects for the holidays have induced the retailers to place orders against future needs, especially as there is every indication that prices will be higher if the purchasing is put off.

Export Duties in Peru.

According to a cablegram received recently by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce from Consul General W. W. Handley, Callao, a law has been enacted in Peru levying an export duty on sugar, wool, cotton, and hides from that country, as was previously proposed. A law providing for similar treatement of minerals has been under consideration.

CONDITIONS GOOD IN RETAIL TRADE

Stores' Executives Believe Indications Point to an Unexampled Prosperity.

Conditions in the local retail trade are much better than they were a year ago, and the opinions of store executives agree that continued improvement may be expected, some say to a point of prosperity beyond precedent. As a rule comparison was not invited with the state of trade a year back. At that time finance, industry, and trade were shaken by the sudden outbreak of war. Economy was the order of the day. Since August of last year business has passed through several phases. One of these has been the optimism that seemed mere talk. Basic conditions appeared sound enough, but there were few surface indications of prosperity. In short, business men knew that business ought to be good, but as a matter of fact it wasn't. The common explanation for this rather extraordinary situation was that people were afraid the war might end as suddenly as it began, and with disastrous results. This phase has passed, there is more assurance in the future, regardless of what may happen in Europe, and the conservative spirit is dying.

Other reasons may be ventured for the general improvement that has taken place in the retail field, but the one that carries the most weight with merchants is that public confidence has been restored. The urgent demand in many lines is testimony of this.

"Price appeal," said one merchandise man, "is no longer the feature it was. Quality and up to the minute styles have the floor. This is shown in many lines. Take millinery for instance. There is a wide variety of shapes offered this season, and yet the women are laying very little stress on prices. They want something that looks new, and they are willing to pay fancy prices for it. In the apparel lines the same holds true. The demand has increased for high grade merchandise."

A store executive, commenting on the tendency toward higher-priced merchandise, had a reason to offer for the change. Said he:

"There has been entirely too much price specialization. A few years ago it was impossible to get the apparent values that may be picked up today. I say 'apparent' with reason. The manufacturers have concentrated on substitution. They have become imbued with the idea that the constantly changing styles make it unnecessary to put quality into their product. If they can use a cheaper fabric, a cheaper material of one kind or another, they are satisfied. This runs all the way from furniture to so-called silk shirtwaists. The buying public was deceived at the start, but is gradually waking up to the true state of affairs. Consequently I expect price to become less and less of a factor, and quality to assume its old-time leadership."

"Hand-to-mouth" buying has had its effect on sales volumes, according to another merchant.

"The conservative buying of retailers," he said, "inspired a similar conservatism in their customers. When a customer went into a store and found that there was very little offered in the way of selection, the notion carried away was that it might be well to retrench, and the policy of retrenchment became general. The store was afraid to buy, and the customer soon followed the example of the store. Some retailers carried so insufficient a stock that many customers that would have made purchases could not get what they wanted even in undesirable patterns, styles or designs. The merchandise men were not wholly to blame for this situation. The buyers had developed an alarming tendency to order what was new before they had disposed of what they had in stock. It was necessary to exercise a restraining influence. This, however, was done to an extent beyond what was required. Not only were new purchases curtailed, but the buyers were left with nothing to freshen up the merchandise that was found hard to move out. No success could come of such a policy, and the result was that for a time the volume of sales was so reduced that more liberal measures became imperative. Now that there has been a general 'looking up,' the stores have immediately obtained the desired results. Retail buying has been stimulated because more freedom has been permitted the buyer, the new styles are pushed with more gest and, last but by far not least, quality is receiving greater emphasis. We are going back to true merchandising. Not 'what will this thing or that cost?' but 'is it good value, is it worth the price?'"

Some of the prominent retailers interviewed on the subject of conditions in the trade mentioned the large amount of business placed in this country by people who formerly bought their requirements abroad. Paris, certainly, is not getting its ordinary quota of trade from those women who were good patrons of the renowned dressmakers. The Fifth Avenue specialty shops, as well as the higher class department stores, are filling their needs instead. One man mentioned the fashion show which the Parisian houses will put on in this city next month as a sign of how hard the fashion creators of the French capital have been hit. The fashion shows staged by American firms were cited by another merchant as one of the reasons why the demand in women's wear has shown such a marked improvement of late. But, from the multitude of reasons put forward for the healthy state of retail trade, the one that holds foremost place is that which stated briefly and with an air of finality: "Public confidence has been restored."

The Skirtmakers Organize.

The organization dinner of the National Association of Separate Skirt Manufacturers will be given at the Hotel McAlpin on Thursday evening. Among the speakers will be Jesse I. Straus of R. H. Macy & Co., John R. Simpson, Vice President of William Filene's Sons Company, B. J. Doyle of the Keystone Publishing Company, and Mr. Hatry of Bamberger's, Newark. The purpose of the association is to promote the interests of separate skirt manufacturers generally.

HOLIDAY GOODS IN FAVOR.

Trade in Them More Promising at Present Than Since 1912.

Not since the Fall of 1912 has there been such a promising outlook for the sale of that mass of items known to the trade as holiday goods. They are in general items of luxury rather than of necessity, and consequently business in them suffers most in those lean years such as the two last seasons. Already the preliminary demand for them indicates an unusually heavy volume of business all over the country. Especially is this true in all lines of fancy household utensils, such as casseroles, chafing dishes, coffee percolators, carvers, cut glass, and the like.

They are evidences that the serving of late suppers and midnight repasts or afternoon teas is no longer confined to the large centres nor is the earmark of certain forms of metropolitan society life. Coincident with this, there goes along a steadily growing demand for electric cooking utensils of all descriptions, especially those that enable the householder to cook and serve breakfast at the table without any of the bothers of the kitchen.

In silverware, both plated and sterling, there is a distinct preference for designs that are both neat and quiet. Those of Colonial type are especially in vogue. A striking instance of the spread of better times and the general optimism as to the future is found in the demand for toys, children's bicycles, and boys' wagons, all of which are articles that first of all feel the impulse of a good season and the blighting effect of hard times. Mechanical toys of much ingenuity are in such favor that they are being handled by retail hardware dealers who have usually in the past left this business to the toy stores and the department stores.

DRY GOODS MEN TO MEET.

Wholesalers and Jobbers to Hold Sessions in This City.

Secretary-Treasurer Thomas A. Fernley announced yesterday the dates for the January meetings in this city of the National Wholesale Dry Goods Association, and the allied jobbing organizations. Following the custom of several years' standing the sessions will probably be held at the Waldorf-Astoria.

The first of the gatherings will be that of the Jobbers' Association of Knit Goods Buyers, which will convene Jan. 10. Meetings will be held morning and afternoon, while in the evening there will be a vaudeville smoker and buffet luncheon. Just a week later the Jobbers' Association of Notion Buyers is scheduled for a single afternoon session. The following day, Jan. 18, the dress fabric buyers will hold two sessions, with a banquet in the evening.

The Dry Goods Association itself has arranged for a two-days' convention beginning Jan. 20 and continuing over the following day. On Jan. 20 two sessions are scheduled, with a smoker for the evening. The second day's session will end early enough to permit attending members to catch afternoon trains for home. The various meetings will be open to those interested.

Hemp Now Grown in Germany.

Writing on the successful growing of hemp in Germany, Consul T. J. Albert, Brunswick, says in part: "It is said that the results of this year's harvest will assure the future growing of hemp in Germany. Hemp stood the dryness of the past Summer better than most other crops. The production of a large number of hemp fields was splendid, and moorland was especially productive. The planters are so satisfied with the result of their labors that next year they intend considerably to increase the area planted. If the recently appointed committee of the League of German Hemp Industrials succeeds in obtaining the necessary seed, the area under hemp will be increased from about 900 acres to over 8,000 acres next year."

$2,000,000 GAIN IN GOLD RESERVES

Reserve Board's Gold Fund Now Totals $423,000,000—$286,000,000 of This Is in Banks.

DECREASE IN ACCEPTANCES

Loss of $1,100,000 in Commercial Paper Held Also Reported—More U. S. Bonds Bought.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The Federal Reserve Board's weekly bank statement indicates a gain of about $2,000,000 in the banks' gold reserves and a gain of $400,000 in their total reserves. These figures are exclusive of $5,600,000 of gold transferred to the Federal Reserve agents for the purpose of reducing the bank's liabilities on outstanding notes. The total gold holdings of the Federal Reserve system stand now at $423,000,000, as against $350,200,000 a month ago and $338,800,000 three months ago. Of the total gold held at present by the system $286,800,000 is in the vaults of the banks and $136,200,000 in the vaults of the Federal Reserve agents.

Commercial paper on hand shows a decrease of about $1,100,000, largely as the result of liquidation of paper held by the three southern banks. Bankers' acceptances on hand decreased about $245,000. New York and Boston reporting slightly smaller holdings than a week ago. The average maturity of the paper in the hands of the banks has shortened, as the amounts of fresh discounts have fallen short of the amounts of paper liquidated. Thus the proportion of paper maturing within ten days has risen from 10.9 per cent. on Sept. 17 to 15.2 per cent. while the proportion of all paper maturing within thirty days has risen from 40.7 to 44.6 per cent.

Additional purchases of $897,000 of 2 and 3 per cent. United States bonds are reported by the Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, and St. Louis banks. The aggregate amount of municipal warrants in the hands of the banks decreased about $500,000. San Francisco, Boston, and New York reporting smaller figures than the week before.

The ratio of earning assets to capital shows a rise to 148 per cent. from 141 per cent. a month before and 111 per cent. three months before. Net deposits of member banks increased about $2,000,000 during the week and $32,000,000 during the past three months, New York showing a gain of about $3,500,000 for the week and of $24,800,000 for the past quarter.

Federal Reserve agents report a total of $153,800,000 of outstanding notes on $5,200,000 more issues the week and before. Against the above total they hold $136,200,000 of gold and $17,800,000 of paper. The banks show over $18,000,000 of reserve notes on hand, $135,800,000 of notes in circulation and an aggregate net liability thereon of $136,200,000.

England Getting Less Rags.

According to a commerce report, the British Board of Trade returns show that for the first eight months of this year the imports of woolen rags, not pulled, totaled 15,988 tons, against 26,969 tons in the same period in 1914, or a decrease of about 1,370 tons a month. This decrease is accounted for by the cessation of imports from Germany, which amounted to 7,084 tons in 1914; Belgium, which amounted to 1,700 tons in 1914, and unclassified countries, 3,500 tons. For the period specified, imports from the United States amounted to 5,339 tons, against 4,802 tons in the same period a year ago.

DATA AS TO THE CUP THAT CHEERS

This Being Coffee Week, Roasters Give Facts and Opinions to Aid Business.

That coffee has fairly earned its place in this country as the national beverage is shown by per capita consumption figures covering more than sixty years, which are contained in a booklet issued by the National Coffee Roasters' Association, of which Ross W. Weir of this city is President. The booklet was issued by the association in conjunction with the celebrating of National Coffee Week, which begins tomorrow.

The figures show that in the twenty-year period from 1854 to 1873 the average per capita consumption of coffee in this country was 5.78 pounds. In the period ranging from 1874 to 1893 the consumption of coffee grew to 8.11 pounds for each individual, while from 1894 to 1913, the last period given, it had advanced to 10.25 pounds.

The booklet makes a vigorous attack on the propaganda of the makers of coffee substitutes, quoting a number of authorities to show that the effect of coffee on the human system is far from what makers of competing beverages would have the public believe. For instance, it quotes The London Lancet as saying that "its effect upon the vital centres after a meal makes it useful as an aid to digestion." Carl V. Voit, an authority on physiological chemistry, is shown to have written that "the effect of coffee is that we are bothered less by unpleasant experiences and become more able to conquer difficulties; therefore, upon the feasting rich, it makes intestinal work after a meal less evident and drives away the deadly ennui; for the student it is a means to keep wide awake and fresh; for the worker it makes the day's fatigue more bearable."

The booklet goes on to say that coffee is more germ proof than water or milk. It has a strengthening influence upon mind and muscle, without reaction, as indicated by exhaustive experiments by Professor Atwatersworth of Columbia University, and from tests with students by the Hahnemann Hospital of Philadelphia, proving coffee, as Dr. Wildman, Professor of Physiology, states, "a valuable drink," "lightening fatigue," and "sustaining strength." It continues:

"The pleased and satisfied sense of taste which coffee gives has a recognized physiological influence. Dr. Woods Hutchinson honors coffee as a true helper in nourishment, starting the appetite juices of food assimilation by its delight to the palate, which coffee charms more than any other food or drink known. The 'good cheer' of coffee has yet to be analyzed by the psychologist, but its kindly power upon the mood, and even the character, is known by every man or woman who loves coffee—and who ever heard of any one not having the taste for coffee, a taste about as universal as thirst itself?

"Coffee, as well as milk, cream, and many other products, does not have an equal effect upon all. Coffee drinking, like other pleasures must be moderated to individual susceptibility.

"A medical authority observes that 'after generations of almost universal coffee drinking our own times see men of giant intellect and athletes equal to any in history and our soldiers equaling themselves manfully in fatiging campaigns.' The Surgeon General of the United States Army has very lately written that the drinking of coffee is general in the army, and its moderate use beneficial among troops.

"This is the verdict of students of coffee confirming human experience. The average man knows that coffee 'warms him up' and makes him 'feel good.' The scientist shows that the 'warming up' is caused by the increased nutrition of improved digestion, and 'strengthened muscular and mental power' is the scientific term for 'feeling good.'"

Concerning coffee and the proper way of brewing it the booklet says that the roasted berry is constructed of fibrous tissues formed into tiny cells that are visible only under the microscope and which are the "packages" wherein are stored the whole value of coffee, the aromatic oils. Like cutting open an orange, the grinding of coffee is the opening of surrounding tissue and pulp, and the finer the cut, the more easily are the "juices" released.

The fibrous tissue itself is waste material, yielding, by boiling or too long percolations, a coffee-colored liquid which is fibrous and twangy in taste, has no aromatic character, and contains undesirable elements.

The true basis and flavor of roasted coffee is ground out, not boiled out. The finer coffee is ground, the more thoroughly are the cells opened, the surfaces multiplied, and the aromatic oils made ready for separation from their husks. Therefore, it follows that coarse ground coffee is unopened coffee—coffee thrown away.

The finer the grind, the better and greater the yield. With pulverized coffee (fine as corn meal) the fully released aromatic oils are instantaneously soluble with boiling water.

In ground coffee the oils are standing in "open packages," escaping into the air and absorbing moisture, &c., necessitating quick use or confinement in air-proof and moisture-proof protection.

"From scientific researches by the National Coffee Roasters' Association," the booklet goes on, "including the first chemical analysis on record of brewed coffee, produced by various brewing methods, the fundamental principles of coffee making have been clearly established. These principles are simple and, when once understood, equip any person to judge intelligently the merits and defects of the various coffee-making devices on the market. They constitute the law of coffee brewing, and may be stated as follows:

"'Correct brewing is not 'cooking.' It is a process of extraction of the already cooked soluble oils from the surrounding fibrous tissue, which has no drinkable value. Boiling or stewing cooks in the fibre, which should be wholly discarded as dregs, and damages the flavor and purity of the liquor. Boiling coffee and water together is ruin and waste.

"The aromatic oils, constituting the whole true flavor, are extracted instantly by boiling water, when the cells are thoroughly opened by fine grinding. The undesirable elements, being less quickly soluble, are left in the grounds in a quick contact of water and coffee. The coarser the grind the less accessible are the oils to the water, thus the inability to get out the strength from coffee not finely enough ground.

"Too long contact of water and coffee causes twang and bitterness, and the finer the grind the less the contact should be. The infusion, when brewed, is injured by being boiled or overheated. It is also damaged by being chilled, which breaks the fusion of oils and water. It should be served immediately, or kept hot, but in double boiler.

"Tests show that water under the boiling point, 212 degrees, is inefficient for coffee brewing, and does not extract the aromatic oils. Used under this temperature, it is a sure cause of weak and insipid flavor. The effort to make up this deficiency by longer contact of coffee and water, or repeated pouring through, results in no extraction of the oils, but draws out undesirable elements, such as coffee tannin, which is soluble in water at any temperature, and is governed by the time of contact.

"Coffee tannin, which is not the commercial tannic acid, is eliminated to practically nothing in the quick brewing drip or filtration methods, when flow is quick and undelayed. Filter bags should be kept in cold water when not in use. Drying causes decomposition."

Dr. Norton to Continue Work.

The chemical and dyestuff investigation being conducted by Dr. Thomas H. Norton, with headquarters in the Custom House, will, it is expected, extend well into November. When the inquiry started, the first week in September, it was announced that it would cover about a fortnight, but the task proved more formidable than had been anticipated. Not only have hundreds of factors in the color, textile, tanning, fertilizer, and chemical industries called personally at the headquarters, but thousands of letters have been received from all sections of the country, seeking information of one kind or other, besides suggestions from a great number of persons with ideas of how to neutralize the dyestuff and potash productions overnight. Notwithstanding the attempts being made in certain quarters to discredit several newly discovered processes for turning out dyestuffs, the investigating officials believe some of them will turn out to be practicable. This also applies to the plans for extracting potash from Pacific Coast kelp and from feldspar.

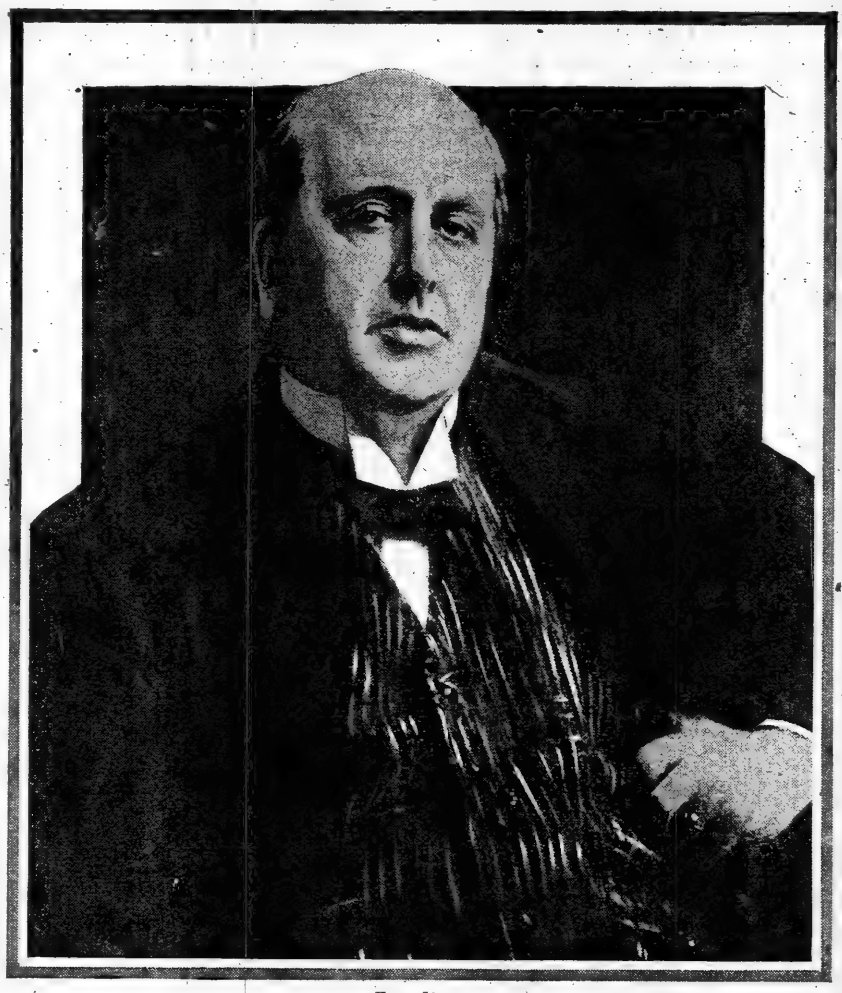
Henry James Writes of Refugees in England

Noted Novelist Is Moved by the Interesting and Inspiring Work at Chelsea in Aid of the Belgians Driven from Their Native Country by the War

By Henry James

The following essay, although dealing with but one important phase of the great body of relief work, comes so to the core of national traits in their relation to the psychology of pity, that it ranks among the most important contributions to the pitiful literature of the war.



Henry James. From a Portrait by John S. Sargent.

THIS is not a report on our so interesting and inspiring Chelsea work since November last, in aid of the Belgians driven hither from their country by a violence of unprovoked invasion and ravage more appalling than has ever before overtaken a peaceful and industrious people; it is the simple statement of a neighbor and an observer deeply affected by the most tragic exhibition of national and civil prosperity and felicity suddenly subjected to bewildering outrage than it would have been possible to conceive. The case, as the generous American communities have shown they well understand, has had no analogue in the experience of our modern generations, no matter how far back we go; it has been recognized, in surpassing practical ways, as virtually the greatest public horror of our age, or of all the preceding, and one gratefully feels, in presence of so much done in direct mitigation of it, that its appeal to the pity and the indignation of the civilized world anticipated and transcended from the first all superfluity of argument. We live into, that is we learn to cultivate, possibilities of sympathy and reaches of beneficence very much as the stricken and the suffering themselves live into their dreadful history and explore and reveal its extent; and this admirable truth it is that unceasingly pleads with the intelligent, the fortunate, and the exempt not to consent in advance to any dull limitation of the helpful idea. The American people have surely a genius, of the most eminent kind, for withholding any such consent and despising all such limits; and there is doubtless no remarked connection in which they have so shown the sympathetic imagination in free and fearless activity, that is, in high originality, as under the suggestion of the tragedy of Belgium.

The happy fact in this order is that the genius commits itself, always does so, by the mere act of self-betrayal; so that just to assume its infinite exercise is but to see how it must live above all on happy terms with itself. That is the impulse and the need which operate most fully, to our recognition, in any form of the American overflow of the excited social instinct; which circumstance, as I make these remarks, seems to place under my feet a great firmness of confidence. That confidence rests on this clear suggestibility, to the American apprehension of any and every aspect of the particular moving truth; when these aspects are really presented, the response becomes but a matter of calculable spiritual health. Very wonderful, I think, that with a real presentation, as I call it, inevitably affected by the obstructive element of distance, of so considerable a social and personal disconnection, of the very violence done, for that matter, to credibility as well, the sense of relatedness to the awful story should so have emerged and so lucidly insisted on its rights. To make that reflection indeed might well be to feel even here on our most congested ground no great apparatus of demonstration or evocation called for; in spite of which, however, I remind myself that as Reports and Tables are of the essence of our anxious duty, so they are rather more than less efficient when not altogether denuded of the atmosphere and the human motive that have conduced to their birth.

I have small warrant perhaps to say that atmospheres are communicable, but I can testify at least that they are breathable on the spot, to whatever effect of depression or of cheer, and I should go far, I feel, were I to attempt to register the full bittersweet taste, by our Chelsea waterside, all these months, of the refugee element in our vital medium. (The sweet, as I strain a point perhaps to call it, inheres, to whatever distinguishability, in our hope of having really done something, verily done much: the bitter ineradicably seasons the consciousness, hopes and demonstrations and fond presumptions and all.) I need go no further, none the less, than the make-shift provisional gates of Crosby Hall, marvelous monument transplanted a few years since from the Bishopgate quarter of the city to a part of the ancient suburban site of the garden of Sir Thomas More, and now serving with extraordinary beneficence as the most splendid of shelters for the homeless. This great private structure, though of the grandest civic character, dating from the fifteenth century and one of the noblest relics of the past that London could show, was held a few years back so to cumber the precious acre or more on which it stood that it was taken to pieces in the candid commercial interest and in order that the site it had so long sanctified should be converted to such uses as would stuff out still further the ideal number of private pockets. Dismay and disgust were unable to save it: the most that could be done was to gather in with tenderness of care its innumerable constituent parts and convey them into safer conditions, where a sad defeated piety has been able to re-edify them into some semblance of the original majesty.

Strange withal some of the turns of the whirligig of time; the priceless structure come down to the sound of lamentation, not to say of execration, and of the gnashing of teeth, and went up again before cold and disbelieving, quite despairing eyes; in spite of which history appears to have decided once more to cherish it and give a new consecration. It is in truth still magnificent; it lives again for our gratitude in its noblest particulars and the almost incomparable roof has arched all this Winter and Spring over a scene probably more interesting and certainly more pathetic than any that have ever drawn down its ancient far-off blessing.

The place has formed then the headquarters of the Chelsea circle of hospitality to the exiled, the broken and the bewildered, and if I may speak of having taken home the lesson of their state and the sense of their story it is by meeting them in the finest club conditions conceivable that I have been able to do so. Hither, month after month and day after day the unfortunates have flocked, each afternoon, and here the comparatively exempt, almost ashamed of their exemption in presence of so much woe, have made them welcome to every form of succor and reassurance. Certain afternoons, each week, have worn the character of the huge comprehensive tea party, a fresh well-wisher discharging the social and financial cost of the fresh occasion—which has always festally profited, in addition, by the extraordinary command of musical accomplishment, the high standard of execution, that is the mark of the Belgian people. This exhibition of our splendid local resource has rested, of course, on a multitude of other resources, still local, but of a more intimate hospitality, little by little worked out and applied, and into the detail of which I may not here pretend to go beyond noting that they have been accountable for the large house and fed and clothed and generally protected and administered numbers, all provided for in Chelsea and its outer fringe, on which our scheme of sociability at Crosby Hall itself has up to now been able to draw. To have seen this scheme so long in operation has been to find it suggest many reflections, all of the most poignant and moving order; the foremost of which has, perhaps, had for its subject that never before can the wanton hand of history have descended upon a group of communities less expectant of public violence from without or less prepared for it and attuned to it.

The bewildered and amazed passivity of the Flemish civil population, the state as of people surprised by sudden ruffians, murderers, and thieves in the dead of night and hurled out, terrified and half clad, snatching at the few scant household goods nearest at hand, into a darkness mitigated but by flaring incendiary torches, this has been the experience stamped on our scores and scores of thousands, whose testimony to suffered dismay and despoilment, silence alone, the silence of vain uncontributive wonderment, has for the most part been able to express. Never was such a revelation of a deeply domestic, a rootedly domiciled and instinctively and separately clustered people, a mass of communities for which the sight of the home violated, the objects helping to form it profaned and the cohesive family, the Belgian ideal of the constituted life, dismembered, disemboweled and shattered, had so supremely to represent the crack of doom and the end of everything. There have been days and days when under this particular impression the more aspect and manner of our serried recipients of relief, something vague and inarticulate as in persons who have given up everything but patience and are living, from hour to hour, but in the immediate and the unexplained, has put on such a pathos as to make the heart sick. One has had just to translate any seated row of figures, thankful for warmth and light and covering, for sustenance and human words and human looks, into terms that would exemplify some like exiled and huddled and charity-fed predicament for our superior selves, to feel our exposure to such a fate, our submission to it, our holding in the least together under it, darkly unthinkable.

Dim imaginations would at such moments interpose, a confused theory that even at the worst our adventurous habits, our imperial traditions, our general defiance of the superstition of domesticity would dash from our lips the cup of bitterness; from these it was at all events impossible not to come back to the consciousness that almost every creature there collected was indebted to our good offices for the means to come at all. I thought of our parents and children, our brothers and sisters, aligned in borrowed garments and settled to an as yet undetermined future of eleemosynary tea and buns, and I ask myself, doubtless to little purpose, either what grace of resignation or what clamor of protest we should, beneath the same star, be noted as substituting for the inveterate Belgian decency.

I can only profess at once that the sense of this last, round about one, was at certain hours, when the music and the chant of consolation rose in the stillness from our improvised stage at the end of the great hall, a thing to cloud with tears any pair of eyes lifted to our sublime saved roof in thanks for its vast comprehension. Questions of exhibited type, questions as to a range of form and tradition, a measure of sensibility and activity, not our own, dwindled and died before the gross fact of our having here an example of such a world tragedy as we supposed Europe had outlived, and that nothing at all therefore mattered but that we should bravely and handsomely hold up our quite heavy enough end of it.

It is because we have responded in this degree to the call unprecedented that we are, in common with a vast number of organizations scattered through these islands, qualified to claim that no small part of the inspiration to our enormous act of welcome resides in the moral interest it yields. One can indeed be certain of such a source of profit but in the degree in which one has found one's self personally drawing upon it; yet it is obvious that we are not treated every day to the disclosure of a national character, a national temperament and type, contained for the time to their plainest and stoutest features and set, on a prodigious scale, in all the relief that the strongest alien air and alien conditions can give them. Great salience, in such a case, do all collective idiosyncrasies acquire—upon the fullest enumeration of which, however, as the Belgian instance, and the British atmosphere combine to represent them, I may not now embark, prepossessed wholly as I am with the more generally significant social stamp and human aspect so revealed, and with the quality derived from these things by the multiplied examples that help us to take them in. This feeling that our visitors illustrate above all the close and comfortable household life, with every implication of a seated and saturated practice of it, practice of the intimate and private and personal, the securely sensual and genial arts that flow from it, has been by itself the key to a plenitude of observation and in particular to as much friendly searching insight as one could desire to enjoy.

The moving, the lacerating thing is the fashion after which such a reading of the native elements, once adopted, has been as a light flaring into every obscurest retreat, as well as upon any puzzling ambiguity, of the state of shock of the national character under the infamy of the outrage put upon it. That they of all people the most given over to local and patriarchal beatitude among the admirable and the cherished objects handed down to them by their so interesting history on every spot where its action has been thickest—that is on every inch, so to speak, of their teeming territory—should find themselves identified with the most shamelessly cynical public act of which the civilized world at this hour retains the memory, is a fact truly representing the exquisite in the horrible; so peculiarly addressed has been their fate to the desecration of ideals that had fairly become breath of their lungs and flesh of their flesh. Oh! The installed and ensconced, the immemorially edified and arranged, the thoroughly furnished and provided and nourished people!—not in the least besotted or relaxed in their security and density, like the self smothered society of the ancient world upon which the earlier Huns and Vandals poured down, but candidly complacent and admirably intelligent in their care for their living tradition, and only so off their guard as to have consciously set the example of this care to all such as had once smoked with them their wondrous pipe of peace. Almost any posture of stupefaction would have been conceivable in the shaken victims of this delusion; I can speak best, however, but of what I have already glanced at, that temperamental weight of their fall which has again and again, at sight of many of them gathered together, made the considering heart as heavy for them as if it too had for the time been worsted.

However, it would take me far to tell of half the penetrating admonitions, whether of the dazed or of the roused appearance, that have for so long almost in like degree made our attention ache; I think of particular faces, in the whole connection, when I want most to remember—since to remember always, and never, never to forget, is a prescription shining before us like a possible light of dawn; faces saying such things in their silence, or in their speech of quite different matters, as to make the only thinkable comment or response some word or some gesture of reprieve to dumb or to dissimulated anguish. Blessed be the power that has given to civilized men the appreciation of the face—such an immeasurable sphere of exercise—for it has this monstrous trial of the peoples come to supply. Such histories, such a record of moral experience, of emotion convulsively suppressed, as one meets in some of them, and this even if on the whole one has been able to think of these special allies, all sustainingly, much rather as the sturdiest than as the most demonstrative of sufferers. I have in these rapid remarks to reduce my many impressions to the fewest, but must even thus spare one of them for commemoration of the admirable cast of working countenance we are rewarded by the sight of wherever we turn amid the quantity of helpful service and all the fruitful industries that we have been able to start and that keep themselves going.

These are the lights in the picture, and who indeed would wish that the lights themselves should be anything less than tragic? The strong young men (no young men are familiarly stronger,) mutilated, amputated, dismembered in penalty for their defense of their soil against the horde and now engaged at Crosby Hall in the making of handloom socks, to whom I pay an occasional visit much more for my own cheer, I apprehend, than for theirs, express so in their honest concentration under difficulties the actual and general value of their people that just to be in their presence is a blest renewal of faith. Excellent, exemplary, is this manly, homely, handy type, grave in its somewhat strained attention, but as once lighted to the briefest, sincerest humor of protest by any direct reference to the general cruelty of its misfortune. Anything but unsuggestive, the range of the "quiet" physiognomy when one feels the consciousness behind it not to have run thin. Thick and strong is the good Flemish sense of life and all its functions—which fact is responsible for no empty and really unmodeled "mug."

I am afraid at the same time that if the various ways of being bad are beyond our reckoning, the condition and the action of exemplary goodness tend rather to reduce to a certain rich unity of appearance those marked by them, however dissociated from each other such persons may have been by race and education. Otherwise what tribute shouldn't I be moved to pay to the gentleman of Flanders to whom the specially improvised craftsmen I have just mentioned owe their training and their inspiration?—through his having, in his proscribed and denuded state, mastered the craft in order to recruit them to it and, in fine, so far as my observation has been concerned, exhibit clear human virtue, courage and patience and the humility of sought fellowship in privation, with an unconscious beauty that I should be ashamed in this connection not to have noted publicly. I scarce know what such a "personality" as his suggests to me if not that we had all, on our good Chelsea ground, best take up and cherish as directly and intimately as possible every scrap of our community with our gentlemen of Flanders. I make such a point as this, at the same time, only to remember how, almost wherever I have tried sustainly to turn, my imagination and my intelligence have been quickened, and to recognize in particular, for that matter, that this couldn't possibly be more the case for them than in visiting a certain hostel in one of our comparatively contracted but amply decent local Squares—riverside Chelsea having, of course, its own urban identity in the multitudinous County of London; which, in itself as happy an example, doubtless, of the hostel smoothly working as one need cite, placed me in grateful relation with a lady, one of the victims of her country's convulsion and in charge of the establishment I allude to, whom simply to "meet," as we say, is to learn how singular a dignity, how clear a distinction, may shine in active fortitude and economic self-effacement under an all but crushing catastrophe.

"'Talk about' faces—!" I could but privately ejaculate as I gathered the senses of all that this one represented in the way of natural nobleness and sweetness, a whole past acquaintance with letters and art and taste, insisting on their present restrictedness to bare sister'y service.

The proud rigor of association with pressing service alone, with absolutely nothing else, the bare commodious house, so otherwise known to me of old and now, like most of our hostels if I am not mistaken, the most unconditioned of loans from its relinquishing owner; the lingering look of ancient peace in the precincts, an element I had already as I passed and repassed, at the afternoon hour, found somehow not at all dispelled by the presence in the central green garden itself of sundry maimed and hobbling and smiling convalescents from an extemporized small hospital close at hand, their battered khaki replaced by like uniformity of the loose light blue, and friendly talk with them through the rails of their inclosure as blessed to one participant at least as friendly talk with them always and everywhere is; such were the hovering elements of an impression in which the mind had yet mainly to yield to that haunting force on the part of our waiting proscripts which never consent to be long denied. The proof of which universally recognized power of their spell amid us is indeed that they have led me so far with a whole side of my plea for them still unspoken.

This, however, I hope on another occasion to come back to, and I am caught meanwhile by my memory of how the note of this conviction was struck for me, with extraordinary force, many months ago and in the first flush of recognition of what the fate that had overtaken our earliest tides of arrival and appeal really meant—meant so that all fuller acquaintance, since pursued, has but piled one congruous reality after another upon the horror. It was in September, in a tiny Sussex town which I had not quitted since the outbreak of the war, and here the advent of our first handful of fugitives before the warning of Louvain and Aerschott and Termonde and Dinant had just been announced. Our small hilltop city, covering the steep sides of the compact pedestal crowned by its great church, had reserved a refuge at its highest point, and we had waited all day, from occasional train to train, for the moment at which we should attest our hospitality. It came at last, but late in the evening, when a vague outside rumor called me to my doorstep, where the unforgettable impression at once assaulted me. Up the precipitous little street that led from the station, over the old grass-grown cobbles, where vehicles rarely pass, came the panting procession of the homeless and their comforting, their almost clinging entertainers, who seemed to hurry them on as in a sort of overflow of expression or fever of charity. It was swift and eager, in the Autumn darkness and under the flare of a single lamp—with no vociferation and but for a woman's voice scarce a sound save the shuffle of mounting feet and the thick-drawn breath of emotion.

The note I except, however, was that of a young mother carrying her small child and surrounded by those who bore her on and on, almost lifting her as they went together. The resonance through our immemorial old street of her sobbing and sobbing cry was the voice itself of history; it brought home to me more things than I could then quite take the measure of, and these just because it expressed for her not direct anguish, but the incredibility, as we should say, of honest assured protection. Months have elapsed, and from having been then one of a few hundred she is now one of scores and scores of thousands; yet her cry is still in my ears, whether to speak most of what she had lately or what she actually felt, and it plays to my own sense, as a great fitful tragic light over the dark exposure of her people.

Testing Uncle Sam's Big Guns at Sandy Hook

Big Proving Ground Active These Days Trying Out the Latest Weapons for Defense

Explosion of a Ground Mine at Sandy Hook.

FORTY-THREE earth tremors—at least that was the sensation created—were felt along the Jersey coast from the Highlands to Asbury Park a few days ago. Each was the aftermath of the discharge of a giant 12-inch gun at the United States Army proving grounds on Sandy Hook, and on each of these forty-three occasions, when a 1,000-pound projectile was hurled seaward to a distance of about twelve miles, a board of experts from the Ordnance Department of the regular army noted something that will be of value when in the near future the improvement of the defensive situation of the United States gets under way.

And every day something like what took place last week happens at Sandy Hook, the one piece of ground in this part of the world where even American citizens have to be vouched for before they are permitted to visit it.

The proving grounds at Sandy Hook, famous wherever the art of war is studied, is as interesting an establishment as there is to be found in all America. There about one dozen picked officers, every one of them an expert in matters pertaining to guns of all sizes, kinds and degrees, mortars, explosives, mines, and other ordnance things in general, are constantly on duty. Under them are about seventy enlisted men, specially trained in one or more branches of what is perhaps the most intricate and scientific branch of the United States Army, with the possible exception of the engineers.

A few days ago a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES was permitted to visit the proving grounds. He witnessed the firing of one of the shots in the great forty-three test now under way. He viewed an acre of projectiles ranging in size from the 2,400-pound monsters of the 16-inch type to the little death-dealing shrapnel shells of the 3-inch variety. He saw the great Manila turret, in which two 14-inch guns are mounted all ready for dissembling, and which within a few weeks will be started on its long journey to Manila, where it will become the most important unit in the defensive scheme, for the protection of our great Far Eastern port.

Likewise THE TIMES man saw the latest creation in 12-inch mortar ordnance. He saw a dainty-looking 3-inch gun destined to throw shrapnel, which experts believe is to prove a world wonder in efficiency. He saw the portable 4-inch guns that are going to Panama, and a newly mounted gun of the 3-inch type which it is hoped will go a long way toward simplifying the problem of defense from aerial attacks. He saw one of the new 7-inch howitzers destined for the use of the field artillery arm of the service. And, last of all, he looked down into a great concrete hole as big as the recent cave-in on Broadway, which is to form the emplacement of the giant 16-inch gun that is soon to arrive at Sandy Hook for a series of tests as important as any conducted in the army in years.

These were just a few of the things THE TIMES man saw. It is not permissible to go into great detail concerning what goes on at Sandy Hook, but in this instance THE TIMES can give to the public, in whose interests these brilliant men at the Hook are working, some of the details of what its representative saw during a day at the noisiest, busiest place on the Atlantic seaboard.

In the first place, it should be pointed out that ordnance officers of our army are among those who are convinced that the day of the giant gun, the high explosive, and the little shrapnel has come, and that it has come for a long stay. Big shells, charged with the most destructive of high explosives, such as, for instance, the great 42-centimeter projectiles used by the Germans and those used in howitzers and field pieces of lesser calibre, are absolute essentials in every modern and properly equipped army.

In the old days, before intrenching became a science and when men fought in the open and made war as nearly as it was possible to make it "a stand-up-and-take" affair, the shrapnel was supreme. But today all has changed, and when an army "digs in" the shrapnel is of no use until that army is "dug out," or, to express it more correctly, blown out with the big shells charged with high explosives. And the bigger the shell and the more powerful the explosive charge the better. Blow up the trench, and the survivors, if they wish to continue to survive, have got to get out. Then comes the time for shrapnel.

"Blow him out with a high explosive charged shell, and when he comes out welcome him with a rain of shrapnel," is the way one of the ordnance experts of the French Army recently expressed the situation created by the new trench warfare.

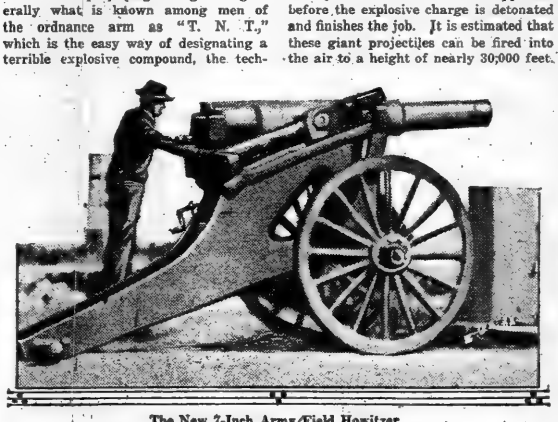
At Sandy Hook this problem of big shell and high explosive is constantly a matter of study and experimentation. Near the proving battery—and of this battery something will be said later on—there stands on end a great piece of metal five and one-half feet from base to apex. It weighs 2,400 pounds and carries an explosive charge that is about 12 per cent. of the total weight.

The explosive—and this is independent of the propelling charge—is generally what is known among men of the ordnance arm as "T. N. T.," which is the easy way of designating a terrible explosive compound, the technical name of which is Trinitrotoluol. This new giant shell, which is about the same size or perhaps a trifle larger than the great projectiles hurled from the German 42-centimeter howitzers, has been developed to practical perfection by the ordnance officers at Sandy Hook.

The 16-inch gun from which this projectile is fired is also the work of the ordnance experts of our army. There is no greater gun at present in the world, although there is reason to believe that a greater is coming, and will probably originate on this side of the water. It may be of a calibre of anywhere from 18 to 24 inches. But that is another story, and time alone can tell it.

In about three weeks the second 16-inch gun to be tried out at the proving grounds on Sandy Hook is due to arrive. As already stated, the great concrete foundation is ready to receive the 285,000-pound monster. These new guns can hurl a 2,400-pound projectile more than twenty miles, and to do it there is needed a propelling charge of nearly 650 pounds of the finest possible grade of smokeless powder.

One of these projectiles will sink any ship afloat and can penetrate more than twenty inches of the finest Krupp steel before the explosive charge is detonated and finishes the job. It is estimated that these giant projectiles can be fired into the air to a height of nearly 30,000 feet.



The New 7-Inch Army Field Howitzer.

They are or will be mounted on specially constructed carriages, and the angle of elevation possible is certainly 60 degrees, and may be even higher when certain experiments now being carried out are completed.

Each of these new defenders, which, it is hoped, will soon be authorized for all the main fortifications of the country and its foreign possessions, cost about $150,000 to build. Each gun is fifty feet long. The muzzle velocity is 2,300 feet per second. Everybody along the Jersey coast in a radius of about thirty miles of Sandy Hook will be notified when the new 16-inch gun that is coming is being tested. And it won't be necessary to write a letter to impart this information, either.

For the Manila fortifications the ordnance officers at the proving grounds have just concluded an exhaustive series of tests of the new revolving turret that is to form one of the main units in the Manila Bay scheme of defense. It is the first turret of the kind built in this country, and the tests indicate that it will prove one of the most efficient ideas involving coast defense devised in this or any other country in years.

This great turret, with its two giant 14-inch guns sticking out from its armored ports, is now at the proving grounds and may be seen with glasses from the deck of any ship that passes in or out of the Ambrose Channel. Each of the guns in the turret, which is of the revolving type and is electrically operated, weighs about sixty-two tons, and each has a maximum range of about twenty-one miles. The guns are 45.6 feet long. They fire a projectile weighing 1,660 pounds, to propel which a charge of about 430 pounds of smokeless powder is required. The weight of the projectiles fired from these Manila Bay guns indicates the progress made in 14-inch-gun construction, for in the original type of 14-inch gun the weight of the projectile was 1,400 pounds.

Also at Sandy Hook, mounted and under test, is a 12-inch mortar that represents the very last word in high-angle artillery. The picture of this great gun shows its resemblance to the big howitzers of the Austrian and German types. This type of mortar is now the accepted standard of the coast artillery arm of the United States Army and is mounted and fired in groups. An experiment, the purpose of which is to make certain of these giant mortars portable and render it possible to ship them from one part of the country to another in quick time, is another matter now receiving the close attention of artillery and ordnance experts in this country.

The aerial phase in modern war is, as every one knows, one of the newly created problems of the present great European struggle. In every army in the world ordnance officers are at work trying to devise an anti-aircraft gun that will be found efficient in attacking aeroplanes and dirigibles at low as well as at great altitudes. It goes without saying that this problem is receiving the proper attention at Sandy Hook, and experiments will soon begin with a gun of the 3-inch naval type that it is hoped will go a long way toward solving this problem, at least so far as the United States of America is concerned. The gun fires a 3-inch shell. It violates no confidence to state that there is reason to hope that this gun will prove effective even when fired at an angle of at least 70 degrees.

Another gun under test at Sandy Hook is the 4.7-inch howitzer for the Panama defenses. This gun, which is a perfect piece of mechanism, will be mounted in such a manner that it can be placed on a railway car or an auto truck and rapidly transported to any part of the Canal Zone and will be ready to be put in action the moment the destination is reached.

These are just a few of the interesting things in the way of ordnance that are to be seen at Sandy Hook, provided you can get there. And now a word about the proving battery where these big and little monsters are tried out, approved or found wanting. The picture printed with this article gives a far better idea than any word description of what this battery is. Mounted on the concrete emplacements are the guns of all sizes and kinds, from those of the 14-inch type to the little 3-inch shrapnel fellows. The big 16-inch has an emplacement all to itself. Alongside each of the guns, as the picture shows, are scores upon scores of projectiles, and all guns point the same way, a sort of crosswise direction, so to speak, seaward.

When the big guns are tested, all windows on Sandy Hook are raised. It makes no difference what kind of weather prevails, the windows must go up, else every one of them would probably break as a result of the detonation of the piece. If the test is one to involve penetration, the projectile is fired at a target made of the finest and toughest of steel. All ranges figure in this test. If the test involves ascertaining the velocity of the projectile, which likewise indicates the power of the propelling charge, a very ingenious system is used.

About 150 yards in front of the muzzle of the gun to be tested are two high poles. Between them, at the point through which the projectiles will go, is a wire screen. A hundred yards or more beyond are two more poles, exactly like the first, and also fitted with the little wire screen that the projectile will penetrate.

These wires are electrified, and as the projectile strikes the screen the current is broken and the exact fraction of the second at which the projectile passes through the wire screen is automatically indicated in one of the ordnance laboratories half a mile away. The same thing happens when the second screen is pierced. It is then an easy matter to figure the exact speed of the projectile between the two points indicated, and that is how they found out that a 2,400-pound 16-inch projectile has a muzzle velocity of 2,300 feet per second. The better the propelling charge the greater the speed, and this is another of the ordnance problems that the electrified wire screen always solves, and solves correctly.

Mine experimentation is one of the jobs assigned to the officers of the proving grounds. The mines are planted from five to eight feet deep or more in the desert part of the Hook and electrically exploded. Every land mine and every submarine that is devised for the use of our army is tested at Sandy Hook.

Much more might be written about the day THE TIMES representative spent at Sandy Hook with the officers of the ordnance arm of the American Army, but it is better to stop before something is written that for any reason should be left unsaid.

Intimacy with War Destroys Writer's Socialism

Arthur Gleason, Back from the Front, Tells How He Discovered the Importance of Nationalism and Honor and Reality of Original Sin

A STUDIO apartment in South Washington Square—a few Japanese prints on the walls—in one corner a huge brass bowl holding one great long-stemmed red rose, from which many petals had drifted to the floor, where they lay piled in admired disorder. At a desk heaped with books and papers a young man obviously of the "literary radical" type was smoking a far briar pipe. On a chair near by was a slender young woman in a picturesque frock, somehow suggesting very advanced portrait photography or ultra-modern sculpture. It was Mr. Arthur Gleason and his wife, back from a year's service with the Red Cross in Belgium. And they were talking about original sin.

Now original sin is not a common topic for discussion in New York's Quartier Latin. There was a time when Arthur Gleason, settlement worker and Socialist, thought as little about original sin as he does now about griffins. But several months of hard service as a stretcher-bearer in Belgium, running out under fire to rescue wounded soldiers, bandaging the stumps of arms and legs, eating and sleeping within the sound of shell fire and in the constant company of men fighting for their countries and their lives, have given Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Gleason several things to think about that were not dreamed of in their Socialistic philosophy.

One of these things is the desirability of nationalism instead of internationalism. Another is the value of that ancient ideal which is called honor. And another is the tremendous and undying significance of original sin.

When Mr. Gleason came back last June from a month's service in the battlefields of the West, he had a talk with James Oppenheim, the novelist, which was reported at length in THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE. At that time he had advanced—or retreated—so far from the Socialistic position as to say "Our peace is wrong, and their war is right." Then he went back to his dangerous task, and since then he has discovered many things.

Mr. and Mrs. Gleason told a TIMES reporter the other day about some of these things which they have discovered. They repeated to him some of the lessons which war has impressed upon the minds of two people who have lived intimately with it.

"When I went over to Belgium," said Mr. Gleason, "I had the feeling, which is common among Socialists and social workers, that men all were brothers. I did not believe that one nation could be right and another wrong; I did not believe in nations, I was thoroughly an internationalist.

"But I have come to believe in right and wrong, to believe that one side in a war is right and the other wrong. And so I have got a sense of the worthwhileness of nationalism.

"For instance, I found that there is such a thing as a French national spirit, that this national spirit is something precious and worthy to endure. When I left America I had in my mind the common faked picture of the French as an always frivolous and often vicious race. But I found an entirely different set of French characteristics. I saw the fighting spirit of the French, and I saw it endure through the weary months. I saw it endure in spite of the onslaught of those diseases which are so much harder to bear than dramatic wounds. * * *"

Here Mrs. Gleason entered the conversation.

"The French have proved," she said, "the lasting quality of the spirit which they showed when the war began. I was in Paris during the first week of the war. I saw the splendid fighting spirit which was manifested in those days. And I know that it has never once, through the victories and reverses, flagged or wavered for a second, and back of the fighting spirit of the men is the fighting spirit of the women, and even of the children—a spirit that has flamed hot and constant since the war began.

"And yet," said Mrs. Gleason, "it does not seem to me that war is the way to work out life. But I can so easily be misconstrued if I say that—it may be thought that I mean that I want peace, and I don't want to give that impression."

"You mean that you don't want peace in general," asked the reporter, "or peace now?"

Mrs. Gleason was silent for a moment. "Certainly not now, at any rate," she said at length.

Mr. Gleason returned to the subject of his philosophy of life as it was when he first went to deal directly with the great realities of war.

"All our modern philosophy," he said, "had blurred our perception of the thing that is called sin. The Germans gave to us a sense of the reality of original sin. When I saw a girl of twelve, who had been one of many used as shields by the advancing Germans, dying from bayonet wounds in her back; when I saw a woman of eighty with a bayonet thrust through her thigh—then I knew that there was original sin. All nations are guilty of this war, but Germany is the guiltiest of all, because Germany carried its sin to the nth power, while the rest of us were only in the A B C's of sin."

"Mr. Gleason," I said, "you used the term original sin. Do you mean it in the orthodox sense?"

"By original sin," said this ex-while disciple of Karl Marx, "I mean a natural tendency toward evil which is common to all humanity. Our chief manifestation of original sin is commercialism, with its two branches, industrialism and imperialism. And commercialism carried out logically, as the Germans are carrying it out, results in murder.

"We got badly sidetracked about militarism; we thought that militarism was something imposed on a people from above, something arbitrarily established by the Kaiser and his General Staff. Now, militarism is nothing of the sort. Militarism is simply the will to power carried out to its logical conclusion, and given weapons. And that is simply a manifestation of original sin."

Mr. Gleason paused and relighted his pipe. "You see," he said, "before the war we were all busy creating a new ethic. We were cutting off the old values and the war is restoring them. And one of these old values which is being restored is that of nationality in idea—our kind of country run as we want it run. England has a right to her idea of nationality, to afternoon tea and week-ends and cricket, and all the rest of it. England has no desire to be made efficient, and neither has Belgium, and there is no reason why their national ideas should be changed.

"You see, we've been in Belgium since September, we lived in the early days of the war in cities that did not expect to be invaded. And we know the life of the Belgians, that peaceful, friendly, artistic life."

"They are the most artistic people in the world," said Mrs. Gleason.

"And the most affectionate," said her husband. "Well, what the Germans did was to impose their will brutally on the Belgians, as some cruel grown person might impose his will on a child. The invasion of Belgium had all the pathos of maltreatment of a child.

"I spent some time in Termonde. Only about a tenth of the houses were standing. The other houses had been burned, not in a general conflagration, but one by one. Before burning any of the houses the Germans went through the town and wrote 'Gute Leute wohnen hier' on some of the front doors. The houses saved were those in which spies lived.

"The attitude of the people who were living in the cellars of ruined Termonde was exactly like the attitude of children. One well-educated man looked for a long time at the charred spot that had been his home, and then said to me: 'I don't see why they did it! I don't see why they did it!'"

"Mr. Gleason," the reporter said, "you say that you have been converted from internationalism to nationalism. And yet is not all the horror which you have seen the result of the national idea?"

"I think that we are overlooking a point," said Mr. Gleason. "Nationality has its value, but its value ends at the boundaries of its own territory. It must not step out and throw its weight on the territory of others. A healthy national life is right and necessary. When there is antagonism between two ideas a perfect balance must be struck. Nations must be like individuals."

"Yes," added Mrs. Gleason, "nations must respect each other's rights as individuals respect each other's rights. But the balance must be kept."

"We have been trying," said Mr. Gleason, "to impose our own national ideas upon the people of other countries. Germany has revealed us to ourselves, and revealed every nation to itself, by showing the logical conclusion of this policy.

"And so Germany has done the world a service. It is good for the world to be able to recognize the offense in a conspicuous offender. We feel that we are caught in a wrong social system, and we identify this evil when we see women and children cut down in Colorado. Then we take steps to end at least this phase of the evil.

"So Germany has brought injustice—all the world's injustice—to such a point that we can see it. Germany is valuable today as a sort of laboratory specimen. Germany is a case of abnormal psychology which could be used by Freud or Jung, or some other great scientist, to point out our own tendencies."

Mr. Gleason was asked what he thought of the activities of the English labor unions during the last few months.

"I think," he said, "that the English labor movement has done splendid service through this war in calling attention to the perpetual strife between labor and capital. The English working men know that conscription can be made an almost irresistible weapon of the employers when there is a strike. They saw it recently demonstrated in France. A strike was declared, and the authorities at once called the strikers to the colors. The English working men know that if military conscription were established it would continue in some form after the war was over, and would be used to break strikes. Therefore they oppose it."

"The war certainly changes one's ideas," said Mr. Gleason reflectively. "Now, there is Mr. Gerald Stanley Lee, an amiable person who sits down comfortably three thousand miles away from the fight and writes in his little Mount Town Magazine that the only sensible people in Europe are the Red Cross workers; that the others are a lot of bloody children, or something of the sort. As a matter of fact, the Red Cross workers are not people who impersonaally dispense charity, they are really an important part of the army with which they serve, and they know that they are a part of it.

"The Red Cross worker wants to help his side, and send soldiers back to the lines to fight again. He does not think of himself as healing wounds, but as restoring a fighter. And he does not feel resentment when the enemy shoots at him. Once we went out to get three wounded Senegalese, and the Germans sent ten shells at us. There was a big Red Cross on the ambulance, which made an excellent target. We did not feel the slightest resentment, for we felt —as the Germans felt—that we were a part of the allied troops."

Here Mrs. Gleason interrupted.

"No," she said, "we didn't mind being fired at when we were rescuing our own wounded. But we did resent being fired at by the Germans when they could see clearly that we were trying to rescue some of their own wounded. In fact, it made us thundering mad!"

"I think," said Mr. Gleason, "that it will take years for us to clarify the impression which we have received, to make a synthesis of our new ideas. A wealth of new experience has suddenly been poured upon us. We had been living by theories which we had made for ourselves. But the war is not a theory, it is a fact.

"There was that old theory, which so many of us held, that war was the worst of all possible evils, bringing a train of horror and developing the worst part of the nature of every one taking part in it. I have found that this theory is wholly false.

"Before the war France revealed her character to us by means of the Caillaux trial, by means of the gross corruption of her politics, and by means of a certain sort of lewd literature. This was not all of France, but it was all of France that most of us saw, it was the part which peace brought out.

"The war has done away with this side of the French character. We have seen the French hold the front from Nieuport to the German frontier for twelve months; we have seen them lose 60,000 men and advance, gain five kilometers, lose them all and charge again, and we have seen them settle down for the Winter ready for one or two or three more years of fighting. They are not now frivolous and volatile; they face the war solidly, and they understand what it means.

"The level of life is much higher than it was in the months before the war. The war has not brutalized them; on the contrary, it has brought out what is real and most beautiful in them. The war has revealed French characteristics which always existed, but were not hitherto in evidence. This the war has done right before our eyes.

"There is a young doctor with whom I worked in Belgium—he illustrates the change which has come over France. When the war began he was a frivolous, cynical, dissipated man about town. The war has made him brave, practical, patient, quiet.

"And he has been saddened. The quality that now seems to us universal in France is sadness. But it is not a weak sadness. It is a sadness that indicates resolution and endurance, a sadness behind which fires are burning."

"Do you think," the reporter asked, "that the English character also has been strengthened by the war?"

"Certainly England has profited by the war," said Mr. Gleason, "but not in the same way that France has profited. The England of the days before the war had gone stale. It was not the England of the old, glorious eras. The hatred of the lower classes had been intensified; inequality had never been more sharply manifest than it was in the English slums. England was hard and cynical.

"Then the war came and remade England. The men who are coming back from Flanders will not permit the old inequality to be re-established. A real sense of equality has been forced on every one.

"Lieutenant Harry Prossor told me about an officer friend of his who was left wounded between two lines of trenches. A Tommy ran out and shielded him with his body until rescuers arrived. Incidents like that are not forgotten, and the officers cannot, when the war is over, keep a feeling of superiority to men who have done such things. The war is bringing democracy to England."

"And it is an actual democracy," said Mrs. Gleason, "not a sentimental democracy. England is actually being remade as a result of the terrific taxation enforced by the new budget. And people do not think of protesting against the new budget, as they did eight years ago when Lloyd George began, very moderately, to put into effect his scheme for securing a more equitable distribution of wealth.

"And I can't imagine," Mrs. Gleason went on, "anything but the war producing such a practical demonstration of democracy as the mess table of our corps. There were Lady Dorothie Feilding, Ivor Bevan, the great London banker, and a cockney chauffeur eating at the same table, riding in the same ambulance, and sharing the same pick-up lunch out in the battlefield!"

"I have seen an English officer," said Mr. Gleason, "bring in a slightly wounded private soldier in his own car, and heard him say to me, 'Take care of him, he's a friend of mine. This attitude was impossible in times of peace."

"And the same thing is true in France and Belgium," said Mrs. Gleason.

Mr. Gleason took a reflective puff at his pipe. "If war brings out all the brutality that is in human nature," he asked, "why are episodes like this so common?

"After the battle of Ypres, Captain Davies said to me, 'There is a poor old peasant woman who has been working in the fields during all the fighting.' He went out and got her, and we took care of her. Of course, she was wounded, but we couldn't get her out until evening, when the firing had ceased. Then we got her and took care of her.

"Why is this? Why did Captain Davies, or anybody else, bother about tending to the poor old peasant woman if war had really brutalized us all? Why are women perfectly safe at the front? My wife and two English women ran a dressing station at the front, and were treated always with respect. The fact of the matter is that men are not brutal when they believe that they are fighting in the right."

"No!" said Mrs. Gleason. "You find that all unpleasant staring and attempts at flirtation have been left behind. We met with nothing of the sort at the front. Yet we were dressed in a costume that would certainly have made us uncomfortably conspicuous anywhere else—we wore riding breeches. But we were respected, and our appearance was not once commented upon."

"No one," said Mr. Gleason, "could go through a year out there without seeing that the general level of life among the soldiers was many degrees higher than in times of peace. These men are carrying through a belief in the face of death, and it brings out all that is best in them."

The reporter asked Mr. Gleason if he believed that the war has similarly elevated the German character.

"As to that," said Mr. Gleason, with a grim smile, "I had few opportunities to judge. My only chances to observe the Germans were when they were marching ahead of me burning houses with people in them. Frankly, it is impossible to watch the Germans burning twenty-six peasants' houses, and to find at one time eleven bodies of their Belgian victims, bayoneted in the back when they could no longer get up and walk in front of the Germans for a shield, and believe that the Germans are living at the same high level as the Belgians, who face fearful odds for the sake of honor. The Belgians, French, and English taught me the value of nationality and honor. What the Germans taught me was the truth of original sin.

"The war has driven home to me a lot of truths which are contrary to the rather vague modern philosophy which we had developed. There is the conventional idea that women are the enemies of war. That is purely sentimental nonsense! No one who knows what the women of France have done and are doing will hold such a theory for an instant.

"War is not at all like one's idea of it. There are no high lights on it; it is terribly monotonous. The greatest virtue of the French is the way in which they endure this monotony.

"A striking thing about the war is the absence of pictorial quality. There is a landscape with nothing in sight for two miles except the head of one sentry. You must jump out of your car and go underground in order to see any one.

"And the wounded men are not any more picturesque than the patients of St. Luke's Hospital. They don't say picturesque or brave things; they talk about the make of your car and ask you for a cigarette. At Nieuport there is a little peddler who comes out every day with a tray full of chocolate, shoestrings, and playing cards. War is not abnormal, it is subnormal."

"You see," said Mrs. Gleason, "we must keep normal to keep sane. At first people objected if we even took a walk at night. But after a while we had to assert ourselves, to play the piano, dance, and play cards. Life at the front differs from life at home chiefly because it is lacking in variety and in excitement."

The reporter asked the Gleasons if they had found anything to confirm Miss Jane Addams's report that soldiers were made drunk or drugged to give them energy and courage for a charge. They did not take the idea very seriously.

"The charges that we know about," Mr. Gleason said, "were made on 'bully beef.' It is not a very stimulating drug. It is true that at Christmas time the supply of coffee ran out and every soldier was given a finger of brandy. That is the nearest approach to drugs or drunkenness that we saw.

"But Miss Jane Addams is, of course, a woman of probity, and some one must have told her the things which she has reported. She was told many things during her trip to Europe that we never heard during our months at the front. For instance, she is quoted as saying that wounded boys in the hospitals told her that they never shot at the enemy; that they always fired into the air. The Belgian and French wounded whom I knew never had practiced this abstention. They did not shoot into the air; they shot at the enemy, and they shot most accurately.

"I came away from the war," said Mr. Gleason, "with a firm belief, as I have told you, in the value of honor and nationality, and of the reality of original sin. And I believe now that, given human nature and the clash of ideas, then there must be war, if one believes in anything strongly enough to die for it. And my belief in the importance of nationality is so strong that it seems to me that perhaps America should take steps to preserve and develop her own national life. The war may teach us that we must restrict immigration. We are not helped toward a coherent individuality of national life by the yearly reception of hundreds of thousands of immigrants."

Belgium Used as a Milch-Cow for Germany

THE Hon. George B. McClellan seems to be a gifted impressionist artist. After a hasty dash through Belgium, a "Specially Conducted Tour Under German Official Guides," he has painted, in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Oct. 10, a most attractive picture of Belgium rising pho nix-like from her ashes under the gentle and enlightened rule of the House of Hohenzollern. Would that conditions were as Mr. McClellan has painted them! Unfortunately the artist, as his own article indicates, depicts chiefly those things which were told by his official German guides. I feel confident that if Mr. McClellan had stayed more than a few days in Belgium and had investigated conditions personally, he would have arrived at a different conclusion as to the "beneficence" of German rule in Belgium.

Belgium is being used as a milch-cow for Germany.

Mr. McClellan seems to have received the idea from his German friends that they are doing everything possible to revive Belgian industries so that the Belgians may return to a normal condition. What the Germans are really trying to do is to start up Belgian factories to manufacture war munitions for Germany, and to induce, or compel by force of arms, the Belgians to engage in work detrimental to the interests of their King and country.

Take, as a concrete example, the artificial silk mills at Tubize. This concern had a large trade with America. They employ about 7,000 people. In December, 1914, through Mr. Brand Whitlock, they obtained permission from the German Government to resume operations, on condition that the product of the factory should be sold to its customers in the United States, and should not go to any of the belligerents.

When the mills got into operation the German authorities tore up that "scrap of paper" and demanded that only one-third of the product should go to the American purchasers, and the remaining two-thirds of material should be made into nitro-cellulose (used in explosives) for the German Government. The Belgians refused to manufacture explosives with which to kill their fellow countrymen. The mills were shut down, and the American purchasers, who had contracted for the output, have petitioned the Department of State to request Germany to live up to her agreement with the Tubize mills. As far as I am informed Germany has not complied, and seven thousand Belgian workmen are idle because Germany will not let them work unless she gets two-thirds of the material in nitro-cellulose.

It is quite probable, as Mr. McClellan was informed, that the Germans have destroyed "actually less than 1 per cent. of Belgian factory property." The Germans are a canny people. They do not usually destroy anything that will be of use to themselves. They have wantonly destroyed churches and shot priests, presumably because they have no special use for them, although they occasionally have used the churches as stables or as prisons, but they have carefully preserved the Belgian mines and the Belgian factories. When they have found it impossible to compel Belgians to work in these factories they have, in some cases, taken out useful parts of the machinery and sent them into Germany. The Belgian Government has formally protested to the powers about this little habit of the Germans.

Under this "beneficent" German rule it is impossible for the Belgians to resume their ordinary business. Communication with other countries is difficult, if not impossible. Even communication between different parts of Belgium is difficult. Telephone and telegraph service is restricted; some of the railways have been dug up and sent out of the country; others have been put out of commission.

I have before me a statement in regard to what the German authorities have done to (not for) the commerce of Antwerp. This statement is by the President of the Antwerp Chamber of Commerce. He complains that enormous quantities of raw material and manufactured goods, from automobiles to children's toys, have been requisitioned by the German Government and have not been paid for. Some were taken at arbitrary prices. The prices of other commodities were to be fixed by a German commission at Berlin, but nothing had been done in the matter.

During a careful investigation by the President of the Chamber of Commerce, covering the requisitioning of raw materials valued at about $17,000,000, he found that only $4,000,000 worth had been paid for. Although the merchandise had been carried away months before, the remaining $13,000,000 had never been paid by the German Government. He estimates that many times the above amount has been requisitioned in other raw materials and in manufactured goods. Furthermore, he states that "the majority of the goods which have not been requisitioned have been 'blocquées,' that is to say they are strictly controlled by the German authorities, who will not permit any transaction or delivery of goods without their authorization, which is rarely given."

Confirmation of the above statement by the President of the Antwerp Chamber of Commerce as to the wholesale "blocking" and requisitioning of goods may be found in the orders of the German Governor General in Belgium, especially the orders dated Sept. 30, 1914, and Oct. 26, 1914.

Under such conditions business in Belgium is at a standstill. Merchants and manufacturers can do nothing for themselves nor can they give employment to Belgian workmen. There is, however, one line of work open to the Belgian workman—he can work for the German army against his own fellow-countrymen, but he refuses to do that. The Germans, in defiance of the laws of war and of The Hague conventions, have on many occasions tried, by force and arms, to compel the Belgian railway employes to work on the railroads and in the machine shops. This would release about an army corps of Germans from railroad work and permit them to go to the trenches; also it would facilitate the army transportation trains, as the Belgians are more familiar with the work and the roads. The Belgian workmen patriotically refused high wages.

Then the German Government resorted to brute force. At Luttre the German authorities, in May, 1915, tried to starve the workmen into submission. They forbade the Communal officials to give them any relief, either in commodities or in money. A while later, in order to cut off all possible source of supplies from the workmen, the German authorities proceeded to arrest and imprison almost all the Belgian officials and agents engaged in the distribution of relief supplies, and also to arrest and imprison various prominent citizens who had been helping in the relief work.

Finally they sent two soldiers with fixed bayonets to each workman's home to arrest him. If the man was not at home some member of his family was taken as hostage—father, mother, wife, or child; in one instance a little girl 14 years of age was taken as hostage The arrest of the wives of workmen was a common occurrence. A number of the men were taken to the workshop and harangued by a German office , who threatened to send them to Germany if they continued to refuse to work. "Let those who accept to work," added the officer, "take two steps to the front." Every man took one step to the rear crying "Vive la Belgique! Vivent nos soldats!"

The men were then imprisoned in a third-class railway carriage and in a cattle car, which had not been cleaned out and in which they were so crowded that they had to sleep sitting down or curled up. They were fed by their families, but on the sixth day the Germans became exasperated by their resistance and put them on bread and water. After nine days of this imprisonment they were shipped to a detention camp in Westphalia, where they were confined at hard labor and given insufficient food. In that camp one of the forms of punishment for infractions of camp rules was to put a brick in each hand of the Belgian, tie two bricks on each side of his jacket, and then make him run for several hours, continuously crossing and recrossing a small river with steep banks. Every two hours he would be given a rest of five or six minutes and a glass of water.

The benign German Government resorted to somewhat similar methods with the railway employes at Malines, the latter part of May, and at Sweveghem in the early part of June, 1915.

Such is the Prussian system for restoring prosperity to Belgium and providing the poor Belgian workman with employment. The above facts are set forth in greater detail in two official notes issued by the Belgian Government recently.

Mr. McClellan seems to have been told by his German friends that the "rich Belgians" and the "smart" people have fled to other countries, and that they should return so that business may go on as usual. This view seems to have been confirmed by no less authority than his barber and the flower woman in the market. Mr. McClellan intimates in one paragraph that these "rich Belgians" are spending their money in more or less riotous and unpatriotic living "at French and Swiss watering places," but at the end of the same paragraph he tells us that they are "buying pearls and jewelry" from the antique dealer in Brussels.

The fact is that there are very few "rich Belgians" in these days. I know Belgians who were in comfortable circumstances and who are now in exile living on charity. I know, among others, a lady of the nobility whose château near Dinant was destroyed by the Germans and who escaped on foot with only the clothes on her back. She is living in a cheap boarding house in London. Her son and two nephews, boys of 17 and 18, are with the Belgian Army; her brother-in-law is wounded; three of her near relatives (two of them mere lads) were ruthlessly shot down by the German soldiers in the public square of Dinant, where more than 700 other innocent civilians were similarly murdered. What can such exiles go back to, except desolation and ruin? Why should they again put their heads in the lion's jaws, and how could they help build up the country as long as the Germans are in possession?

Those few Belgians who have any money left, or who can still raise money on their credit, are using it for their starving countrymen whom Germany refuses to feed. Mr. Hoover, Chairman of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium, has announced that the Belgians themselves have raised about $50,000,000 to buy food. Only about $10,000,000 has been given to Belgium in charity by America and other countries. In this way the "rich Belgians" are rendering Belgium greater service than would be possible in any other way. If they have been fortunate enough to escape, they can best serve their country from outside.

The Germans would welcome them back to Belgium, not to build up Belgium, but to enrich the coffers of the German Government. Within the territory held by the German army rich men have been found useful as hostages, and on some occasions their money has been taken from them by way of ransom, all of which is quite contrary to law, but is in accordance with the Prussian system.

I do not know that any large number of "rich Belgians" have left Belgium. I do know a large number of Belgians of the upper class who have deliberately remained and taken their chances, in the hope of being of some use to the poorer classes. From what I know of the experiences of my personal friends, the German military authorities have not permitted them to do much good.

Take, for example, the case of Mme. Henry Carton de Wiart, wife of the Belgian Minister of Justice. When her husband left Belgium with the other members of the Belgian Cabinet, Mme. Carton de Wiart remained in Brussels with her six children, the youngest of whom was a baby about one year old. Mme. Carton de Wiart, at the outbreak of the war, had done a notable work in caring for the poor Germans who were being deported from Belgium. After the German occupation of Brussels she continued her work among the poor of her country. The final result was that she was tried before a German court-martial and after eighteen hours of cross-examination was torn from her children, was sent to a common jail in Berlin, whence she was released about a month ago. This is one of the ways in which the Germans encourage the "gens chics" to remain in Belgium.

Burgomaster Max of Brussels remained to help his fellow citizens. He watched over their interests so efficiently that the Germans sent him to prison in Germany.

I was much interested in Mr. McClellan's description of the efficient work which the Germans are said to be accomplishing with the machinery of a portion of the Belgian Red Cross. Mr. McClellan says that they have turned it into a sort of "vast charity organization society" under German management. They may be doing a fine work, for anything I know to the contrary. Mr. McClellan does not mention how the Germans happened to get control of any part of the machinery of the Belgian Red Cross. As a matter of fact, to use a plain expression, they stole it. This act of grand larceny took place in the month of April, 1915.

A certain portion of the Belgian Red Cross was (and still is) with the Belgian Army. A portion of the outfit and some officials were left behind in Brus-

When New York Saw a Presidential Wedding

John Tyler's Romance with Miss Julia Gardiner Culminated in Their Marriage at the Church of the Ascension in This City Seventy-One Years Ago

PRESIDENT WILSON, whose engagement to Mrs. Norman Galt has lately been announced, will be the third President of the United States to be married during his term of office. Grover Cleveland was the second, whose marriage thirty years ago in the White House, on June 2, 1886, to Frances Folsom, now Mrs. Thomas J. Preston, took place during his second term.

The first was John Tyler, famous in the spirited campaign song of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too," who became President on April 4, 1841, on the death of General William Henry Harrison, who had been inaugurated just one month before. It was the first time in the history of the country that a Vice President had succeeded to the office of Chief Executive, due to the death of the one elected to that place.

Tyler's three years and eleven months of office were filled with political turmoil and trouble. Within a few months, all of his Cabinet members resigned, with the exception of two, of whom Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, was one. The great Webster was severely criticised by his party, the Whig, for remaining, but in the end it was much to his credit, as well as that of the much maligned Administration, that he did so, for he carried to a successful termination that memorable agreement with England known as the Ashburton treaty, which removed many long-standing disputes regarding our Canadian boundary. Soon after the treaty was signed, in 1843, Webster left the Cabinet.

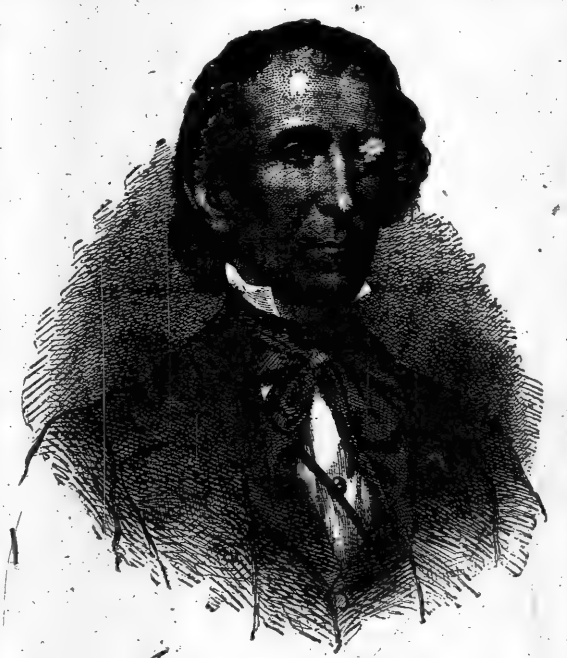
But amid his stormy Presidential career, in which public vituperation went so far as to bring forth audible muttering of threatened impeachment, John Tyler achieved the happy distinction of escorting his bride direct from the wedding to the White House.

Yet the marriage was preceded, and, indeed, was indirectly caused, by one of the most appalling disasters which have ever occurred to the American Navy during times of peace. The steam frigate Princeton, the newest and finest type of steam warship then in the navy, had recently been put in commission. On Feb. 28, 1844, the President and Secretary of the Navy invited a large party of guests to make a trip of inspection on the war vessel down the Potomac. Her chief armament consisted of two great guns of an improved pattern, capable of hurling a 225-pound shot a distance of three miles. One of the guns, at its third discharge, when opposite Alexandria, exploded, killing six persons and injuring many others. Among the dead were two recently appointed members of the Cabinet, Abel P. Upshur, Secretary of State, and Thomas W. Gilmer, Secretary of the Navy, and also Commander Beverly Kenyon of the United States Navy, David Gardiner, a former New York State Senator, and Virgil Maxcy, late Chargé d'Affaires at Belgium.

Among the large party of ladies on board were the two daughters of David Gardiner, friends of the President, and who were in Washington on a visit from New York. The body of their father was taken temporarily to the White House, and as a result of the close association of the President with the bereaved daughters, he fell in love with the elder, Julia Gardiner, and in a little less than four months they were married.

The bride was 24 years of age, and a member of one of the socially prominent families of New York. She was born on Gardiner's Island, which became the manorial possession of the doughty Lion Gardiner, the founder of the family on this side of the Atlantic, about 1640. This extensive island, standing well out into the ocean east of Long Island, has never passed from the family ownership.

The wedding took place in New York City at the Church of the Ascension, then, as now, at Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, on Wednesday, June 26, 1844. The newspapers of the day, however, gave less notice to the nuptials of the



John Tyler

President of the United States than was accorded to many a local political happening. This was due to two reasons. First, because both the President and his bride had kept their secret securely from the public, so that few persons, even of the newspaper editors in New York, knew what was going on until apprised of the fact on the departure of the President and his wife by the salutes of the warships in the harbor. The second reason was that in view of the recent bereavement in the Gardiner family the ceremonies had been arranged on a very simple scale, and the newspapers were asked to treat the affair in an equally simple manner.

This request was so generally observed that one may pore over the files of the newspapers of the day in vain to discover anything like a comprehensive account of the first wedding in which a President of the United States was married during his term of office.

One paper, however, deviated from this tendency toward ultra-conservatism and presented its readers, on the morning of June 27, with a more satisfactory account. This was The New York Morning Express, then published at 112 Broadway by William B. Townsend, James and Erastus Brooks. The article was evidently written by an eyewitness who doubtless had inside information. It is given as published seventy-one years ago:

His Excellency John Tyler, President of the United States, was married yesterday to Miss Julia Gardiner, eldest daughter of the late Hon. David Gardiner of Long Island.

The wedding took place at the Church of the Ascension, on Fifth Avenue. The marriage services were performed by the Right Rev. Bishop Onderdonk in a dignified and appropriate manner. Not more than a dozen people were in the church, except the bridal party. The position and standing of the bride and groom will justify a brief description of some of the particulars attending the ceremonies without any breach of decorum.

The bride is a very beautiful and elegantly formed woman of apparently 20 years of age. She was robed simply in white, with a gauze veil depending from a circlet of white flowers wreathed in her hair. The bride was given away by her brother. The wedding party consisted of a brother and sister of the bride, John Tyler, Jr., and lady, two Misses Wickliffe, daughters of the Postmaster General; Mr. Postmaster Graham, and one or two others whom we did not recognize.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies the party departed for the residence of the bride in Lafayette Place, in this city. The wedding cortége consisted of five carriages. That in which the President and his lady were conveyed was drawn by four horses, the coachman and footman wearing bridal favors.

After dinner the bridal party went on board a steamer and made a short excursion around the harbor, passing the North Carolina, Princeton, and the Mexican steamers. On approaching the various ships of war the salute due to the rank of President was fired from them, including the Mexican steamers. The yards of all the ships, steamers, and revenue cutters were manned, and as the party passed cheered most heartily. The steamer then proceeded to Jersey City, from whence a special train was dispatched to Philadelphia.

The event of the death of Mr. Gardiner, the father of the bride, who was killed by the bursting of a gun on board the steamer Princeton, is fresh in the minds of our readers. Two daughters of Mr. Gardiner were on board that vessel at the time of the explosion.

Mr. Gardiner was formerly a lawyer of high standing in this city, but retired early in life from his profession with an independent fortune. He was once elected Senator to this State and performed his legislative duties with credit to his industry and abilities.

Those of our readers who have been in the habit of visiting Washington during the session of Congress will not fail to remember Mr. Gardiner and his daughters, who have spent their Winters at the capital for the last few years. The young ladies were celebrated for their beauty and accomplishments and were objects of great attention and attraction among the two houses of Congress.

It is expected that the President and his young bride will leave Philadelphia this morning for Washington. After spending a short time at the White House they will proceed to Old Point Comfort, where they will probably remain some weeks.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, after the news was known, made this comment:

A sudden and secret journey, supposed to be in one direction, but proving to be in one directly opposite; an unexpected arrival, unheralded by the roar of cannon, and, to crown all, a marriage with youth and loveliness almost unequaled. Fortunate John Tyler! To bear away the prize for which so many younger and handsomer men have sighed in vain, to win for the eight months' ornament of his palace a bride so richly endowed with personal charms, and, report says, with valuable acres also; a bride who in little more than half a year will return with him to the seclusion of his Virginia estate, there to adorn the hours of his approaching old age with all the splendor and sweetness of her youthful beauty.

In connection with the wedding of John Tyler and the approaching nuptials of President Wilson there are certain coincidences of interest. Miss Gardiner was President Tyler's second wife. His first wife, Letita Christian, to whom he was married in 1813, died on Sept. 9, 1842, one year, five months and five days after the inauguration of her husband as President.

The late Mrs. Wilson was mistress of the White House for almost identically the same time, her death on Aug. 6, 1914, being one year, five months and two days from the inauguration of Mr. Wilson. President Tyler was married again in a little over one year and nine months after the death of his first wife, and if President Wilson is married in December, as has been announced, it will be about one year and four months after the death of his first wife.

At the time of President Tyler's second marriage he was 54 years old. After his retirement from the Presidency he spent his remaining years with his wife at his Virginia estate, Sherwood Forest, on the banks of the James River, near Richmond. He died in 1862. Mrs. Julia Gardiner Tyler lived until July 10, 1889. She died in Richmond on her way north after visiting her oldest son, Lyon Gardiner Tyler, President of William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va., a position he still holds. She had four children, three sons and one daughter.

The Gardiner home in New York City at the time the oldest daughter was married was one of the famous La Grange, or Colonnade, Row in Lafayette Place, just below Astor Place. The house was then known as 43 Lafayette Place. By some idiosyncrasy of fortune this landmark, typical of the most aristocratic private residences three-quarters of a century ago, is still standing, its present number being 430 Lafayette Street.

At the time of President Tyler's marriage in this city Lafayette Place was the social centre of the town, and no finer homes were to be found than the eight marble dwellings with their grand row of Corinthian columns comprising the Colonnade Row. The four houses in the lower section were torn down several years ago. John Jacob Astor, son of William B. Astor and grandson of the original John Jacob, lived in one of them, and his father had a large house on the opposite side of the street, the site of which is now covered by the old Astor Library building. Just below lived for many years Governor Edwin D. Morgan, the War Governor of New York State. The first house of the row was the home of Irving Van Wart, a descendant of one of the captors of Major Andre.

Of the four houses that now remain, the one below the Gardiner house, formerly 41 Lafayette Place, was the home of the wealthy druggist, John Milhau. The Gardiner house in 1851 was occupied by the historian, J. S. C. Abbott.

Machine Does Work of Sixty Office Holders

Run by a $540 Operator, It Fills Out the Checks for Ninety Odd Thousand Employes of Father Knickerbocker---and the Checks Are Unique

THAT young man over there gets $540 a year. He is doing with the aid of the machine he is operating the work formerly requiring the services of sixty persons. He is as fond of the machine as if it were his baby. On days when there is a pressure of work he comes early in the morning. He stays at night, sometimes as late as 9 o'clock."

The speaker was a city official. Strange as it may seem, the machine was in the Municipal Building. One does not look for machinery in the Municipal Building. One does not expect to find young men so anxious to serve the city as was this one working over his machine, entirely oblivious to the presence of strangers. It does not seem normal when one recalls the shortness of the interval which has elapsed since politics ruled in the making of municipal appointments. Fortunately for the taxpayer, the city is securing many such men.

Mayor Mitchel has lately talked a good deal about reductions in the budget. He referred to the fact that last year the apportionments for the departments under his jurisdiction were less than the amounts spent the year before. But even this fact had not kept the cost of government down. He discussed the standardization of salaries, with reductions here and there. The changes were to be drastic. In view of the news regarding salary cuts which has come out since, there is little difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the time of the publication of his pronunciamento was not chosen by chance.

The machine over which the young man was working and the young man himself symbolize the new order of things. Together they were filling out checks in the central payroll division of Controller Prendergast's Department of Finance at the rate of 7,500 an hour. The mechanism was one of the numerous devices introduced since Jan. 1 which have cut down the expense of the payroll work of the city.

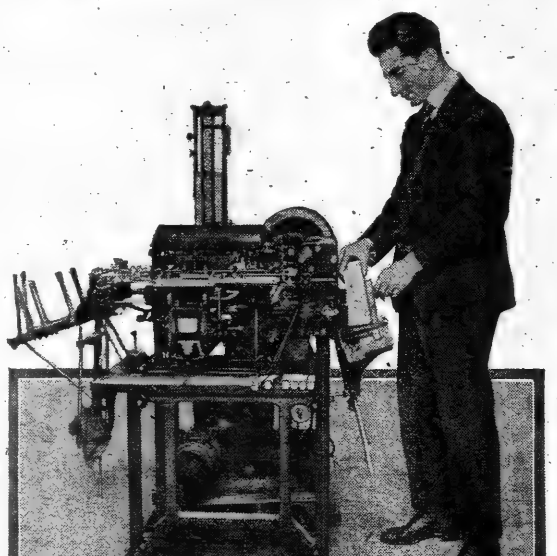
Prior to last January each department made out its own payroll. Before the end of the year all of the city's payroll work will be done by this central division at a saving of nearly 75 per cent. in cost. While actually engaged in filling out checks for the ninety-odd thousand employes of Father Knickerbocker who are at present paid by check, the machine referred to does in rush time work which formerly occupied sixty men.

Those who receive weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly checks, as the case may be, do not realize how great a physical task the distributing of the city's money is. It puts out in salaries and wages more than $105,000,000 a year. The efficiency experts of the Department of Finance and the Bureau of Municipal Research collaborating have devised a way by which machines can be used to help distribute it.

The making of checks by machinery has become so easy and inexpensive that by Jan. 1 next it is expected that very few of the city's employes will be paid in cash. Already the increased use of checks has cut down the automobile hire for transportation to different parts of the city of paymasters equipped with large bags of cash and guards. The amount saved up to the present time is sufficient to pay the salary of the official who directs the work of paying city employes, that is to say, $6,000. In the language of Mr. Bruère, the City Chamberlain, the payment of all of the employes in the Departments of Bridges, Docks and Ferries, Parks, and Health by check "will save in time now lost by paying employes in cash several thousand dollars a week in these four departments alone."

But how is the work of preparing checks payable to thousands upon thousands of different individuals to be accomplished by machinery! Not only the names, but the amounts also are different. Even the deductions required by law in the cases of employes whose wages have been garnisheed are made by the machine.

The plate method of addressing magazines and letters, which has become so familiar, is the basis of the system. There is a plate, perhaps three inches long and an inch and a half wide, for every employe who is to be paid by check. These are of a kind of metal which will permit the making of as many as twenty changes. They are filed after the fashion of a card index, in the order in which the names should appear on the payroll sheet. Each plate is labeled with the two code letters of the department in which the worker is employed and figures showing his permanent payroll number. Incidentally, these figures show whether the pay is weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly.



The New Machine That Saves Money for the City.

Some of the plates have little red tabs on them. This indicates that the man whose name is on the plate to which it is attached has fallen into the clutches of the money lenders. They are insignificant-looking little signs, but behind each of them lies a tale of furniture bought on the installment plan in larger quantity than the salary warranted, of sickness, or of the arrival of another baby in the tenement home.

The metal plates are so stamped that they can be used in preparing the payroll as well as in printing the check. Payrolls are still made out in some of the departments with pen and ink. Not only are these trying upon the eyes of those who have to read them, but they are on such large sheets that they are difficult to handle and cannot be filed in the ordinary filing cabinet. Ultimately all payrolls will be made out in the central payroll division.

The machine used for stamping the plates is capable of turning out from 700 to 1,000 new plates a day. Whenever the salary of an employe is garnisheed the reduced amount which he is to receive is inserted and a distinguishing letter added which indicates, when it appears on the check, why the amount is below the regular salary.

The check-writing machine is almost human. The plates having been inserted, it rings a bell at the end of each payroll and stops when the supply of checks or plates runs out.

The check blanks are unlike any others one ever saw. They were designed to save expense in filling them out. They may be drawn upon any one of eleven different banks, to each of which has been assigned a code letter. The code letter, however, signifies whether the check is for a teacher's salary, for an employe of a given department receiving compensation each month, or semi-monthly, or whether he is on the weekly payroll. Teachers are paid through one bank, those receiving weekly compensation through another, &c.

The checks have distinguishing colors, representing a particular payroll, and have the appropriate bank code letter in large size in a square at the right-hand end. A white check with the letter W upon it, for instance, would indicate that it was drawn for a weekly payroll. Along the margin of the left-hand end is the series of code letters representing the different banks, and also a row of figures spaced at regular intervals running from 1 to 5.

If the bank is the one upon which the weekly pay checks are drawn, there will be a quarter-inch hole punch through the small letter W printed in the code series. All checks drawn upon this bank will be punched similarly. In this way no "foreign" checks can become lost in the bundles of the city's checks. When a wire is run through the holes in the margins of the bundle of canceled checks, if there is one that is not punched, and therefore in the wrong place, the fact is instantly discovered. This hole prevents the charging of a payment to a wrong account.

Along the upper margin is another row of figures. The edge of the check is notched by machinery at the figure on the end, and at the one on top, which, taken together, represent the particular consecutive period for which it is drawn. Whenever a check gets into a bundle with whose notch its particular notch does not coincide, it is known immediately that it belongs to some other pay period, and is chargeable to some other account. These devices save a great amount of time and worry, because the checks automatically indicate where they belong and practically audit themselves. Where many thousands of checks are involved, this is a detail of great importance.

The blanks having been filled out as to name and amount, they are run through another machine, similar in operation to a stamp-canceling machine, where they are numbered and dated. They are then ready for signing.

This is done by means of a mechanical device, in which ten simultaneously receive the signature. The penholder which, placed in the hand of the Deputy Paymaster authorized to do the work, traces the signature rests on a ball bearing. It is connected with ten fountain pens, which move as one over ten check blanks. It is very easy to manipulate. The maximum number of times a signature can be placed on paper in the course of an average day's work is perhaps 2,500. It is said that with this device a novice in its operation can trace 20,000 signatures a day. It is expected that this total can be raised to 35,000 or 40,000 when the manipulative ability of the signer is developed to its maximum.

When the check is delivered, the recipient signs his name on a line in the lower left-hand corner. After he has done this he can cash it at any one of 250 banks in New York City and at many stores, just as if it were a gold note, by simply writing his name on the back. The check is self-identifying, and thus saves the payee any difficulty or expense in getting his cash. All that is necessary is that the signature on the back shall agree with that on the face. This is a benefit to the city employes in more ways than one. It makes it unnecessary to pay any one for cashing the pay check, or to depend upon the saloonkeeper on the corner to perform the function of a bank teller. The temptation or necessity for taking a drink when collecting the weekly pay is eliminated.

The work of installing this system was done by Charles S. Hervey, Deputy Controller; Shepard Morgan, Secretary to the Department of Finance, who were working under Controller Prendergast, and J. H. Clowes of the Bureau of Municipal Research, acting on the invitation of Henry ruBère, the City Chamberlain. It is stated that no municipal or private corporation has so highly perfected a system for paying its employes as that which is now at the service of New York City.

What Transcontinental Wireless Phone Means

Theodore N. Vail Discusses Significance of Recent Development in Communication When Human Voice Was Heard for First Time Across Continent

By Edward Marshall.

IT WAS while the marvel of the wireless telephonic messages from Arlington, near Washington, to the Mare Island Navy Yard at San Francisco, a distance of 3,500 miles, was still fresh in my mind that I went to see Theodore N. Vail, President of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and one of the nestors of the whole voice transmission science, as well as the one paramount figure in the telephone's commercial development.

It had been my good luck to be a correspondent in London when Marconi accomplished the then marvelous achievement of actually sending wireless telegraphic signals from the Crystal Palace to the Dome of St. Paul's Cathedral—two structures which, of late, have been said to be the targets of hostile aero bombs—and later, (but a few years ago,) to be with the United States Army, in Texas, when Major Squier announced his perfection of a system of wireless telephony and took out his remarkable patent in the name of "the people of the United States." During my stay in Texas Major Squier performed new miracles, using the quivering twigs and leaves of a growing tree as his antennae for wireless transmission.

Now I was with the man whose voice had first spanned the American continent without the aid of wires.

In the introduction of this article, I must note as an extraordinary fact the circumstance that to Theodore N. Vail the achievement, in itself, seems to mean little and that its possible effect on the values of telephone company stock seems uninteresting. Evidently what impresses him is the probable economic and social significance of the scientific miracle to the whole people.

"It is impressive," said the white haired, venerable magnate, "to reflect upon the fact that we alone, of the great nations of the world, are calm enough to give commensurate attention to a scientific achievement so momentous.

"That the one great nation in the world in which the people rule should be the one great nation of the world at peace and rejoicing over the achievements of peaceful science ought to make us very glad that we're Americans.

"The daily newspapers have told the details of the epoch-making conversation which I was privileged to carry on from this end of the wireless route, and which John J. Carty, Chief Engineer of our company, was privileged to carry on from the Pacific Coast end of the intangible circuit.

"But what has not been adequately considered is the meaning of this event—and it is big with meaning—social and industrial as well as financial. Indeed, in comparison with its social and industrial importance its financial significance must be admitted to be slight.

"It is possible that some thousands may make money out of the perfection of the wireless telephone; but tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands, millions, the whole race, will draw from it a profit more desirable than dollars.

"This is a new development—a perfection—of the telephone. The telephone already has worked a vast social and economic revolution—and its influence is growing.

"It has reduced the whole United States, potentially, to the size of a community. Every one is aware of the importance of the telephone to city life, but I find that city dwellers generally are unaware of its importance to country life.

"Note this: more than one-half of the farms in the United States already are connected up with telephones, and these phones are all tributary to the great general system.

"No such thing as isolation has been necessary for a long time, and, now that the wireless telephone is an assured success, capable of transmitting messages over great distances, it is less necessary than ever.

"There are more than 8,500,000 telephones in the United States! Telephone toll lines now reach 70,000 places in this country, as against 60,000 Post Offices and 60,000 railroad stations and regular telegraph offices at about 25,000 places.

"Now that the wireless has been developed, a vast extension of telephonic service will be possible. It is not improbable that telephonic communication between America and Europe ere long will be established, and this, of course, will mean that ships at sea will be able to talk by telephone with shores however distant, and with other vessels.

"The wireless telephone will not supplant the wire telephone, I think; but the wireless method will round out the old style telephone, making it complete, by enabling telephony to reach into remote spots to which wires cannot be strung, for one reason or another.

"There are difficulties to be overcome, but the results of the recent experiments, which carried the human voice from Arlington, near Washington, to Mare Island, near San Francisco, by wireless, were better than Alexander Graham Bell's results when he talked by wire for the first time over a circuit but a few yards in length.

"We don't know where the wireless telephone will lead us. But the fact which principally impresses me is that we, in America, are doing this work, this big, constructive scientific work, at a time when all Europe is at war. That's pretty fine.

"The spoken word has great advantages over the written word. There is no uncertainty about the mails, but there is likely to be an indefiniteness, an incompleteness about correspondence.

"You can't argue by mail and it is through argument that conclusions of great moment usually are reached. Discussion—that's the thing.

"I feel confident that this country will never again have any difficulties which cannot be settled by discussion and mutual concessions, and the marvelously developing telephone will do much to extend discussion and make it easier and more effective in the future.

"Perfectly free communication between people means such a liberty of the individual as the old-time revolutionists never dreamed of, for it means liberty of thought enlightened by untrammelled contact with all other thought. If a free interchange of ideas and thought once can be had between all, common course of action will be found to rectify most troubles. That is what we must strive for in this country. I believe that when we get it many, if not most, of the difficulties which today seem to confront us will disappear.

"I believe that perfectly free communication between people inevitably must mean general education, and general education in time will do away in this country with prejudice. It is prejudice which makes partisan politics bitter and inefficient as a governing force.

"I think that through education of the people we shall achieve nonpartisanship, and through that we eventually shall be capable of truly unprejudiced, and therefore truly wise, action. When we reach that point of development we shall be the greatest people upon earth.

"The men who have more than any one else to do with the progress of this nation will be our Commissioners, interstate, State, and local, in control of regulations governing our public utilities.

"These Commissioners will have larger interests and more important economic questions to protect, regulate, and settle than are taken before our highest judiciary; larger, even, than will be taken for adjudication before the Supreme Court of the United States.

"If these courts of commerce can be elevated to a high plane in the estimation of the public and can be kept entirely free from partisan control, the really vital questions—economic, industrial, what not—will be settled for the good of all. That will mean especially that they will be settled in a manner satisfactory to and beneficial to both labor and capital.

"Certainly these men, who will spring into being as the result of economic and scientific needs and advance, will have more than any one else to do with the economic development and condition of the country.

"I am an optimist. I believe we shall come out all right, and I believe we will be all right now as soon as we give conditions a chance to adjust themselves.

"We are a big people and must do things in the future in big ways, even bigger ways than the big ways for which in the past we have become world-celebrated, and in order to do this we must get into the minds of the men controlling our public utilities a sense of their responsibility to progress and the public.

"In order to get that into their minds, we must get into the minds of the people the conviction of the great necessity for putting the right men into such places. That's coming. We shall have fewer incompetents and very many fewer dishonest men at such work in the future than we have had in the past. I believe that the public, whom the politicians think can be so easily fooled, is, really, unfoolable. Lincoln was right about that. Performance, not prophecy and glittering promise, must be the standard by which to measure public men.

"We must realize that we can't do big things with little instrumentalities. We must thoroughly realize that, especially. The bigger the situation, the bigger the opportunity for all; but for big situations big men must be found who can think big thoughts, interpret them in big ways to the public, and thus accomplish big results. Otherwise our innate ambition to do big things will react on us and crush us.

"If there had been the right men at the right work in the right places, everywhere, the European war would not have happened and there would have been no economic destruction here, where, as a matter of fact, there has been much, although I think we are coming to our senses and bringing it to an end.

"What we need to keep a tight grip upon, in these days, is our knowledge of real values in distinction from false ones.

"The sudden ups and downs of the stock market, in these days, should not be permitted to affect the procedure of the average citizen or color his outlook upon life.

"We want to stop worrying, if we can, about speculative stock prices, and devote our attention to seeing to it that the values behind the stocks are real.

"Fully half our panics have been results of overspeculation in railroad and other stocks; but the speculators could be wiped out forever without having any destructive effect upon the actual railroads.

"If we could keep our business down to a basis of actuality there would be no more panics, for, really, we are a growingly prosperous people.

"What we must avoid is anything which is actually destructive of our means of inter-communication and transportation, for on them our national life depends.

"Wall Street has an important place in reality, although its definite usefulness at times has been subverted by some, who have made it a place for playing a giants' poker game in which bluffs are based upon our prosperity.

"Wealth and Wall Street are not necessarily related one to the other in any way whatsoever. It was only recently that a man died in the West, leaving a fortune estimated at $40,000,000, although in his estate was found not one security quoted on the Stock Exchange.

"Stocks may go up and stocks may go down without actually affecting our railways; we must get into the state of mind which will permit me to realize this.

"Stocks, produce, and other exchanges, commonly known as Wall Street, have a tremendous legitimate field of usefulness. Business cannot be conducted on a large scale, as we must conduct it, without liquid capital, and liquid capital when not employed quickly eats up the profits of business. It is through Wall Street and other exchange centres that capital which otherwise would be locked up can be invested in such ways that, in time of need, it readily can be realized upon.

"If a business man needs capital to take care of his actual business and finds his own tied up in a mortgage, for example, it will not be liquid, readily and quickly flowing from one use to another. It may take time which he cannot afford to negotiate that mortgage. But if he has his surplus capital in stocks and bonds it truly is in a liquid state, for upon them he can realize, or borrow money, as needs be, because of their definite market provided and organized for dealing in them.

"Activity, employment, production, consumption, purchasing power make values, and we must avoid such things as actually do affect these unfavorably. Speculation, in Wall Street or elsewhere, has as much to do with real production as a roulette wheel has to do with the world's industry.

"There is no valid reason why we ever should know hard times in this country. Panics and hard times come from unwise economic legislation, or from overexpansion, following a period of prosperity, when they are precipitated by the speculators who hope to buy something at one price and sell it at a higher price, regardless of its actual value.

"The slump comes when they cannot find the other buyers.

"Legitimate promotion and speculation are wide apart, but people will confound them. Substantially all speculation at least claims as its basis the success of legitimate promotion and development.

"We have everything here with which to make good times, and nothing here except unwise politicians to make bad times. Sensible, not sensational, business legislation is what we need. If, as a nation, we could get over the bargain-counter habit we should be doing very well indeed.

"This struggle to get all we can and give as little as we can is not good business—we should be willing to pay a fair price to others and take a fair price from others. More money can be made on a large output at a small profit than on a small output at a large profit if there is a potential market for the production.

"Quantity in production at small profit is of greater general benefit because it reaches greater numbers of people, and in turn creates greater employment, which in its turn makes wider markets. Wages are kept down by the bargain hunter, who endeavors to pay less than it is worth for any commodity or service.

"The consumer would have everything in his own hands if he but realized it. It is the consumer who establishes the price of labor. A boycott on cut prices would do more to raise wages than a boycott on non-union products.

"Some discouraging experiences have been recorded in the history of this nation's business. Business as often does not pay because it is unfairly treated as because it is badly managed.

"Why should business continually be attacked? Success ought to be admired and emulated, not condemned. Every one of those condemning it is himself trying to achieve it.

"It is a curious thing that the demagogues never talk about the losers among business men. Years of preparation and vast investments may result in ruin. The man who does not win gets no attention.

"But the man who, through intelligence and hard work, wins a big profit instantly becomes a mark.

"That's what's the matter with us. It has been that tendency which has made us suffer at a time when we, of all the world, should not be suffering.

"We are the luckiest nation on the surface of the earth. We ought to be congratulating ourselves and doing our best to help one another. All employers should be willing to give a living wage to their employes and all employes should be willing to give generous service for the money they are paid. All consumers and users of service or commodities should be eager to pay a fair price for others' goods and service, and then they can get a fair price for their own. The railroads should give good service and the public should pay fair rates for it.

"We can't have good railroads and other necessary service unless we allow these utilities to charge enough to make maintenance at the maximum of efficiency possible in their service.

"What we want to do is to dissipate the pall of gloomy smoke which has drifted across the ocean from the European battlefields and settled on this nation's psychology.

"If the railroads were moving as they were in 1906 there would be no unemployment here, and there is every economic reason why they should be in better shape now than they were then, for really there is now more work than there was then for them to do.

"People want them to do it, too, but will not enable them to provide for themselves facilities with which to do it by taking from their shoulders the unwise restrictions which are hampering them. How can improved service be given, higher wages be paid, more paid for material and supplies, without proper rates to meet operating cost and enable the operating companies to get money to extend and provide for increasing demands?

"Rates which are too low are as unfair as rates which are too high.

"But prices cannot steadily be decreased without some underlying and good cause. When a newly discovered scientific method makes it possible, well and good; but rates and prices cannot be reduced every time a new year rolls around.

"We have been led astray by theorists until the idea is prevalent among many that in some unrevealed way corporations, especially transportation corporations, can put wages up indefinitely and cut costs down indefinitely.

"When a manufacturer raises wages it is regarded as a reasonable thing for him to increase prices, but the nation has got into the habit of expecting railways to continually reduce rates, just as it has got into the habit of expecting other public utilities continually to reduce rates, because our nation has been so prolific of men of new ideas and improved methods that have accomplished marvels in the direction of decreasing costs and increasing output.

"Instead of listening to every one seeking notoriety by attacking property or corporations, every constructive mind in this country should endeavor to aid in getting accurate information concerning actual facts before the people. Many of them have been wrongly informed. Many of them belong to an unassimilated mass, and are easy victims of the legislator or the man who wants to be a legislator and who appeals to ignorance and prejudice.

"Ninety per cent. of the attacks on wealth are made by those who do not comprehend wealth. John D. Rockefeller could not cash in many millions by liquidation if every one else were liquidating at the same time.

"His wealth does not consist of money, but of properties which get their value from production and employment of labor and which have little or no liquidating value except as going concerns. The moment they cease to produce their value is gone.

"The big telephone plants, electric light plants, and public service corporations generally are worth and actually represent the investment of millions of dollars as activities, but they have small liquidation values save as going concerns.

"I lately have read a novel which tells of Rockefeller cashing in a thousand millions in gold. As a matter of fact, he could do it no more than you or I could.

"The wealth, the revenue, of the country consists of the difference between what is paid for its raw material and what is paid by the ultimate consumer for the finished product, which is manufactured from the raw material.

"Our business men must learn that they can charge $1.50 only for goods worth $1.50, and our workers must come to understand that they can charge $1.50 only for labor which actually is worth $1.50.

"No large class of society can get any permanent benefit to itself if it comes at the expense of any other class of society.

"No one belives in high wages any more than I do. I should be glad to see every employe of the Bell Telephone Company get twice as much as he is getting for his work if the public were willing to pay enough for its telephone service to make this possible.

"The perfection of the wireless telephone is a great step in scientific advance. It should be the effort of an enlightened American public to see to it that by following the right economic course we are able to take full advantage of it."

Belgium Used as a Milch-Cow for Germany

sels. Their special duty, in time of war, is to take care of the wounded. The German Governor General wished to turn them into some kind of a charity organization. They objected and claimed the protection secured to them by the Red Cross conventions. The German Governor General tore up that "scrap of paper," and on April 14, 1915, ordered the Belgian Red Cross to turn over all its money, property, and archives to Count von Hatzfelt. The Belgian Red Cross declined to do so, whereupon the Governor General proceeded to carry out his order by military force and to take over all the property, including the cash.

It may be pleasant to hear that the Germans are making good use of the stolen property, but I am inclined to think that if Mr. McClellan had known the facts in the case he would have omitted all mention of the subject, or would himself have frankly condemned it. My statement in regard to this matter may be verified by the skeptical by referring to the protest which has been made, not only by the Belgian Red Cross, but also by the International Red Cross Committee, whose office is in Switzerland.

It is hardly necessary to say much about the destruction of Louvain. The world has long ago made up its mind on that matter. Any one who wants to believe the German version, as given by Mr. McClellan, is at liberty to do so, but the majority of thinking people will probably accept the version as given by Lord Bryce, the Belgian Commission of Inquiry, and other sources, including recently the report of an Austrian priest published in the Dutch paper Di Tijd, namely, that Louvain was wantonly destroyed. Mr. McClellan thinks that less than one-sixth of the town was destroyed. Cardinal Mercier says: "At Louvain the third part of the buildings are down; 1,074 dwellings have disappeared; on the town land and in the suburbs 1,823 houses have been burned." The reader may form his own opinion as to which of these two witnesses is likely to be the better informed on the subject.

Mr. McClellan calls attention to the fact that "the pictures in the Cathedral" (by which he means the Church of St. Pierre) "were saved at the risk of their lives by German soldiers." This seems to be true, for according to the evidence of Professor van der Essen, Professor of History of the University of Louvain, "the present Burgomaster of Louvain, who is a professor of our university, went straight to the choir, after the burning of the church, to see whether the two Van der Weydens and the Thierry Bouts had been burned. He discovered them well packed up and ready to be conveyed to the station and thence straight to Germany."

Space does not permit comment on all the errors into which Mr. McClellan has been led by his German guides. His naïveté is indicated even in minor matters, as, for example, when he tells us that the Germans have restored the old Flemish names of the towns, "Louvain becomes Löwen, Liè becomes Lüttich." As a matter of fact Löwen and Lüttich are German names, the Flemish equivalents are Leuven and Luik.

My object in writing this article is to call attention to the fact that the Belgians under German rule are in even worse plight than they were a year ago. Germany is running Belgium for military purposes and for revenue only. Germany has burned and pillaged scores of Belgian towns and villages. She has massacred thousands of inoffensive Belgian men, women and children. She has stifled all Belgian trade and commerce. She is collecting from impoverished Belgians a regular tax of 480,000,000 francs, (about $96,000,000,) a year. Besides occasional "extras"—and, after that, she leaves the Belgians to starvation.

War Brings Lost Splendor to English Letters

Simplicity and Nobility Like That of Elizabethan Age, Says Cosmo Hamilton, Now Must Take the Place of Artificiality and Cheapness

By Joyce Kilmer.

THE war is driving English literature backward. It is driving it back to the "spacious days" of Queen Elizabeth. The new era of English literature will be greater than any which has come between it and the death of Shakespeare.

It was Cosmo Hamilton who told me this—Lieutenant Cosmo Hamilton of the Royal Naval Air Service. He is the author of "The Blindness of Virtue" and many another successful novel and play, and some years ago he was conspicuous as editor of The London World, a paper to which Lord Roberts contributed his famous series of pleas for national preparedness. Mr. Hamilton is making a brief visit to New York and found time to make to me some extraordinarily optimistic prophecies of the future of English letters.

"English literature is doing the retrograde act," he said, as he paced up and down his pleasant apartment in the neighborhood of Columbus Circle. "The inevitable swing of the pendulum is affecting literature as it is affecting everything else.

"You see, our writers had gone as far in one direction as it was possible for them to go. A certain sort of literature, the literature of psychological analysis, had been brought up to the highest pitch possible by men like Bernard Shaw.

"Now that sort of thing is as dead as the dodo. The smell of blood has driven it away. We are going back to the simple and sincere and direct kind of writing which we knew generations ago.

"What happened when the Titanic went down is happening over again, but on a tremendous scale. Then, you remember, all the people in that great crowd of effete and overcivilized went down on their knees and prayed. So now all our writers, whether they have been accustomed to write like Nietzsche, or like Charles Garvice, or like Sir Oliver Lodge, are going down on their knees and praying. In English literature God's day has come again."

I asked Mr. Hamilton to give me some specific examples of what he meant.

"Well," he said, thoughtfully, "the English author has given up his pen to take up a sword—not only figuratively, but literally. All the authors who are physically able to do so are serving their country one way or another. They no longer are merely artists, they have become men.

"There is John Masefield, the poet who wrote 'The Everlasting Mercy' and 'The Widow in the By Street'; he is serving with the Red Cross. Compton Mackenzie, the author of 'Carnival' and 'Sinister Street' is in the Dardanelles. A. E. W. Mason is the Captain of a Manchester regiment. W. B. Maxwell is a Lieutenant in the Royal Fusiliers.

"Somerset Maugham is with the Red Cross. Lord Dunsany, the poet, is with the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers. Hector Munro is a Corporal. Stephen Gwynne, the Irish poet and M. P., is a Lieutenant, and Patrick MacGill, whose 'The Children of the Dead End' made a great impression in England and the United States, is a private.

"Now, for these men to give up their purely literary interests and go out on active service is bound to have its effect on their work. And the writers who cannot be at the front will nevertheless find that a great change has come over their attitude toward life and literature.

"I don't mean that English literature will grow more warlike. No one will have the audacity to attempt to reproduce war in fiction when the reality of war has been so terribly close to us all. What I mean is that the tremendous moral shock of the war is bringing all our literature back to a humbler level.

"We shall all walk with our two feet on the solid earth, instead of with our heads in skies of our own imagining. There will be less intellectual pride, less skepticism, less individualism."

"Then the war," I suggested, "will bring democracy back to England?"

"Not democracy," said Mr. Hamilton, energetically. "All shibboleths like 'democracy' will go! We will hear nothing more of 'democracy,' 'autocracy,' and all that sort of rubbish! We will become not more democratic but more human. Writers will be writers, not artists. They will cut their hair, and stop wearing funny hats and funny morals.

"We have all become much humbler," said Mr. Hamilton. "We are trying to interpret once more the inarticulate cry which has gone up unnoticed for many years—the cry for spiritual things instead of artistic things.

"We have had so many artistic things! Futurism, Cubism, Post-Impressionism, Imagism, Vorticism—I cannot catalogue them all!

"Now all these things are forgotten. They have given place to a sort of desire, a very humble desire, to give comfort rather than mental dry food. You see, our land will be full of widows and the fatherless. And they won't want little Imagiste poems or Futuristic paintings or elaborate psychological studies in the form of fiction. They will want something that they can lean on, something that will comfort them.

"And that can only be provided for them by writers who are willing to go back and assume the humbleness of heart and mind which characterized their great predecessors in English letters. No longer can literature be a sort of sky-scraper with the first twelve stories empty and a man screaming on the roof.

"Our literary stock in trade will in future be sincerity, instead of insincerity. We shan't juggle words like mountebanks in a music hall, we shan't phrase-make and coin words. We shall say something simply instead of nothing elaborately.

"How can it be otherwise? We are living among the debris of civilization. And all among the ruins of cathedrals and railway stations and poets' houses lie the broken remains of shibboleths and cant and catchwords!

"This war has done more for literature than any one yet can comprehend.

Cosmo Hamilton.

It will have the same effect upon books, as the laundry has upon the scented handkerchiefs of the effete—it will wash them clean.

"We are up against the root facts of life. The long nights we've spent shoulder to shoulder with rough men, simple boys from the backwoods, little shopkeepers to whom the war has been a sort of physical joy, having let them out for a holiday—these very genuine things, among them being stars and frost and the sun, having forced us to see at first hand all the things we have either accepted second hand or not believed at all. And don't you think that the effect of all this will show in our literature?

"There will be a recrudescence of simplicity in literature, and therefore a recrudescence of great literature. For the simplest art is the greatest art.

"This war may be followed by a period marked by as great expressions of the soul of man as those which make the age of Queen Elizabeth stand out in the history of literature, alight with the same fires of idealism. Some critics say that our literature is retrograding. It is retrograding—to the Elizabethan era.

"The war has swept away so much rubbish, and taken away the appetite for rubbish. In London today you could not bring out the work of a new decadent poet, no matter how brilliant and picturesquely wicked he might be. It would not be tolerated. And the poseurs, the ultra-modern painters and sculptors and poets, the little clever people, are all dead."

"Are any of them literally dead?" I asked. "Did any of them go to war?"

"Not at all!" said Mr. Hamilton. "It was not the little clever writers who went to war. They stayed safe at home. They are not dead literally, but they are dead in theory. So far as any attention they might receive from the public is concerned, so far as their fame is concerned, they are as dead as a fish left behind on dry land by the receding waters.

"The war's immediate effect upon the publishers will be to cause a dearth of books. This will cause them to republish the writings of the poets, novelists, and dramatists of earlier generations. And so the next generation will have a familiarity with great literature which our own has lacked.

"Then, too, so far as England is concerned, the mercenary side of literature must undergo a change. The tax on paper, which has been established to meet the appalling expense of the war, will drive out of existence the enormous mass of cheap novels, newspapers, and magazines.

"We have felt the war's effect on newspapers already. About thirty weekly journals have suspended publication, and several morning and evening papers.

"The Daily Citizen suspended its London edition in March and its Manchester edition in June. It lives now only in weekly form, as The Independent. The Daily Herald, once a daily, is now a weekly.

"The Daily Call, which was started after the war began, made its last appearance in April. The Echo and Evening Chronicle, a similar but more elaborate publication, died after its thirty-sixth issue.

"The Midland Evening News is dead, and so is the daily edition of The Cork Free Press. Of eighteen special war periodicals not more than half a dozen are now left. The Sporting Sun, a Saturday evening newspaper which came into existence when the evening papers began to curtail their sporting news, lasted for only two or three issues.

"But the most important effect of this tax will be in doing away with the great flood of cheap paper-bound novels, most of them absolutely worthless. This will help us to clean up the market.

"We are setting our house in order. We can no longer be cynical and sophisticated; we have become as little children.

"The imagination of the nations has been stirred. The living spark of spirit which was latent in every one has burst into flame. And this gives God another chance with us—or us another chance with God.

"The terrible cannonade has blown away the cloud which hung between religion and the Deity. People are seeing things straight now. And it is perfectly natural—pathetic as it may seem to Bernard Shaw and his kind—that the intellectuals, as well as the so-called ignorant people, have received an appalling shock, and are alike asking themselves what is the meaning of this hideous debacle.

"To consider it to be due to the blood-drunkenness of one man insane for power is foolish. It is merely the swing of the pendulum. People climb up to a great height and are physically unfit to look down again without growing giddy and falling.

"Those who survive will find themselves down at the bottom, where their grandfathers were. And their grandfathers wrote better books, far better books, than they have written—their books were truer, simpler, and more sincere.

"Honesty will come back into literature, as it will come back into politics, science, and religion. And once you get honesty into art, you get great art."

Are All Americans Learning to Play Games?

Growing Popularity of Tennis, Golf, and Recreation Centres Indicates That Present Generation's Impulse Is Strong for the Outdoor Life

National Golf Champion on Growth of the Play Idea.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As you say, there seems to be a growing love of amateur play, but it seems to me that it is a part of the larger movement which is responsible for the half-holiday on Saturday for example. In other words, I believe there is going on in this country a realization that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." And so, while golf and tennis are increasing in popularity and probably drawing people away from professional games, still the general increase of interest in and time taken for recreation more than makes up for such a conflict.

ROBERT A. GARDNER.

Chicago, Ill.

WHAT'S the matter with baseball?" is a question often asked nowadays. It has been answered in more ways than one.

"I can give the real explanation," remarked one of a group of men who had been watching the recent national tennis tournament at Forest Hills, L. I. "We Americans are outgrowing our lazy habit of watching professional players of games. We are learning to play ourselves. A few of us learned years ago; today all of us are getting into the outdoor life. The increasing popularity of such sports as tennis and golf is slowly but certainly dooming the mere sporting spectacles like baseball."

The others in the group agreed with him unanimously. Later several leaders in amateur sports were asked by THE TIMES for their opinions on the proposition that professional games were being relegated to a back seat by the growing love of active outdoor play by the present generation of Americans. A typical reply was that of the tennis expert, Richard N. Williams, 2d, of Philadelphia, ex-champion of America. His letter, printed in full in another column, contained the following:

"American men, as well as women, are no longer content to watch an athletic contest. They wish to play something themselves."

Many observers, while agreeing in part, would not generalize so positively as this. But nobody with his eyes open can doubt the spread of "the outdoor idea." We are learning to play. The fact is demonstrated every day at three score and more golf courses within easy reach of New York City, tens of thousands of tennis courts on which the most popular of all outdoor games is being played from Maine to California, the boating clubs that line our sea shores and inland water fronts, and, finally, though not of least importance, the municipal recreation centres in our cities and towns.

"I believe the time will come," said George Gordon Battle, President of the Parks and Playgrounds Association, in answering THE TIMES question, "when a city will regard it as disgraceful for its children to be starved of their natural right to play as for them to be starved of food necessary for physical sustenance."

The grip of tennis upon the public was evidenced at the Forest Hills tournament. What a contrast with the national event as staged a decade ago at Newport! Imagine yourself an old-timer who had watched championship tennis on the Casino courts in the days of Wrenn, Clothier, even Larned, returning after a long absence to see the final matches in their new setting. Instead of a sleepy lawn party, whose decorum was punctuated by gentle hand-clapping, you find yourself viewing from a high grandstand gruelling contests which elicit the wildest applause.

The game of tennis in 1915, though its rules are essentially the same, is a new game, and the spectators have a new point of view. They watch the experts not as a steady every-day diversion, but as a rare lesson in the sport which they themselves follow. It is a safe guess that nine out of ten onlookers, including the small children, are players more or less proficient. That is why they are sympathetic in their applause or cheers, never derisive.

Tennis crowds, in short, typify the new outdoor spirit in Americans. That the national tournament attracted as many as 10,000 spectators on the closing days was testimony of national interest in the game. Among the thousands were some who had traveled all the way from California to see the experts from that State compete; incidentally, they saw the youngest of their favorites, a youth not yet turned 20, win the championship. Others had come from the far South and hundreds from the near-by Atlantic and New England sections. The crowd was truly national—as much so as any throng that ever witnesses a world's series in baseball. In its way, too, it was quite as enthusiastic. In fact, the comment was made in several newspaper reports that the crowd actually resembled a baseball audience, so great was the tension at times and so high ran the excitement.

But, argues the man who clings to his belief that baseball retains its old hold, the national tennis tourney was an unusual spectacle; as an annual event it commanded interest out of proportion to the ordinary appeal of the game. On the contrary, the tennis spectacle did not tell half the story of the growing tennis enthusiasm throughout the country. Every small town now has its courts. The country clubs find it hard to build courts fast enough to keep up with the growing demand. In the city there have been fortunes made by promoters of for-hire courts, and it has become a problem to find room for enough tennis players in the public parks. The hired courts, by the way, are in many cases flooded and transformed into skating rinks after cold weather sets in, and the proprietors get their profits every month in the year from young New Yorkers, for whom healthful outdoor exercise has become a necessity.

Not so long ago tennis was regarded as a game for the leisurely well-to-do. You were liable to be hooted if you walked through a tenement district or a suburban mill town carrying a racquet. It is different now. In suburbs that never thought of having a country club you find clay courts maintained by neighborhood subscriptions. In the city parks there are tournaments in which participate children who never saw a private court. Graduates from the park courts have taken part in some of the leading events of the metropolitan district within the last two years. It would not be very remarkable for a player bred in Brownsville or Harlem, and trained in Prospect or Central Park, to win the national trophy within the next five years.

While tennis has always had possibilities of violent exercise, it is only of late that the leading players have seemed to carry strenuousness to extremes. This probably accounts for part of the game's increase in popularity. It has become more of a fight, less of a tea party exhibition. Johnston, McLoughlin, and Williams play a game so much more spirited than the tennis of two decades ago that the onlooker soon realizes why even the moderate age of 30 is coming to be regarded as far along for a tennis crack. At Forest Hills the doctors had to work nearly half an hour over one powerful athlete after a five-set match, so terrific had been the strain on him—and this athlete happened to be a famous football player, distinguished among those who knew him for his unusual strength and endurance!

Later, at the end of the tournament, cheering thousands saw the lithe McLoughlin totter to a chair after his losing match with the new champion. McLoughlin is 24 years old, Johnston under 20. The end of their battle reminded one more of a prize-ring finish than of an old-time tennis match. And the next day the newspapers told us how "youth must be served." Poor McLoughlin was retired by the critics at the venerable age of one score years and four!

It may be that tennis is becoming too violent. The doctors tell people with weak hearts not to play it. But only a few of us can be champions, so perhaps we will not tackle the game furiously enough to injure ourselves. We can find comfort in the case of the Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, who still plays good tennis at more than 70 years and was within the last five years a tournament partner of the late Anthony Wilding.

Then there is golf. Statistics showing the total number of golfers in America are not at hand, but consider these facts: In the New York district are at least sixty-seven golf clubs, belonging to the Metropolitan Golf Association. The members number about 20,000. A few more thousand play on the public courses; they have not been counted, but you will conclude they compose a vast army if you arise early enough some Sunday in Summer to see the 4 A. M. crowd at the first tee in Van Cortlandt Park.

Glance at the club lists of the Middle Western, Far Western, Southern, and other sectional golf associations; then calculate that almost every city of 10,000 inhabitants has, or is about to have, a country club and golf course—and you get an idea of the golf fever in America.

Anybody who still harbors delusions about golf being an old man's game should see the old men's grandchildren practicing their strokes. In many a club the leading players include boys under 18 years. Two years ago a seventeen-year-old was champion of one New Jersey club of 250 members. Remember Phil Carter of Bridgehampton, L. I., the interscholastic winner. And, finally, don't forget that Francis Ouimet won the open championship of America at the age of 20, defeating in the finals two of the world's greatest golfers, Ray and Vardon, in one of the most astonishing matches golf history has known.

Those who don't play golf say it is a game for the elderly. So it is. It's a game for anybody and everybody, old and young. Without ever subjecting the player to a physical strain, it furnishes gradually all the exercise needed; if you doubt it, try thirty-six or fifty-four holes in a day, and then count the aches in your muscles after the fifteen or more miles you have traveled. It certainly requires the highest skill. Watch an expert make a mashie stroke from a hundred yards, laying the ball within two yards of the hole, and you will decide that even the cleverest tennis strokes fall short of this one in delicacy.

No, there is no doubt about the fascination of golf, any more than about its fast growing popularity. And perhaps the chief reason it appeals to all ages is that the player's score depends not in the least upon the skill or endurance of an opponent. The fat man, the tired man, or the chronic duffer can pair with the expert, and both of them will (or should) enjoy the game.

To the Editor of The New-York Times:

I have watched the growth of tennis—and that of golf also. I have talked to men in sporting goods houses about it, and I am sure these games are growing at the expense of baseball, football, &c. The sales of athletic goods show this to be true. American men, as well as women, are no longer content to watch an athletic contest. They wish to play something themselves, and naturally many turn to tennis and golf. I have noticed the tendency in college sports; the students are now picking out sports which they can follow after graduation, instead of sports they cannot continue to follow, such as football and hockey.

The theory that actual playing of games is luring Americans away from professionally played spectacles is hardly debatable any longer. Even the baseball managers and promoters have admitted it within the last few months, in answering the query "What's the matter with baseball?" Incidentally, they have named the moving pictures as a contributing cause of decline in bleacher and grand-stand crowds.

Tennis and golf, of course, are not the only active sports that have lessened patronage of professional games. They are particularly mentioned herein because they happen to be pastimes whose advance in popular favor has been most notable in late years. Motoring, motor boating, water sports—all sorts of healthful outdoor recreations have come into wider demand. In the city, play centres, track races, and miscellaneous contests have attracted numberless boys and girls from the ball parks. The case of Newark, N. J., has been cited as proof of this in the past Summer. A new recreation park's opening was followed immediately by a waning of baseball attendance, and only a revolutionary cutting of the admission price to 10 cents saved the baseball situation for the remainder of the season. Similar happenings have been recorded elsewhere.

The President of the New York Parks and Playgrounds Association, Mr. Battle, in answering THE TIMES inquiry, had this to say about the development of the outdoor recreation idea in America:

"There is no doubt that there is a growing tendency on the part of the American people to take personal interest and part in outdoor sports. This movement extends to all ages and to all classes.

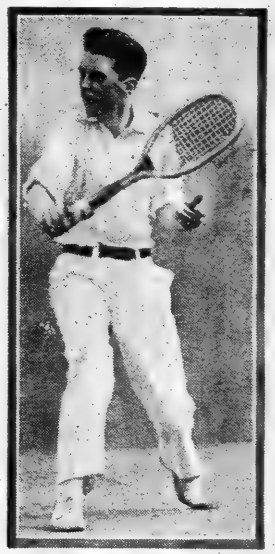
"The wonderful extension of the sport of golf in this country is a notable illustration. Even the small town now has its country club and golf club where tennis and golf are played. Many of these clubs are very reasonable in their charges, and the amusement is thus brought within the reach of persons of very moderate means. It is well known that devotees of golf are to be found at every age. I have seen a threesome composed of grandson, father, and grandfather, each of them playing a good game, with the result of the match sharply contested and in doubt up to the last.

"Along with the personal participation in sports goes a general interest in outdoor affairs. Our working people are beginning to spend their holidays more and more in the open air, after the fashion of the Continental peoples.

"Perhaps the most important development is the public recognition of the fact that children require play and recreation in the open air as a necessary factor in their development. The different States and municipalities are beginning slowly, but steadily, to recognize that it is no economy to cramp and dwarf the growing generation so as to produce a weak and stunted race. And not only from the standpoint of physical development is it necessary that children should have play and recreation, but it is even more necessary from the standpoint of mind and character. The dreams and aspirations of childhood, so necessary in developing the mental and moral forces of the child, can only exist where there is an opportunity for natural sport and recreation and the attendant communion with nature. These truths are being generally recognized. Our cities are full of playgrounds and recreation centres. Slowly we are beginning to learn that our schoolhouses can be used for this great purpose.

"So, on the whole, it is quite clear that there is a great movement in this country on the part of children and adults toward personal participation in sports and in outdoor recreations, such as walking, sailing, and the like. Along with this development has come a certain decline of interest in the mere watching of professional games. I do not at all deprecate or decry interest in professional sports. Any normal man or boy likes to see a good game of baseball or a good game of football; and it is far better for the man or boy to spend his afternoon in that way than in many other kinds of amusement. But it is still better if he will himself take part in some game, recreation, or sport which will develop him morally, mentally, and physically. I think, therefore, that it is a good sign for our country that our people are taking a more active part in outdoor pursuits, even if it entails a diminution in the attendance on professional games.

"As President of the Parks and Playgrounds Association of the City of New York I have watched the growing recognition on the part of the public that play and open air are as essential to children as food, and, in one sense, more essential. I believe the time will come when a city will regard it as disgraceful for its children to be starved of their natural right to play as for them to be starved of food necessary for physical sustenance. There is room for general public participation in sports and also for the professional games. But I do believe that the professional games have been overdone, and that sufficient importance has not been attached to the necessity for personal exercise and for taking part personally, especially by children, in outdoor sports and games. I believe that the American people are now on the right track in this matter, and that a proper proportion between amateur and professional sports and recreations is being reached."



R. Norris Williams.

A System That Didn't Quite Work

WELL, I didn't ask you to tell me what to do," retorted Mrs. Oldtimer at the supper table.

"That's a woman for you!" snorted Oldtimer. "You'd go along in the same old rut for a year. I know you didn't ask my advice, but you'd better take it. You don't seem able to help yourself. I tell you I can cure that woman."

"How would you go about it?" queried his wife interestedly.

Oldtimer snorted again. "System," he exploded. "System! That is the stuff. It will cure even a borrowing neighbor.

"Now, see here: just analyze this case. A woman who is eternally borrowing does it because she wants to get something for nothing, or because she's just naturally forgetful.

"When the lady comes to borrow anything from you hereafter just go to a little paper, which you will have hung on the wall, and mark that article down plainly. Do it so she can't fail to notice what you are at. If she wants to get something for nothing she'll know then that it's no use, because you can remind her to return all she has got. If she's just forgetful it'll serve to make her think she ought to try to remember better. In both cases she will return what she has borrowed. Try it and see."

It was three evenings later that Oldtimer remembered to ask after the success of his offered plan.

"Yes," admitted Mrs. Oldtimer, "I tried it."

"Didn't it do the business?" he asked.

"I will leave that to you," she went on. "I placed the little paper on the wall as you suggested, and when she came next morning to borrow the baking powder I marked it down, also the soda, and the washing powder, and the tea.

"This evening, just as I was getting supper, she came running over and said she had forgotten to get any eggs.

"Then she said: 'Mrs. Oldtimer, I've noticed you making that list of my borrowings for a day or so, and I thought it was such a splendid idea I just made one myself. Whenever I got anything from you I went straight home and marked it down on my list. It would be so nice to compare lists, I thought.

"'But Angela, my next to the oldest, was watching the baby in the kitchen and she let him get his hands on the list. That was the last of it. And so I wanted to know if I could borrow your list until I can copy off one for myself.'"

Mrs. Oldtimer paused. Oldtimer snorted.

"I wish you could handle the home affairs yourself," he grumbled. "I have enough to worry about at the office."

What the Gary School Plan Proposes and Does

Well-Known Educator Discusses in Detail the Wirt Method, Which Is to be Given a Further Trial in the Public Schools of New York City

In view of the controversy aroused by the proposition to adopt the Wirt plan in the New York public schools, this account of the Gary schools by a well-known educator, who is Head Master of the Tome School, is of especial interest at this time.

By Thomas S. Baker, Ph. D.

THE public school of today is not altogether an educational institution. It goes far beyond the function of giving instruction in the branches which make up its curriculum. It has taken on a social importance, further reaching than at any time in its history, and there are many reasons for believing that this tendency will become stronger. An effort is being made everywhere in this country, and especially in the large cities, to bring the public schools into closer relation with the life of the community. The time when the schoolhouse was merely a place where instruction was given for five or six hours a day has passed.

It is no longer a question of furnishing the boy with an education in the old-fashioned restricted sense, but the public expects that he be helped in the vocation which he may later adopt, that he be given shops and laboratories in which he may practice, that he be supplied with playgrounds, gymnasiums, swimming pools, that entertainments be provided for his amusement, and, not content with teaching and helping and amusing the boy, the public also demands that his parents be given an opportunity to improve and amuse themselves in his school building in the evening.

It has not been very long since people debated in some parts of the country whether it was the duty of the city and State to furnish free schools. They were not long in deciding that education should be supplied at the public expense. In those early days education meant something that had to do primarily with book learning, but gradually it was discovered that the difficulties which children in the large cities had to face could not be met merely by what they learned from books. The needs of the foreign children, of the poor children, went far beyond the limits of the conventional school, and gradually this feature was added to the curriculum and that phase of activity was included in the teacher's work, until now the giving of instruction is only a part of the function of the school which is maintained at public expense. Recently the social tendency has gone so far that in New York an effort has been made to have the school officials arrange that the children should be sent to the country at the public expense, for a part of their holiday.

Possibly this social movement in the schools has been carried further at Gary, Ind., than at any other place in the United States, or, as far as I know, at any place in the world. Mr. Wirt, the head of the schools in that city, has accepted a larger responsibility for his children than any public school man has ever undertaken. He recognizes that his children need many things that the ordinary school does not offer, and he has crowded into his scheme of education more of what might be called supplementary features than has ever before been attempted. His is the last development in the socializing of the schools. He is not only an educator, but he is a social reformer—a city worker. It is hard to think of any one going further in this direction than has Mr. Wirt. Certainly the tendency to extend the sphere of the school will halt for a while at this point.

But Mr. Wirt would feel very much aggrieved if one were to suggest, even remotely, that he is more of a social reformer than an educator. He claims that a school man dare not limit his efforts to teaching from books and hope to satisfy the demands of his office; that by making a child happier, by improving his physique, by giving him opportunities to work with his hands, and to learn how to do practical things, he is offering a higher form of education than has been thought of before. Possibly he is right. Time alone can tell whether what now seem to be side issues in the scheme of child training are really essentials in his mental development.

The first impression one gets of the Gary schools is that they are the creation of a man of tremendous enthusiasm and unbounded energy, but when one meets Mr. Wirt the former quality of enthusiasm seems to be outweighed by his energy.

He is a man of great poise who does little talking, but gives the impression of having unusual reserve force and strength of purpose. The silent, forceful Superintendent does not appear to be reflected in the scheme of schools he has created. No one but a great enthusiast could have thought of so many novel plans for helping and amusing the children. At the same time one realizes that only a man of strong personality could have persuaded the public and school authorities that so many and such expensive innovations could be justifiable. It is quite true that he would not have been able to secure the money for what must have seemed to be extravagances had he not been able to show that the buildings which he demanded could be used by two or three times as many persons as have ever before been put into buildings of similar extent.

The school houses are models of architecture, they are substantial, they are well arranged, they are impressive in their exterior, and are maintained in an admirable manner. The shops are equipped with machinery of modern design and of great variety. The laboratories look businesslike. The playgrounds are for the real amusement of the children. On every hand one gets the impression of lavish thoughtfulness for the pupils. Educational traditions, textbooks, established courses of study are thrown to the winds because they may not appeal to the boys and girls, and in discussing the Gary schools, whether dealing with the school plant or courses of study, this must always be the starting point. Give the child what he likes, do not attempt to force upon him methods to which he may object.

If one bears this in mind one is able to perceive not only the extent of the departures which Mr. Wirt has made in the construction of his buildings, but also his innovations in pedagogy. The question, of course, soon arises whether this pursuit of happiness, this cult of the easy, is going to furnish the material which will make hard-working and accurate scholars and produce thoughtful men. Another query which arises in one's mind is this: Is not the Gary conception too big? Is it, after all, the province of the school to attempt to do for its pupils all that Mr. Wirt has undertaken? The answer to both these questions must be, Time alone can tell.

In the City of Gary the pride in the school is everywhere evident. The driver of the jitney car which takes you up and down the main street tells you without much enthusiasm and, as though the statement were a matter of course, that Gary has the best schools in the world. He volunteers the information that things are different from the time when he went to school. He begins to enumerate what they have out there: the menagerie, the garden, the wading pond, the swimming pool, the different shops, the entertainments in the Auditorium—all of these things have kindled his imagination, though he confesses that he does not quite see what they have to do with a boy's schooling.

At the hotel, (which is now overcrowded, for Gary is beginning to recover from its recent lean years,) the boy who takes your bag tells you with much pride that he goes to the Gary schools, and when you begin to ask him about his course of study it seems that the shop work and the drafting have made a greater impression on him than the more conventional high school studies. He is not quite sure as to his algebra textbook or how far he has gone in this study. Yes, he has had German, but he did not get along very well in this language.

It is not impossible that this condition of mind may be somewhat typical. The things that are making the strongest impression upon the Gary children are not what they learn from books. On one of the days that I spent in Gary the weather was exceedingly hot. It was a holiday. A good part of the forenoon I passed with one of Mr. Wirt's assistants. In the afternoon I went to see the Superintendent himself. While I was talking with Mr. Swartz, the assistant, there was a group of girls and boys, little and big, in a neighboring room who were receiving a class music lesson. Some played the violin, some played mandolins, and one or two brass instruments.

It was hard to talk educational psychology with the Assistant Superintendent while these young people were torturing some of the popular melodies into shapes that were almost unrecognizable, but one could not help but feel that educational psychology was futile in the face of a situation like this—when children were willing to give up their holiday to come to school, without any compulsion, and follow the directions of the music teacher with the greatest eagerness. It was a melancholy performance from an artistic point of view, but the zeal and serious expression of the young people made it a noteworthy index of what Mr. Wirt is accomplishing.

Then again in the afternoon as I went to see the Superintendent I observed a group of four or five young girls who were on the way to the same school building as I. The temperature was up in the nineties; the streets of the flat prairie city were sun-baked; there was not a breath of air stirring. The girls were on their way to school to take a swim. Again I felt that the school was accomplishing something that was almost better than an educational task.

To a school man who has been brought up in the belief that the old-fashioned methods of conducting schools are by no means effete the Gary system seems to be an exceedingly interesting experiment, but still an experiment. Its social accomplishments are beyond question. It is taking the children of the very large foreign element, poorly housed, poorly cared for, and giving to them a day full of absorbing interests which is made up of classroom work, manual work, and play. It is literally cleaning them up, giving them a very happy life, and doing a great deal toward modeling them into American citizens.

It is, of course, a great advantage to the system that the children seem to enjoy their school and their school work. However, in making a comparison of his schools with the schools of former days, Mr. Wirt draws a picture whose colors are too dark. To most of us the period that we spent in the primary school and the grammar school does not appear in retrospect a very gloomy portion of our lives. As we reflect upon it, it is hard to bring back many impressions of any kind. This makes us feel that in some way or other there must have been a great waste of time. We did not get much out of our early school days. Few of us gained from this period of our lives what we ought to have gained. There is still something wrong with elementary instruction. Its chief fault consists in the wastefulness of the children's time.

Mr. Wirt thinks he has found a solution. He says in substance: "Let us crowd more things into the life of the child, let us give him more impressions and a greater variety of impressions." Unquestionably Mr. Wirt is on the right path. One illustration is sufficient to show the futility of the curriculum of the average public primary and grammar school. A good part of eight years is devoted to the study of arithmetic, to juggling with arithmetical processes most of which are forgotten. The child would be just as well off at the age of 14 if he had studied arithmetic for only five or six years and had filled in the rest of the time with other things which would be more stimulating.

Mr. Wirt introduces foreign languages and science and a great deal of shop work in these early years. It is possible that the child does not get much exact information out of these courses, but he is certainly no worse off than if he had put in all his time on the deadening courses of the old-fashioned curriculum. Mr. Wirt claims that the impressions which the child gets in this way give him a "background" for the study of these subjects when he enters the high school. The foreign language has a more familiar look and sound, physics and chemistry are not entirely unthought-of subjects.

The keynote of Mr. Wirt's system of instruction is to allow the child to study those things which he likes to learn in the manner in which he likes to learn them. The recitations should be conducted along the lines which the child suggests. Formal textbooks are discouraged. It is to be observed that the idea of the Superintendent is always not to give the pupil what past experience says is best for him, or what the Superintendent or teacher thinks is best for him, but always what the child himself wants. It is this point of view that leads one to believe that the Gary schools as a means of furnishing an education are still in an experimental stage.

Does the pupil receive the mental discipline that is best calculated to develop his mind if he is allowed to proceed in this very casual manner? Is it possible to acquire power of concentration and application if one follows always the line of least resistance? Headmasters of secondary schools find that the greatest fault of their pupils is that they do not know how to study or to apply themselves to their tasks, and a boy or young man who has not acquired this ability has but little chance of getting the kind of education that he ought to have. In the Gary schools the children are not expected to do much studying at home, or, in fact, to do much work on their own account at all. It would seem hardly likely that a student could acquire independence of thought under these conditions.

It is quite probable that Mr. Wirt recognizes the serious difficulty of inducing public school children to study outside of school hours, and he says in effect that his system will place very little responsibility upon the home and the parents. He will have his school day last from 8:15 in the morning until 4:15 in the afternoon. He will attempt to do nearly the whole work of educating the child within the school walls. The distractions to which the young people are exposed certainly justify such an undertaking, and the Gary plan may be the lesser of two evils, but certainly an ideal scheme is not complete unless emphasis is placed upon private study and independent thinking.

Mr. Wirt claims that by introducing into the lower grades subjects which are usually taught in the high schools he will be able to save his students two years. If this is true his methods should be accepted enthusiastically. Something will certainly have to be done to reduce the time that is now required in educating men for professional careers. A boy graduates usually from the high school at 18, from college at 21. If he then goes to a professional school he will be 25 or 26 years of age before he receives his final diploma, and he can hardly hope to get started on the real business of earning a living until he is 27 or 28.

In theory Mr. Wirt is unquestionably right in his expectation that he will be able to shorten the school life of the boy. In practice the success of his method will depend very largely upon the ability of his teachers. In this connection it should be said that we are in danger of talking too much about system and too little about the ability of the individual teacher. A good schoolmaster can teach successfully and inspire his pupils whether he follows the Gary system or whether he follows no system at all. A great teacher does not need the complex equipment that Mr. Wirt demands, in order to bring out what is best in his pupils, although he may be helped by the lavish furnishings of his laboratories, shops, auditoriums and playgrounds. There is also the danger, however, that the pupils may be distracted from the prime object of getting an education by the complexity of the Gary organization.

The usual conception of the Gary schools is that they are designed primarily for vocational and practical training. Mr. Wirt denies that this is the aim of his course of study. It is true that he begins manual training in the lower grades and he attempts to give to this course a real practical value, in that he expects the pupils in the shops to manufacture the things that they actually use in the school. He demands that the girls who are studying domestic science shall conduct a lunchroom and prepare and sell the luncheons in a businesslike way. He requires the boys in the printing shops to print the school publications, those in the carpenter shop to make some of the school furniture. However, when he starts his young children in these practical courses he has something else in mind besides the making of good cooks, housekeepers, carpenters, and printers.

He thinks there is a psychological advantage, a real educational value in the pursuit of these subjects. He claims that the life which children are forced to lead in the cities is an artificial manner of living, and the object of the school should be to eliminate some of these unnatural conditions and to restore the children to saner surroundings. By giving the child work to do with his hands he believes he is helping him to a more natural, one might say a more primitive, way of living. He does not think that vocational training, strictly speaking, should be undertaken until the boy or girl is far advanced in the high school course. He objects to the idea expressed in the term, "prevocational" training. His pupils who work in the shops do so not for any benefit in the trade which they may adopt later in life.

Mr. Wirt does not seem to be a modern "educationist" in that he wishes to abandon the many traditional subjects which are now being attacked from all sides. He is proud that his boys can do in the third year of high school what he calls college physics. His work in Latin is satisfactory to him, even Latin prose composition, a subject that is usually taught in a most inadequate manner in the public schools, causes him no uneasiness. The course which is given in the four upper classes of the Gary schools, (Mr. Wirt objects to dividing schools into primary, grammar, and high schools; the little and big children are all in one building,) he says, is governed by the requirements which the State of Indiana exacts of all high schools.

One cannot but feel that the Superintendent's first interest lies in the lower classes. Apparently he has no misgivings as to the work of his older pupils, but with them there are fewer opportunities for innovations and educational experiments. However, the success of his entire system depends upon the results which are obtained by the graduates of the upper classes. If they are well trained and intelligent students, and especially if they are able to complete their courses a year or two earlier than the graduates of other high schools, there could be no better testimony to the efficiency of the system.

Mr. Wirt makes great claims for his methods. He has made some daring innovations. He has set aside many things which educational tradition has regarded as essential. It is only fair that the results which he has obtained should be thoroughly tested. There are some things which even a casual observer finds in Gary that make him feel that, in spite of the very great benefits which the community has obtained from the schools, Mr. Wirt has not yet discovered a magical method which is going to take the place of painstaking and hard work on the part of the students and teachers.

In spite of Mr. Wirt's assertion that the vocational idea is only a secondary one with him, at every turn one feels that utilitarian ideals are placed ahead of the demand for thorough scholarship. The enthusiasm of the school is a fine thing, but there is a possibility of "overboosting," and when it comes to a question of books and learning and scholarship there is danger in glorifying too much the hustling, practical ideal. Even in the matter of teaching English one finds the horizon of the instructors rather limited. One hears a great deal about "vocational English." This is certainly pushing the practical conception of school work to a point that is altogether unreasonable. The instruction in English should not concern itself with the vocations or trades or professions. Good usage and what is good in literature are sufficient aims for the instructor, and it is stultifying for him to divide his work into departments and to say that this kind of writing is good in this line of business and that kind of writing is good in the other kind of business.

It is also shocking to find that the follow-up letters of the breakfast food manufacturers, of the paintmakers, of the automobile builders are held up as models of writing which young people should copy. This rawness and the ambition to be all things to all men is certainly very startling, and it would be unfair to judge the Gary School by strict standards of scholarship, if their Superintendent himself did not claim that he was contributing something new and important to the art or science of training young men and women.

He is bringing his plan of work to the greatest city in America. There are a good many people who have serious misgivings as to its efficacy. Its social value is beyond question. Its pedagogic excellence is still to be determined. On this account, and in order to satisfy those who have doubts, it would be a good plan, and one that is entirely fair, if the students in the highest class of the Gary school should be required to submit to examinations which should be set by some entirely unprejudiced board of examiners, such, for example, as the College Entrance Examination Board. If the young students are able to acquit themselves creditably in these tests the Gary system will have more than justified itself.

It is probable that Mr. Wirt would never have gained a hearing for himself if he had not been able to demonstrate that the adoption of his advice would mean a financial saving. This is his most obvious and possibly his most original contribution. As is well known, he is able to conduct two separate schools in the same building simultaneously. In other words, if the capacity of a building is normally five hundred, by the adjustment of the schedule he is able to take care of a thousand pupils. In the large cities, where the school population is increasing every year by the thousands, the cost of the new buildings which are necessary to house the growing numbers is a very serious financial question.

The cities must adopt the Gary system in its present form, or with some modification, in order to get the full value out of the investments which they have made in their equipment. If Mr. Wirt has done nothing else, he has shown that as a business matter the schools are not getting all they should out of the money that has been expended. In Gary Mr. Wirt is not content with using a school building for two separate schools. He also employs the equipment for adults at night. While the attendance at the day schools is about 5,000, the enrollment at night is nearly 7,000. To be sure, a good many of those who come in the evening are foreigners who wish to improve their English, but the excellent shops are also strong attractions for the adult pupils.

This method of conducting night classes in the public school buildings is being adopted more and more in other cities, but it would be a good plan if much of the vocational training were transferred to the evening sessions and the day schools were devoted to the more general studies. If the problem of vocational training is ever solved, it will be done through the night schools or continuation schools.

Some of the writers on the Gary system in their enthusiasm have declared that Mr. Wirt has solved one of the most difficult educational questions, namely, that of holding pupils through the period which lies between the seventh grade and the second year of the high school. This is the time when the largest percentage of children stop their training. Much thought has been given to finding a means of keeping the pupils beyond this stage in their education. From the fact that the children seem to like their school and its methods and that the whole emphasis is not placed upon what a child learns from books, it ought to be possible to correct this evil. But the system has been in operation such a short time that it is impossible to make a definite statement in regard to this important matter. If Mr. Wirt has solved this question it should be another important item in the count in his favor.

When the plan is put into operation in New York its results will be watched with great interest. Will the complaints in regard to the inefficiency of the schools grow less? Will the spelling of schoolboys improve? Will the business men stop saying that the schools are unable to furnish them with employes who are accurate and well trained in the fundamentals? Time alone will answer these questions. Certainly there is great room for improvement. The output of the average American high school is far from satisfactory. The question arises whether the Gary methods are going to give to boys and girls a greater appreciation of the necessity of really thorough work. If so, let us welcome them heartily and let us pray that they will soon find application in all the schools of the country.

If the Gary schools are simply places where the children are kept pleasantly entertained during their school life, and when they leave know a little about a variety of different things—about carpentry, plumbing, and the innumerable forms of manual training—and still do not know anything thoroughly, the Gary idea will have proved itself to be merely another one of the many Utopian educational schemes.

No one nowadays with an educational program which he wishes to have the public adopt goes very far in his presentation before he refers to German education. So it is with Mr. Wirt. Some of the features of his schools he wishes to justify by an appeal to German methods, but it should be borne in mind that the foundation of all German educational work is thoroughness.

Unpublished Letters of Washington Irving

Many Never Before in Print Appear in His Correspondence with Henry Brevoort, Telling of Walter Scott, Dolly Madison, and Other Celebrities

THOSE who delight in getting more intimate glimpses of great writers than are afforded by the books of these supermen of literature, with their fictitious characters and invented episodes, will find golden treasure, treasure never before spread before the eyes of the general reader, in "The Dolly Madison.

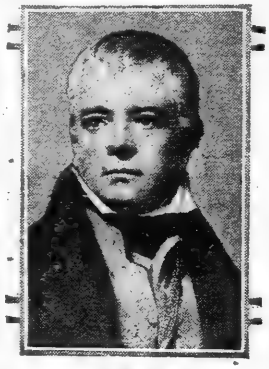
Letters of Washington Irving to Henry Brevoort," just published by G. P. Putnam's Sons. The edition is a limited one, consisting of only 255 copies, of which 225 have been placed on sale.

The volume consists of about one hundred letters, written between 1807 and 1843. Most of them, including those recording the early part of Irving's career and those forming the concluding portion of his correspondence with Brevoort, have never before appeared in print. A few of the rest have been used, principally in abridged form, in the "Life of Irving" written by his nephew, Pierre, some fifty years ago. The latter often omitted the names of persons mentioned by his uncle, fearing to give offense, but now that a half-century has elapsed these names are once more restored to their places in the correspondence.

The original manuscripts of the letters used in the volume are, for the most part, from the great collection of Irvingiana owned by Mr. Isaac N. Seligman. The rest of the originals used were loaned by other collectors, and members of both the Irving and Brevoort families gave interesting information on the great writer and his friend to the editor of the letters, Mr. George S. Hellman.

The friendship of Irving and Brevoort, formed in their early youth, was of the most lasting sort, as is proved by the fact that their correspondence covered a period of thirty-six years. Brevoort belonged to one of New York's most respected families, whose name is still enshrined in the New York of today, where a well-known hostelry and a venerable old corner house, both not far from where Fifth Avenue begins its northward course, serve to recall it to us of the twentieth century.

When the friendship began Washington Irving was simply a light-hearted, generous-minded young New York patrician, full of life and wit and geniality, in whose head the literary works destined to make him famous were already simmering. His letters to his friend take us through early days of gayety and hope, through later days when he met business reverses and allowed gloom to pervade his hitherto sunny ramblings;



Sir Walter Scott.

they take us to Washington, then a muddy little community; to sparkling theatrical performances in London, drawing its first deep breath of relief after Waterloo; to that Spain which so captivated Irving's heart that he has made it his very own in our literature. And, as we follow this urbane gentleman of the bubbling spirits, he introduces us to President James Madison and Dolly, his sprightly wife; to Charles Kemble and Mrs. Kemble, dazzling New York with their acting; to the grand Sir Walter Scott, anything but grand in his hearty welcome of the young American visitor; to Charles Keane, and the poet Campbell, who stirred the blood of patriotic Englishmen with "Britannia Needs no Bulwarks." And there are shrewd estimates of Napoleon Bonaparte and other luminaries of the day, and keen dramatic criticism, and bits of social satire as pertinent today as when Irving penned them.

Irving's first letter to Brevoort is dated "Philadelphia, Oct. 23, 1807." It shows him already hard at work on his now famous "Knickerbocker History of New York." Says he to Brevoort:

> I have been delayed in putting my work to press by some minute and curious facts which I found in a manuscript in the Philad. Library and which has obliged me to make alterations in the first vol. but tomorrow I begin—by God.
> I wish you would immediately forward me the inscription on old P. Stuyvesant's Tombstone—and get Jim as well as yourself to prepare some squibbs &c to attract attention to the work when it comes out.

Some while after the history had made its appearance, its youthful author repaired to Washington. Travel was no trifle in those days; he reports to Brevoort that his journey to Baltimore "was terrible and sublime, as full of adventurous matter and direful peril as one of Walter Scott's pantomimic, melodramatic, romantic tales." We learn that he was three days on the road, and passed one night in a log house—"yet somehow or other I lived through it all, and lived merrily into the bargain, for which I thank a large stock of good humour which I put up before my departure from N. York, as traveling stores to last me throughout my expedition."

In Baltimore he ran across Monsieur

James Carson Brevoort.

Tezier, a Frenchman who had just translated Knickerbocker's History of New York into his native tongue. "He has sent his translation to Paris," Irving informs Brevoort, "where I suspect they will understand and relish it about as much as they would a Scotch haggis & a singed sheepshead."

At the nation's capital Irving proved himself a youth of great enterprise, and regaled his New York crony most entertainingly:

> I arrived at the Inn about dusk, and, understanding that Mrs. Madison was to have her levee, or drawing room, that very evening, I swore by all the gods I would be there. But how? was the question. I had got away down in Georgetown & the persons to whom my letters of introduction were directed lived all upon Capitol Hill, about three miles off—while the President's house was exactly half way. Here was a nonplus, enough to startle any man of less enterprising spirit—but I had sworn to be there—and I determined to keep my oath, and, like Caleb Quotem, to "have a place at the Review."
> So I mounted with a stout heart to my room, resolved to put on my pease blossoms and silk stockings, gird up my loins—sally forth on my expedition & like a vagabond Knight errant, trust to Providence for success and whole bones. Just as I descended from my attic chamber full of this valorous spirit, I was met by my landlord, with whom & the head waiter by the bye, I had held a private cabinet counsel on the subject. Bully Rook informed me that there was a party of gentlemen just going from the house, one of whom, Mr. Fontaine Maury of N. York, had offered his services to introduce me to "the Sublime Porte."
> I cut one of my best opera flourishes, skipped into the dressing room, popped my head into the hands of a sanguinary Jacobinical barber, who carried havoc and desolation into the lower regions of my face, mowed down all the beard on one of my cheeks and laid the other in blood like a conquered province—and thus like a second Banquo, with "twenty morthal murders on my head," in a few minutes I emerged from dirt and darkness into the blazing splendour of Mrs. Madison's Drawing room.
>
> Here I was most graciously received—found a crowded collection of great and little men, of ugly old women, and beautiful young ones—and in ten minutes was hand in glove with half the people in the assemblage.

Mrs. Madison, Irving informs us, was "a fine, portly, buxom dame, who has a smile and pleasant word for everybody." But, regarding her husband, President James Madison of the United States of America, it is: "Ah, poor Jemmy! He is but a withered little apple-John!" And the graceless young New Yorker closes his description of the President with a solemn: "But of this no more!—perish the thought that would militate against sacred things—Mortals avaunt! Touch not the Lord's anointed!"

After his return to New York Irving plunges into another round of gayety, meets a lovely little lady, and writes dejectedly to Brevoort—now in Europe—that he cannot aspire to her hand because he has no money; that the modern maxim is "Handsome is that handsome has"—words which, though written in 1812, would fit well into the pages of those who grow lugubrious at millionaire worship in 1915. "In a word, she is like an ortolan," Irving continues, still on the subject of the lovely little lady; "too rare and costly a dainty for a poor man to afford, but were I a nabob, 'fore George, ortolans should be my only food!"

There is an up-to-date ring again about the following: "This war completely shuts up all my prospects of visiting Europe for some time to come"—though it, too, was written in 1812. The Washington Irving.

New Yorkers of that day were much excited about the War of 1812. Henry Brevoort, far away on the continent of Europe, is informed by the faithful Irving that old Mr. Brevoort, his father, "is highly tickled with the success of our navy."

He was so powerfully excited by the capture of the Macedonian that he actually performed a journey to the Brothers, above Hellgate, where the frigates lay windbound, and he brought away a piece of the Macedonian, which he seemed to treasure up with as much devotion as a pious Catholic does a piece of the true cross.

Then there was a great dinner to the naval heroes, "at which all the great eaters and drinkers of the city were present." We learn that "nothing is talked of but armies, navies, battles, &c." Eventually Irving got infected with the warlike fever of the day, joined the suite of the Governor of New York, and journeyed to Albany as a military man, breathing martial fire in his letters to Brevoort. But peace put an end to his soldiering, and, on May 25, 1815, a few weeks before Waterloo, Washington Irving set sail for the first of his visits to Europe, where he was to spend so many years and find inspiration for so many well-beloved stories.

At Liverpool he foregathered with the renowned actor, Charles Kemble, and his wife, whom he had already met in New York, and he writes to Brevoort—by this time back in New York—as to a possible tour for the pair in America:

> The terms offered by Mr. Cooper were not such as to tempt them across the Atlantic, as they could make as much by traveling among the provincial theatres of England. • • • Kemble, however, talks as if he should like to make an excursion to America himself for a year and leave Mrs. K. and the family in England. Such, I think, would be his best plan, as Mrs. K., though an actress of undoubted talents, has grown almost too large for many of the characters she plays—particularly for the eyes of American audiences, who, you know, are accustomed to the more delicate figures of our American ladies.

Napoleon's fall came while Irving was in England. Writing after the former Emperor had been sent by the English Government to St. Helena, Irving tells Brevoort:

> I must say I think the Cabinet has acted with littleness toward him. In spite of all his misdeeds he is a noble fellow—and I am confident will eclipse, in the eyes of Posterity, all the crowned wiseacres that have crushed him by their overwhelming confederacy.
> If anything could place the Prince Regent in a more ridiculous light, it is Bonaparte suing for his magnanimous protection. Every compliment paid to the bloated sensualist, this inflation of sack & sugar, turns to the keenest sarcasm—and nothing shows more completely the caprices of fortune and how truly she delights in reversing the relative situations of persons & baffling the flights of intellects and enterprizes—than that, of all the monarchs of Europe, Bonaparte should be brought to the feet of the Prince Regent.
> An eagle towering in his pride of place
> Was by a mousing owl hawked at and killed.

Here is another interesting estimate of Napoleon, written after observing some retired English Generals of the old military school:

> Boney must have sadly disconcerted the comfortable system of these old warriors by the harassing, restless, cut and slash mode of warfare that he introduced. He has put an end to all the old carte and tierce system in which the cavaliers of the old school fought so decorously, as it were, with a small sword in one hand and a chapeau in the other. During his career there has been a sad laying on the shelf of old Generals who could not keep up with the hurry, the fierceness, and dashing of the system.

Irving visited Scotland in 1817, and, remembering that Henry Brevoort had visited the great Walter Scott not long before and spoken of his young literary friend, the latter walked boldly up to the gate of Abbotsford, the novelist's estate, and sent in a letter of introduction "with a card and request to know whether it would be possible for him to receive a visit from me in the course of the day."

The welcome left nothing to be desired. Irving describes it to his friend with glowing enthusiasm:

> Mr. Scott himself came out to see me and welcomed me to his home with the genuine hospitality of the olden times. In a moment I found myself at his breakfast table, and felt as if I was at the social board of an old friend. Instead of a visit of a few hours, I was kept there several days—and such days!
> You know the charms of Scott's conversation, but you have not lived with him in the country—you have not rambled with him about his favorite hills and glens and burns—you have not seen him dispensing happiness around him in his little rural domain. I came prepared to admire him, but he completely won my heart and made me love him. He has a charming family around him—Sophia Scott, who must have been quite a little girl when you were here, is grown up, and is a sweet little mountain lassie. She partakes a great deal of her father's character—is light-hearted, ingenuous, intelligent and amiable. Can tell a whimsical story and sing a border song with the most captivating naïvete.
> Scott was very attentive in showing me the neighboring country. I was with him from morning to night and was constantly astonished and delighted by the perpetual and varied flow of his conversation. It is just as entertaining as one of his novels, and exactly like them in style, point, humour, character and picturesqueness. I parted with him with the utmost regret, but received a cordial invitation to repeat my visit on my way back to England, which I think I shall do. I should not forget to mention that he spoke of you in the most friendly terms, and reproached himself for not having written to you; but says he is extremely remiss in letter-writing.

Irving took in the theatres of London and was outspoken and independent in his criticisms. Miss O'Nealle was, to his mind, the most "soul-subduing" of actresses; he confesses that never was he so "completely melted, moved, and overcome at a theatre as by her performance." But of another performer, one of the most celebrated of his day, the American pronounced this verdict:

> Kean—the prodigy—is to me insufferable. He is vulgar—full of trick and a complete mannerist. This is merely my opinion. He is cried up as a second Garrick—as a reformer of the stage, &c., &c. It may be so. He may be right and all other actors wrong; this is certain, he is either very good or very bad. I think decidedly the latter.

At this time business troubles were harassing Irving. Once he speaks dismally to his faithful friend of going through the bankruptcy court; again he thanks Brevoort for urging him to draw on him when in need of funds. "I can draw on you with confidence," he writes, "as you will receive the proceeds of my writings, which I hope will more than cover my drafts. • • • If I can get my mind into full play, and dash off a set of writings that may do me credit, I shall return home with alacrity, and it will hasten my return—but I cannot bear the thoughts of limping home broken down and spiritless to be received kindly in remembrance of former services."

So he stayed on in Europe, writing diligently, not allowing social distractions to interfere with his labors. The letters of this period betray the worries of their writer; there is little of the bubbling gayety of former days. But he still met interesting people and wrote interestingly about them. One was Mr. Hallam, author of the History of the Middle Ages; another Mrs. Siddons, the great actress, of whom Irving narrates:

> She is now near 70 and yet a magnificent looking woman. It is surprising how little time has been able to impair the dignity of her carriage or the noble expression of her countenance. I heard her read the part of Constance at her own house one evening, and I think it the greatest dramatic treat I have had for a long time past.

Better days soon came to Washington Irving. Journeying to Spain, he was soon delightedly delving into the past of that romantic land, gathering the materials for those enchanting works which have forever linked his name with Granada and the Alhambra. He writes from the latter to Brevoort in May, 1829, with his old-time enthusiasm:

> You see, I am still lingering in Spain, and I declare to you I feel so much interested in this noble country and noble people that though from time to time I have made resolutions and preparations to leave them, I have as often postponed my departure.
> By the date of my letter you will perceive I am royally quartered. I came to Granada about three weeks since to pass a little time here during the finest season of the year in company with a young Russian Prince, the Secretary of the Russian Legation, and the Governor of the Alhambra, finding us poorly lodged in the town, gave us permission to take up our residence in a corner of the old Moorish palace which had been assigned to him for his quarters, but which he had not taken possession of.
> Here then I am, nestled in one of the most remarkable, romantic, and delicious spots in the world. I have the complete range and I may say control of the whole palace, for the only residents beside myself are a worthy old woman, her niece and nephew, who have charge of the building and who make my bed, cook my meals, and are all kindness and devotion to me. I breakfast in the saloon of the Ambassadors or among the flowers and fountains of the Court of the Lions, and when I am not occupied with my pen I lounge with my book about these Oriental apartments or stroll about the courts and gardens and arcades by day or night, with no one to interrupt me. It absolutely appears to me like a dream or as if I am spellbound in some fairy palace. • • •
> I think I shall be tempted to remain here for three or four weeks longer at least. I wish to enjoy the delights of this place during the hot weather and to have a complete idea how those knowing Moors enjoyed themselves in their marble halls, cooled by fountains and running streams.

The two or three weeks lengthened to months; it was not until late in July that Irving finally tore himself away from the Alhambra.

After his first visit to Spain Irving was made American Minister to that country, partly through the efforts of the faithful Henry Brevoort, and he continued to live for years in the land which he loved so well. Reappointed Minister, he had, as an attaché, Brevoort's son Carson, of whom he wrote to the elder Brevoort:

> "My heart warms toward him not merely on his own account, but also on your own. He seems like a new link in our old friendship, which commenced when we were both about his age, or even younger, and which I have always felt as something almost fraternal."

The last letter in the long correspondence is one of the most interesting. It was written by Irving to Brevoort in 1843, when the great author was Minister to Spain for the second time. In it he says:

> In all my diplomacy I have depended more upon good intentions and frank and open conduct than upon any subtle management. I have an opinion that the old maxim, "'Honesty is the best policy,'" holds good in diplomacy!
> Thus far I have got on well with my brother diplomatists, and have met with very respectful treatment from the Spanish Government in all its changes and fluctuations. I have endeavored punctually to perform the duties of my office and to execute the instructions of Government, and I believe that the archives of the Legation will testify that the business of the mission has never been neglected. I have not suffered illness to prevent me from keeping everything in train; and indeed my recovery has been retarded by remaining at my post during the revolutionary scenes of last Summer, though urged by my physician to spend the hot months at the watering places in the mountains.
> I do not pretend to any great skill as a diplomatist; but in whatever situation I am placed in life, when I doubt my skill, I endeavour to make up for it by conscientious assiduity.

Soon after writing thus to his old friend the correspondence between Irving and Henry Brevoort ceased, for they both resided thenceforth close beside each other in the great author's well-beloved New York, his birthplace.

Manhattan Island the World's Greatest Mine

Excavations Made for the Subway System Show Interesting, Valuable, and Varied Formations in Rock-Bound Bit of Land on Which New York Is Built

MANHATTAN ISLAND in certain parts is being shored up and braced to remove the marks of the recent collapses when masses of rock went sliding into the new subways. The engineers have just made their reports on the trouble, the even course of traffic is being resumed, and the city is settling down into its accustomed grooves all unmindful of the fact that it is resting upon the greatest mine in all the world.

It is a bonanza mine which in its possibilities transcends the wealth of Ormus and of Ind. From the living rock of Manhattan garnet and tourmaline and semi-precious stones of that kind have been taken, and now and then some one suggests that there is gold in streaks, with traces of other valuable minerals. The bulk of the island in which there is now so much drilling and boring and tunneling is the Manhattan schist, the foundation of countless millions of value, the support of many thousands of structures which are the wonder and the admiration of the world. In ordinary circumstances a well-behaved rock it is, warped and tilted as it is in places. Under the skillful ministrations of engineers accidents are very few, considering the enormous extent of the operations which are carried on beneath the surface of the city.

It was suggested the other day that the metropolis have a mining engineer of its own to look over its rocks. As a matter of fact, New York has hundreds of such experts, and no underpinning of any city on earth has been more minutely studied both by the geologist and by the engineer. Its strata, minerals, its general make-up, present a theme of never-ending interest to them.

The rock-bound island of Manhattan in prehistoric times stood about 200 feet higher than it does at present. The entire surrounding region was loftier and the streams sank their channels deep on their way to the Silurian Sea. The bold escarpment of the Palisades is a mute witness to the way the waters wore their way into the yielding stone. The Hudson and the East Rivers joined at a hill which is now the Battery and through a wide plain flowed united to the ocean. The land sank, the low and marshy plain became the harbor of New York, connected with the sea by the Narrows, the mouth of the ancient confluence.

The making of the city was accompanied by many upheavals of nature, and its characteristic rock, Manhattan schist, underwent many changes. It is believed to have been of sedimentary origin, but the invasion of igneous rock and the constant pressure transformed it and in places gave it an almost crystalline nature. Black and streaked, filled with flakes of mica, glittering with grains of quartz, partaking of the nature of such constitutents as feldspar, biotite and muscovite, Manhattan schist is as varied and complex as the life of the men whose dwellings rest upon it.

Beneath the schist lie the layers of a soft marble sometimes referred to as the Stockbridge dolomite. Fine white veins of it were found seven hundred feet below the surface near Chrystie Street a few months ago in driving the Catskill water tunnel. Some of this rock, which crops out in Westchester and is there called the Tuckahoe marble, was used in the building of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

Further down is the Fordham gneiss, occasionally rising in veins to the surface, a mixture of quartz and feldspar of zircon, with traces of hornblende and often embedding garnets of unusual beauty. The native contributions of this city to the jewelry industry would come from this layer. Further down is the Yonkers gneiss, and the bottom stratum is the so-called Ravenswood diorite, which is often set down by the engineers as granite. The tilting and the twistings in ages past have in places mixed up these layers, but for the most part the Manhattan schist, though often awry, after the struggle was over came out on top of all the others.

The drifting of the glaciers over this region altered the surface of Manhattan Island. They scraped off the earth as they struck the high places and left the marks of the boulders they brought with them on the underlying rock, as one may see in both Central and Riverside Parks, where the deep grooves often appear on the protruding schist. They filled up the hollows with earth and sand brought, too, from the up-State regions, and when the sun at last had melted them they had wrought many a change in the looks of this rock-bound isle.

Here and there were deep pockets of sand and gravel. Vegetation sprang up, the island became the land of trees and flowers which Hudson saw opposite the "green cliff" of serpentine at Castle Point, of which his mate so eloquently wrote. The Dutch came to possess the island placidly; then followed the swarming of the English, and as thousands of descendants of the various stocks came to hold Manhattan for their own there grew the need for more room. Hence the building of the skyscrapers of Manhattan, many-towered like Camelot of old, and the burrowing into the depths of the rocks to find safe lodgment for their foundations.

The need of swift transportation to the lands beyond the island made necessary the tunnels beneath the surface and the giant thirst of the city required enormous pipes to bring drink from the Croton Lake and the Titanic Cup of Ashokan. Light, heat, and power must be communicated by cables and pipes beneath the surface.

Hence the growth of the under New York, which every year makes new requirements of human ingenuity. Thus it has come to pass that this city rests upon many chambered diggings. The rock is honeycombed by galleries. The Island of Manhattan is like some great ant hill, through the hidden passages of which millions of human beings are scurrying day and night.

To meet all these new conditions the problems of mining are put constantly in use. At Broadway and Thirty-eighth Street, where on Sept. 25 there was one of the cave-ins, you may see a gray structure at the top of which a car is going backward and forward under electric control. It is part of the telpher system, common to Western mines, which the contractors have put into operation on this Island of Manhattan. If it were seen at the base of a mountain in distant Colorado it would seem entirely in place.

Most of the mining in New York is done in the Manhattan schist, and on account of its peculiar structure great care must be taken in working it. As far as the foundations of the buildings along which the subways are being driven are concerned, engineers see no danger to be feared, for they have been elaborately reinforced. Close to the edges of the tunnel, however, the greatest precaution must be exercised. The shoring and bracing which have been used were planned with the greatest care, and now that engineers have made their reports improvements have been suggested which will no doubt prevent the recurrence of any more serious accidents.

The Manhattan schist, which is always a difficult rock to deal with, is especially tilted and twisted across the island between Thirtieth and Fortieth Streets. There are no large faults, but the rock itself is often worn and weathered, sometimes disintegrated in seams by hidden streams; and its dip from northeast to southwest presents problems for the engineer.

The composition of the rock, with its admixture of the smooth and slippery crystals of mica, tends to make the masses more liable to sliding. The shock of explosions, the vibration of the traffic on the temporary structures overhead, the exposure of surfaces to the air, all contribute to the need of effective shoring and bracing.

That there is a zone of the schist which is especially prone to slip is shown by previous accidents. The tendency is for the rock to slide on the east side of excavations, as was the case years ago in Park Avenue in the lower Thirties when in the tunneling for the first subway there came a slide which caused several dwellings to topple.

On the other hand, the Manhattan schist seldom slips on the west side of an excavation. When the foundations for the present Hotel Belmont were dug, the rock was blasted down a sheer wall with small charges, and without in any way disturbing the foundations of the building of the Lincoln Trust Company which adjoins the hotel. It happens, however, that the slide of the schist which took place near Thirty-eighth Street on Sept. 25 was on the west side of the way. No absolute rule can be laid down for this contrary material. The digging of the tunnels of the Pennsylvania Railroad through Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets resulted in many small cave-ins in the handling of the native rock.

Everywhere in this region the dip to the west must be considered whenever there are any extensive disturbances beneath the surface. The irregular and thinly-laminated structure must always be taken into account.

The reports made by the engineers from other cities appointed by the Mayor to pass upon the safety of the subways now building have been thorough and comprehensive. They find that the types of timbering used by the contractors were on the whole equal to the strain and have suggested modifications to meet the peculiar conditions.

IN these snappy Fall days Thermos adds a comfort and pleasure to automobiling and to life generally.

A warm lunch "on the road" would be impossible without a Thermos Bottle with its hot tea, coffee or cocoa, or a Thermos Food Jar with its hot solid food.

In fact—

THERMOS

Serves you right, food or drink, hot or cold—when, where and as you like

Thermos is the ideal portable fireless stove, performing the service of keeping its contents piping hot for 24 hours—and then, too, it is, when required, a most efficient portable iceless refrigerator, keeping its contents frigid for three days and nights.

The same Thermos receptacle keeps hot without fire or cold without ice. To keep cold see that the contents goes into Thermos cold, and to keep hot that it goes in at a high temperature.

We are supplying Thermos to the Allies from our American plant and to the Teutons from Berlin. It is used both in the hospitals and the trenches as a life-saving device.

Thermos was awarded the Grand Prize at Panama Pacific Exposition.

Originally expensive Thermos vacuoles are now sold by leading dealers throughout the world at from $1.00 up. Write for booklet.

New Constitution Will Increase Efficiency

Unnecessary Boards Will Be Cut Out, Number of Departments Lessened, and the Governor Given More Power to See That Work Is Done Economically

By Frederick C. Tanner,
Chairman Committee on Governor and Other State Officers, Constitutional Convention.

THE Constitution of 1894, under which we are living, provides that the Governor "shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed." That duty must, of course, continue to rest with the Governor. Article VI. of the proposed Constitution, which will be submitted to the people on Nov. 2, gives to the Governor what he has not heretofore had—the power to meet that responsibility.

On the first day of January, 1915, there were 152 departments, bureaus, boards, and commissions that constituted the executive branch of the State Government. In numerous instances they overlapped in jurisdiction and conflicted in operation. Any business man who has suffered from the multiplicity of inspections and conflicting orders coming from these unrelated bureaus knows how true this is.

A great number of these departments, boards, and commissions are in many instances practically free from effective control. It is manifestly impossible for the Governor personally to exercise direct supervision over such a multitude of agencies, and as there is no other general authority to supervise them they are therefore not accountable, practically, for what they do or fail to do.

The remedy provided by the proposed Constitution is simple. It presents a general plan of reorganization of these 152 agencies into 17 general departments, and forbids the Legislature creating any new general division outside of the departmental system outlined in the Constitution. The Constitution itself does not attempt the internal organization of such departments, or to say where each of these 152 boards, commissions, &c., shall go. These are matters of detail and are left to the Legislature.

It would be manifestly unwise, if not impossible, to attempt to "freeze" into the Constitution for twenty years a number of minor matters which, of necessity, will have to be changed from time to time to meet the necessities of public service. But the general departmental scheme is there, and cannot be changed unless by amendment to the Constitution itself.

The plan proposed will accomplish three things: First, it will result in an immense saving to the taxpayer by cutting out unnecessary boards or commissions whose work is duplicated. Second, by lessening the number of departments almost tenfold it will increase their accountability to the Governor, whose power of appointment and removal has been greatly increased. Third, it will provide a system of large departmental officers to whom the Governor can look for aid in making up the proposed new budget provided for in the Constitution and to enforce economy in expenditures.

In 1894, when the last Constitutional Convention sat, the number of departments, boards, &c., was thirty-nine. In 1904 the number had grown to sixty. In 1914 it had increased to 152, or nearly fourfold in twenty years. Within the same period the cost of government, exclusive of interest on the canal and highway debts and free school fund, had increased in approximately the same period from $12,000,000 in 1895 to $24,000,000 in 1905 and to $42,000,000 in 1914.

The growth of poulation during the same period was, in round numbers, from 6,500,000 to 9,900,000. During this time the population had increased 53 per cent., while the expenses of government had increased 235 per cent. To put it in a more concrete form, in 1895 the per capita cost of State government was $2.47, while in 1914 it was $5.41.

Any man with business experience can see that if the ratio of the cost of government to population progresses indefinitely in this fashion it is only a question of time until the State will be plunged into bankruptcy.

The constitutional plan proposed is bound to result in economy. It is apparent that every time a new board or department is created it is headed by a high-salaried official, invariably has a paid secretary and large overhead expenses made up of office rent, fixtures, and employes, and, what is still more unfortunate for the taxpayer, it leaves the Legislature the prey of just one more department, whose claims for appropriations are often acceded to in proportion to the vigor with which they are pushed.

You can picture the situation for yourself, when you remember that members of the Legislature from all parts of the State are thus besieged by a vast number of departments and boards, each one of which is pushing his special interest, or perhaps hobby, without regard to the interests of other departments, and generally appealing to the local interest of the legislator himself.

On the other hand, under the new budget system in the proposed constitution the Governor will make up a list of appropriations for various departments, which cannot be exceeded by the Legislature, although it can be cut down. It is to these seventeen department heads that he must look for advice and assistance for the grouping of such departments as is natural and logical, so that the needs of the various functions of government can be more easily determined.

The efficiency of the government will be vastly increased. Those departments which are strictly executive in nature are put under the direction of heads who are appointed by the Governor and removable by him in his discretion. In these departments the power of the Senate to prevent an appointment is taken away, leaving the responsibility squarely upon the Governor.

In this way divided authority is avoided, and the old system of trading and bargaining between the executive and the legislative branches is done away with. As a check upon the Governor, however, in case an improper appointment is made, the power of impeachment is added to the Constitution, and the Senate is given the further power of removal by a two-thirds vote.

Under the old system we have in reality a seven-headed government. Each one of these State officers is independent of the other, and answerable, not to the Governor, but to the people who elect him. But the duty to see "that the laws are faithfully executed" is imposed upon the Governor alone. Under the new Constitution greater power is given to the Governor, for the reason that he should not properly be held responsible for what he cannot direct or control.

This is a policy of administrative reform, of visible government, and of responsibility coupled with power. The article providing for it was adopted by a vote of 125 to 30 in the convention, and the principle could probably have been extended to the Controller and Attorney General. But there was a strong feeling in many quarters that the law officer and general fiscal officer of the State should be made directly answerable to the people, and inasmuch as the Democratic platform expressly provided that these two officers should be made elective, and the Republican platform only declared for a "substantial reduction" in the number of elective officers, the convention has only recommended to the people the extent of this principle to which public opinion has up to this time committed itself.

Either a reduction or an increase of the number of elective officials can be secured by constitutional amendment without disturbing the general plan outlined.

A somewhat different plan was followed in those departments to which are delegated rule-making and judicial functions, such as the Departments of Public Utilities, Conservation, Civil Service, Education, and Labor and Industry. In all of these, except the Department of Education, the Commissioners are appointed by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and are removable after service of written charges and an opportunity to be heard thereon.

The charge in the manner of appointment and removal in these departments from the scheme outlined above is for the reason that they cannot be considered as purely executive arms of the State Government. They possess to a large degree judicial or legislative functions and make rules and regulations under delegated authority from the Legislature. They serve for longer terms than the Governor and the same reasons do not apply for making them so strictly answerable to the appointing power.

The Department of Education will be administered by the University of the State of New York, as it is at present, the chief administrative officer being appointed by the Regents of the university. The Department of Education has worked admirably and no change is recommended.

The budget system was passed by practically the unanimous voice of the convention, only four dissenting voices being recorded. To it, and to the plan of departmental reorganization, the people can confidently look for a means of substantial reduction in the appropriations and the tax rate.

In conclusion, I may add that the remedy outlined above has been demanded by both of the great political parties of the State. The remedy must be afforded by constitutional enactment. The great growth in the number of departments has not been checked in the last twenty years by the Legislature, but, on the contrary, it has grown by leaps and bounds. The existing plan of State Government is not a creation by design, but is a growth by accretion.

The situation described in the platforms of 1914 by both the Republican and Democratic Parties was found to be substantially true by the Constitutional Convention. To the task of devising a logical and natural division of departments your Constitutional Convention gave five months of hard and unremitting toil.

This failure in the present system has been recognized by both of the great political parties of the State in clear and explicit terms. In 1914 the Republican State platform, framed especially with a view to this revision of the Constitution, declared:

> We recommend a substantial reduction in the number of elective officials by the application of the principles of the short ballot to the executive offices of the State. To prevent multiplication of offices we recommend that the various administrative functions of the State, so far as practicable, be vested in a limited number of departments. The present duplication of effort and expense in the public institutions of the State should be remedied by the establishment of a simpler and better organized system.

With the same realization of the necessity for action the Democratic platform of 1914 declared:

> The people should be able to know whom to hold responsible for any failure in the execution, or mal-administration, of their laws, and not have their attention divided and distracted by a number of elective, executive, and administrative officials, either elective or appointive, but be enabled to concentrate their attentions and to devote their energies to the election or defeat of fewer officials; therefore, to centre responsibility for executive and administrative action and to give full force and effect to the power of the people we favor an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election only of the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Controller, and Attorney General, and we pledge ourselves to the preparation and submission of a scheme of constitutional amendment which shall concentrate responsibility for executive management, shall simplify the administrative system of the State and shall provide general rules of departmental organization for the future guidance of the Legislature.

The remedy suggested is not in any sense a partisan one, it having been ratified by a majority of both Democrats and Republicans in the convention.

The plan proposed does not change the functions of government, but outlines a better way to perform the functions now existing. It is submitted to the people in a firm belief that when adopted it will check the steady rise in the burdens of taxation and enable the people to exercise a more direct control over their public servants.

Big Brothering Boys Who Are in Law's Grip

Judge Hoyt Tells How the Work of the Children's Court Is Aided by Great Volunteer Organization Which Gives the Boy in Trouble a Helping Hand

EFFICIENT as is the Probation System in the courts of New York City, and enormous as has been the help given by the Children's Court in solving the problem of society's dealings with the juvenile offender, these powerful agencies are glad to avail themselves of the aid freely supplied by a great volunteer association. This organization is the Big Brothers.

Although this rapidly growing organization is generally known, the methods it employs are as a rule only vaguely comprehended. It was with the purpose of giving a clearer understanding of its workings that Judge Franklin Chase Hoyt recently talked to a TIMES reporter about the value of the Big Brothers movement to the community as he had seen it exemplified in the exercise of his judicial duty.

Judge Hoyt, it may be said, is doubly interested in this particular branch of philanthropic endeavor. He is the Presiding Judge of the Children's Court of New York City, and he is also President of the Big Brothers.

There are two classes of children with whom the Court has to deal," he said, as he sat at his great desk in his private office in the Children's Court Building. "They are the neglected child and the delinquent child, the child that has been offended against, and the child that has offended. The courses of procedure differ radically in the two cases.

"All delinquency cases, if they are of a serious nature and seem to warrant supervision by the Court, are put on probation. Such children never are handed over to the Big Brothers or to any other volunteer organization. Such is not the practice of the Court. We have our own probation officers, adequately trained and equipped for their work, and it is to their care that the delinquent children are committed.

"Although I am President of the Big Brothers, I don't turn the delinquent children directly over to the Big Brothers. I put them in the care of the probation officers. But if the case is not serious enough to warrant putting it on probation, then the Big Brothers and similar volunteer organizations are decidedly useful.

"In such cases of delinquency as I have mentioned, in which it is necessary for the Court to put the child on probation, the great value of the Big Brothers is that they stand ready to co-operate with the probation officers. The Big Brothers offer the children facilities that are, of course, beyond the reach of the probation officers, among them being employment and change of environment. Personally, I do not see how the work of the probation officers and that of the Big Brothers could ever clash and interfere with each other.

"You see, the Court is able to keep the child under strict supervision only for a comparatively short period of time. As a rule the period of probation runs from six months to a year. There is every reason why the help and the interest of the Big Brothers should be continued indefinitely. As a matter of fact, to continue that help and interest for a longer time than is possible to the probation officers is the chief aim of the Big Brothers.

"In the case of a child that is not delinquent, but has been neglected, advantage is taken of the services of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. But this by no means precludes a co-operation of a volunteer organization. As a matter of fact, it is sought and encouraged.

"The aim of the Big Brothers is to continue their interest in a case as long as may be necessary. This care may and often does continue for many years.

"The probation officers cannot be expected to do for the children committed to their care many of the things which are easily in the power of the Big Brothers. There is, as I have said, the employment which individual members of the Big Brothers organization are able to procure for the boys in whom they are interested.

"And then there are the Summer Camps. Boys who otherwise would not leave the city may now go to Summer Camps of Princeton, Saint Paul, Groton, and Choats School. Boys are sent to these camps through the instrumentality of the Big Brothers.

"Also the Court in the course of its work cannot fail to observe the beneficial effects of the five clubs which the Big Brothers conduct in various centres of the city. Thirty boys have attended each of these clubs three times a week within the past year.

"The Big Brothers have provided gymnasium work and instruction for 150 boys. And most of these boys have come from the Children's Courts.

"One important phase of the Big Brother movement is illustrated by the fact that many boys have through the instrumentality of the Big Brothers been placed in private schools. If the Big Brothers had not taken care of the boys in this manner, it would have been necessary for the Court to commit them to corrective institutions.

"Then there is a matter which I have already mentioned—the matter of employment. The probation officers cannot, of course, find employment for the boys given over into their care. But through the agency of the Big Brothers many boys are placed in positions which otherwise they could not hope to secure.

"Nor do the Big Brothers neglect the important question of providing adequate instruction for the boys whom they intend to supply with employment. Through the Y. M. C. A. and the Training School for Office Boys, the Big Brothers provide special vocational training for many of the boys who have appeared before the Court.

"It is one of the principles of the Big Brothers' movement," said Judge Hoyt, "that every child should receive some religious training. The organization does not attempt to dictate what that training shall be. But the Big Brothers have been instrumental in establishing close relations between the churches and the boys. Of course, it is the probation officer who is directly responsible. But back of the probation officer stand the Big Brothers, ready to give their powerful aid.

"Recently the Big Brothers established a system of Saturday trips for the boys to points of interest, some of which might also be of value from a vocational point of view. The boys have visited the Museum of Natural History, the navy yard, the Aquarium, hotel kitchens, bakeries and various mills and factories. This has given the boys on probation a chance to spend a part of their time pleasantly and profitably, and the results have been extremely gratifying to the Big Brothers and to the Court.

"The point which I mentioned that the Big Brothers are able to continue their supervision after that of the probation officers has terminated is of special significance. Because of the vast numbers to be dealt with by the Court, the supervision of the probation officers can necessarily be exercised only for a short time. But the friendly interest of the Big Brothers often continues on until the boys have grown up and taken a responsible place in society.

"In this connection it is interesting to note that there are now among the active workers in the Big Brother movement men, who, as boys, came before the Court at the time of the establishment of the Big Brothers. Now they are befriending and taking care of boys who are brought before the Court, just as they were years ago.

"I said some time ago that the Big Brothers believe that every child should have some religious instruction. Apropos of this it may be stated that since the inception of the Big Brothers similar organizations have been started, notably movements for providing special care for Catholic, Jewish, and colored boys.

"Now, there is no doubt that the lack of the facilities which are furnished by the Big Brothers would greatly hamper the Court in its efforts to use the probation system efficiently. The fact that the probation system is backed up by the Big Brother movement is of a value that is readily apparent. At every Court session the Big Brothers' investigator is present, and he takes down the name of every boy who is brought before the Court."

Judge Hoyt smiled reminiscently. "I remember," he said, "one case I had some time ago. A boy came up before me for the third time. It is true that the charge against him was merely one of assault, and did not necessarily indicate any great moral delinquency. But the mere fact that the boy had been arrested three times, and had become an intolerable nuisance in his own neighborhood, made it diffcult for me to come to a decision on the case.

"After a careful consideration of all the facts in the case the Court found itself clearly justified in giving the boy another chance instead of committing him to an institution. At the same time a need of the services of the Big Brothers was indicated.

"Both through its own officials and through the Big Brotherhood, the Court endeavored to do what it could for the boy's welfare. The first offer of the Big Brothers, of which advantage was taken at once, was to remove the boy from his environment for two or three weeks.

"He was taken to a Summer camp. Here he had life in the great outdoors instead of in the narrow and noisy city streets, he had wholesome outlets for the natural energy which had led him into mischief, and, what is especially important, he found that he had real friends who took a genuine interest in him.

"After this boy's return to the city, his friends among the Big Brothers secured for him employment in a large brokerage office. There he has since risen to a position of considerable responsibility. Since his first visit to the Summer camp he has never missed his yearly trip to it.

"Lately he has taken charge in the Big Brother movement of various groups of small boys at the very camp to which he was sent after his early appearance in Court. When he reached his majority he was eager to show his willingness to do his share of the work, and since his election to the Big Brothers he has devoted many of his evenings to work among the boys at the club centres.

"While I have spoken of the work of the Big Brothers movement alone in connection with the Court, it is because as its President I have direct interest in its organization. There are other volunteer societies carrying on a similar work, and their activities and helpful service are fully as great. As Justice of the Children's Court I cannot close without testifying to the great debt which the Court owes to such societies as the Catholic Protective Society, the Catholic Boys' Protective League, (otherwise known as the Catholic Big Brothers,) the Jewish Big Brothers, the Catholic Ladies' Committee, the Protestant Big Sisters, the Jewish Big Sisters, and the Catholic Big Brothers."

Exhibition of Winslow Homer's Water Colors

Water-Color Drawings by Winslow Homer, Never Before Exhibited, Are Now on View at the Art Museum of the Brooklyn Institute

THE collection of water colors by Winslow Homer, which is to be on exhibition at the Brooklyn Museum until the 7th of November, ranges from those reminiscent studies made in the seventies of subjects drawn from the experiences of the painter's childhood, through the Adirondack series, the Tynemouth series, the Prout's Neck series to the tropical pictures. Although many of the exhibits have not been publicly seen before this, the general character of the works is known from the groups in different museums; but the public never before has had so admirable an opportunity to fix by comparison its impression of Homer's technical power in the handling of water color.

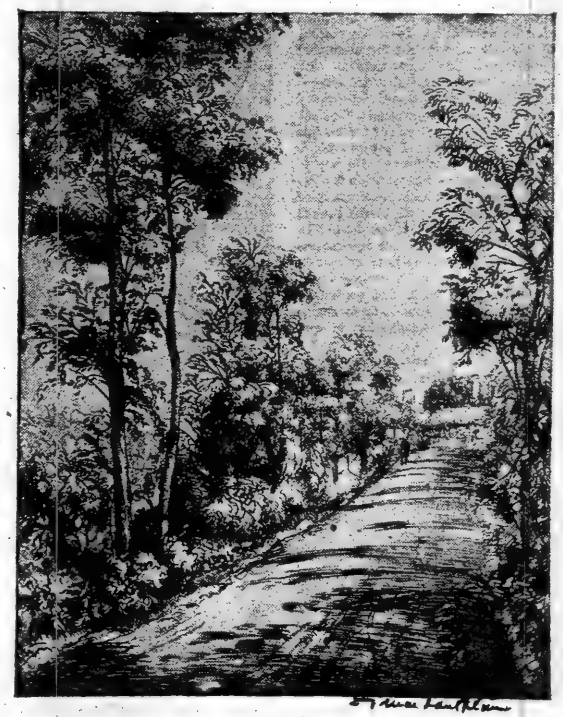
Near the rooms in which the fifty or more examples of his achievement in this medium are hung is the gallery containing the Sargent water colors. To pass from one to the other is to realize that the two men stand on the same plane in the boldness and precision of their workmanship. Kenyon Cox has written from his painter's standpoint of Homer's mastery of his material. "The perfection of water color depends," he says, "largely upon directness and rapidity. The material is never so beautiful as when it is washed in at once, with as little disturbance by reworking as may be, the white paper everywhere clear and luminous beneath and between the washes. It is the ideal material for rapid sketching from nature, because the sketcher, instead of sacrificing technical beauty to directness of expression, gains greater beauty with every increase of speed. Therefore, for the fastidious in technical matters Homer's sudden notations of things observed have an extraordinary charm, which comes of the perfect harmony between the end sought and the means employed. The more his mind is fixed upon the rendering of his impression and the less he thinks of his material, the more beautiful his material becomes. The accuracy of his observation, the rapidity of his execution, and the perfection of his technique increase together and reach their highest value at the same moment. The one little square of paper becomes a true record of the appearance of nature, an amazing bit of sleight of hand, and a piece of perfect material beauty; it gives you three kinds of pleasure, intimately related, and united, and each in the highest degree."

This clear analysis will aid many an uninitiated visitor to understand his own emotions in the presence of these exhilarating sketches. In addition to the three pleasures thus described is another which all the pictures give, though in varying degree, that due to the personal angle from which the subject is seen. Homer was the truest of Yankees in his power of detaching his subject from all aesthetic associations and extracting its idiosyncratic character. What he saw was the thing itself, not a remembered interpretation of the thing, and what he said of it on canvas or paper was his own thought concerning it, not a thought which compromised in the course of its expression with the predilections of the public. He said the unexpected and said it not from a desire to be original, but with native New England wit and terseness, as a farmer in the country store might talk with his comrades. The farmer would not, however, unite to his crisp diction Homer's nobility of vision. It is that which makes him not only an admirable technician able to stir to enthusiasm the minds of his fellow-artists, but a poet selecting from the facts confronting him those most significant of the larger truths in life and art. Mr. Cox has drawn attention to the change in the type of his women dating from his stay in the English fishing town of Tynemouth, where he first saw the robust fishergirls whose splendid forms accorded with the elemental forces of nature with which they daily battled. This same fishwife type has served more than one artist with plausible excuse for picturesqueness, but Homer's classic taste rejected all that was easiest to emphasize and reproduce in the massive forms and large gestures, and chose for his design the characteristics in which the sculptor of the Elgin marbles would have been most interested. Most of his later work is cast in this heroic mold and makes not only a direct appeal to human interest, but gives a summoning call to the heights which human interest is apt to climb only when summoned by a thinker or seer of noble mind.

These qualities, force and nobility of conception, witty and original expression, gain such power over the observer in the presence of any number of Homer's water colors that only those who linger over them notice certain other qualities of subtler charm. There are paintings, however, in which the daintiness of nature, its shy moods and fleeting aspects receive their due at the artist's powerful hand. He is strong to impress the weight and violence of the sea upon the landsman's mind, but he is delicate also in his caress of opal mists, reflections of sunlight from wet surfaces, and sensitive modulations of form. One painting in the group lent by Mr. Gould shows a deer in a green foreground, the mountains beyond swimming in light. Here all the tenderness is for that robe of light through which quiver the contours of the hills. In another picture a deer stands breast deep in dark water, and here the brush has defined the animal's sleek sides and described the markings of its intelligent head with a gentleness eloquent of the artist's mood toward the lovely model. He responds to his subject with the simplicity of a great artist, sympathetic with it, incapable of bullying it into an aspect easier for him to manage, seeking its truth with single-mindedness. Thus if its truth is of the essence of delicacy his handling becomes delicate to meet it.

Like all artists who have held intentionally aloof from the influences of older art, Homer had his moments of disconcerting commonplace, but they are not recorded in the present exhibition. Even the little illustrative pictures of youngsters hanging to tree branches and climbing stiles and tending chickens are in their kind as fresh and free as only Homer's frank touch could make their childishness. It is an exhibition which reveals him without making too much of him. It includes his lucid little comments on the life he knew best as a boy and his deep reflections on the life of the inscrutable sea which as a man he constantly interrogated. It shows his entertainment and pleasure in the tropical drama of sunshine and negroes, and his earlier essays in subjects that Fortune might have made his own. Life at large was not easily interesting to him, we infer from this range, but he attacked those episodes that entreated him with an indestructible freshness and energy. He died at 74 and the last oil painting finished by him in his old age is shown with the water colors. It speaks of his continued freedom from trivial ideas in spite of a weakened hand.

ART AT HOME AND ABROAD



"Road Song," from an Etching by D. S. MacLaughlan, on Exhibition at the Hahlo Galleries.

New Etchings and Water Colors by Donald Shaw MacLaughlan—Interesting Bird Decorations by Carton Moorepark and Other Matters of Art

Etchings by Donald Shaw MacLaughlan.

The etchings and drawings by Donald Shaw MacLaughlan to be placed on view this week at the Hahlo Galleries are interesting, as that accomplished artist's work invariably is, and are quite unlike anything that has preceded them. Taking the well-worn field of the Italian country in the neighborhood of Venice for his happy theme, he manages absolutely to avoid hackneyed statement of its charms. Whether he shows us the "Fields of Asolo" bathed in warm sunshine or the spacious foreground of "Treviso Waters," he makes us conscious that the interest of his subject is apart from the history of Doge and Senator, is on the contrary the simple interest of the ancient land and sea. One of his plates is called "In Giorgione's Land" and it is Giorgione's delight in the glow and splendor of Venetian sunshine that he celebrates not in this plate alone, but in all the Italian series.

His "Road Songs" are filled with the idyllic spirit, play of light on foliage and earth, waving of tree branches in the wind from the sea, cypresses that bear their stately heads with a certain gayety of poise instead of the solemnity usually forced upon them, musical line, joyous golden tone. Few modern etchings are so adequate to give pleasure undefiled.

The water-color drawings are still more beautiful. Flooded with color, the hillsides under their veil of olive trees, the irregular colonnaded streets of Treviso, the fountains, chapels, and canals, are evoked for us with a breadth and distinction of touch, a fineness of restraint, and a power of line that place these personal studies with the admitted masterpieces of water color. The strong greens and blues are laid directly on the white paper, the balance of the tints is admirably preserved, all the detail swims in light, and the frank and simple treatment proves accuracy of observation and command of a medium genial to its friends, prone to betray its foes.

A Decoration by Kenyon Cox.

In the Vanderbilt Gallery of the Fine Arts Building is a decoration by Kenyon Cox recently completed for the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol at Madison, Wis. The subject is "The Marriage of the Atlantic and the Pacific," and it is treated symbolically in a sufficiently conventional manner. At the right of the composition are the great European nations, France, England, Germany, &c., grouped under the olive branch held in the hand of America, a bit of prophecy that one may hope soon to see fulfilled. At the left are Japan, Hawaii, and the dark-skinned East.

The color is strong and at close range appears crude, but there is no question that in the course of time the skin which forms on oil paint will modify and soften its present splendors. The individual colors tell as shapes within a definite outline, but the modeling is full rather than flat, and suggests a ponderable reality. In a word, the artist has been content, as usual, to follow a practice of the Renaissance masters, to form his groups into a balanced architectonic arrangement, their lines and the masses of color playing into a carefully considered scheme, their types subordinated to the large pattern of the design. The fact that he is content thus to build his work on the basis of the best that has gone before and to let his originality take care of itself with the future, blinds many an observer, a little drunk with the May wine of modernity, to the extraordinary beauty of the work.

A tendency toward monumental weight in the forms easily diverts the mind from the palpitating life of the outline. We have all more or less forgotten that a continuous line may tremble with vitality, so accustomed have we become to the broken masses and interrupted contours of the "Impressionist" school. But no one sitting observant before this noble decoration can fail to get from it a high degree of pleasure. No one to whom sensitive draughtsmanship is a delight can fail to rejoice in the drawing of such details as the hands of the various actors in the stately pantomime. The hand of the gracious figure impersonating France, for example, is supremely lovely, and throughout the minor forms have an elegance and harmony, a beauty of inner structure, that puts to shame the carelessness predominating in contemporary work.

There is for the itinerant critic a sense of humiliating safety in saluting the decorations made by Mr. Cox as among the best work of modern times. No pride attaches to discovering his obvious merit. But it is worth while, perhaps, to emphasize them as decorations of our own period that will sustain with dignity all changes in fashion and gain by the inevitable action of time upon the materials used.

Decorative Panels by Carton Moorepark.

In taking his subjects from the aviary Mr. Moorepark has avoided giving himself over to ornithological zeal. His birds are birds, he says, because they have to be birds, not because he wishes them to be. Camels or lizards or hippopotami would suit him as well if they were tasteful enough to provide him with the same magnificent patterns of line and color. The panels on view this week and through the remainder of the month, at the Folsom Galleries, are primarily decorations. The birds themselves, iron-gray vultures, snowy pelicans, parrots and pigeons, the backgrounds of foliage and tree trunk, the flower-spotted foregrounds all play into a large and firmly constructed design; but the painter is fortunate in his models. Any one familiar with the great zoos of our own country and Europe knows what superbly decorative material they contain; and in spite of Mr. Moorepark's indifference to naturalistic detail, his eye for character omits none of the salient features presented by his subject. His panels show not only the decorative silhouette, but differences of texture in the plumage and skin, and beautiful modulations of tone and color. No other artist has treated this kind of material in just this way, but novelty is the least of the merits to be found in Mr. Moorepark's work.

Portraits by Zelma Baylos.

Zelma Baylos is showing at the Sherwood Studios a collection of her recent works, portraits for the most part, and all touched with originality and personal feeling running at times into an excess of symbolic fantasy, as in the Mme. Recamier type of lady who reclines on a couch visited by itinerant butterflies. The artist's intention is clear, but one is permitted to prefer that half of the picture which shows two slippered feet, charmingly painted, a gilded piano and a vase of meadow flowers, as exquisite a bit of still life as the galleries can show. Another painting that has a particular charm is a portrait of a sleeping baby's head seen against ethereal white pillows with a background of a park view, a wholly unusual version of a favorite theme, and sturdy in modeling and color. A portrait of Rits Fornia in Pagliacci is a handsome affair, boldly designed and forcibly expressed in a pungent color scheme. The drawing of the lower part of the body is not wholly convincing, although possible enough, but the head has in full what the portraits of most public personages lack, spirit and personality.

Exhibition at Montclair.

A new loan exhibition has opened at the Montclair Art Museum, and will continue until Oct. 31.

It comprises a choice collection of etchings by Whistler, wood engravings by Timothy Cole, and colored prints by S. Arlent Edwards, the latter collection loaned by Mr. William B. Dickson, and one picture by Mr. Charles Warren Eaton. The etchings and wood engravings are for sale.

Good Work of the American Federation of Arts.

An excellent showing was made by the traveling exhibitions sent out last year by the American Federation of Arts, over $31,000 worth of pictures having been sold. Apart from this financial return, which to the artists at least is the most interesting feature of the scheme, the good effect of carrying art to places in America where art never grew is continually manifest. There are indications everywhere of a rapid spread of interest in matters of aesthetic significance.

The Federation is now planning to send out (Nov. 1) an exhibition of portraits by notable American painters, which will begin at Worcester, Mass., and work its way to Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Providence.

A Homer Martin for Worcester.

The bulletin of the Worcester Art Museum announces the acquisition of Homer Martin's "Twilight Near Honfleur," a small but fine work, and a study of the scene, which is painted from a different angle in the picture owned by the Century Association, New York. A writer in the bulletin calls especial attention to the color, which at a distance shows a prevailing tone of sombre greenish gray, but seen close at hand resolves itself into many colors not spotted impressionistically, but placed with carefully blended strokes, giving the effect of a bloom over the whole canvas.

Portraits by Harrington Mann.

At the Scott & Fowles Galleries is a small collection of portraits by Harrington Mann, nearly all of which represent the artist at his high-water mark of accomplishment. One of the least "important" in point of size, complication of subject, and so forth, is perhaps the gem of the group. It shows a little girl holding a rabbit. The sensitive modeling of the face and the discrimination of textures and surfaces are above criticism. The hair falls in soft childish curls which take soft lights and then floats in that intangible silken mist which taxes the skill of the most dexterous brush. Mr. Mann has used his instrument lightly and with perfect command of its resources. The result challenges comparison with the masters of portraiture.

The portraits of the seven children of T. C. Dennehy, which are done on two canvases with one Queen Anne sofa serving the two groups, are hardly so compelling from the aesthetic point of view, but as frank, wholesome portraiture of frank, wholesome types no fault can be found with them, and the grouping against the picturesque background of old English needlework is extremely felicitous.

A portrait of Mrs. F. Skiddy von Stade, daughter of Charles S. Steele, has the place of honor on the walls and is an effective version of a brilliant subject. Other portraits are of Mrs. Devereux Milburn, Master J. Shubert, Jr., Miss Dorothy Duveen, and of the artist's wife holding a rose to her lips.

Sinews of War.

Willis—Is your wife going to make another social campaign this Winter?

Gillis—Yes; you ought to see the war orders she has placed with the dressmakers.

The Result.

Gillis—The invention of a naval aeroplane run by electricity that will sell for $460 f. o. b. Detroit.

The Chief Factor.

"What you want to do," counseled the druggist, as he handed an aged darky his medicine, "is to take a dose of this after each meal."

MUTATION.

(This poem was found fluttering along the beach before a nor'easterly breeze in the vicinity of the Home for Aged and Infirm Boobs near Bedlamville, N. J.)

THE crickets now no longer crick;
The thickets once so lushly thick
Are thinning out.
The trees are looking sore bereft
Because their little leaves have left
And woofing zephyrs icy-weft.
Now whiff about.

The equinoctial knocks along
And croons his equinoxious song
Of gloomy glee.
The nightingale with voice so gay
Has piped her pipping pipe away
For some more soft pippritious day
In times to be.

The tadpole sheds his twirling tail
And bounds about the shallow shale
To froghood hep.
And little veals right on the job
About the purling pastures bob
Their heads, and hearts, and heels athrob
And full of pep.

The oysters hoist their souls from sleep,
And from their cloistered cloisters creep
With loud hurrah,
Because the Summer's spell of fear
Is over and they may appear
To greet chill Autumn with a cheer
Of 'R, 'R, 'R!

So whirls the whizzing world away.
Today soon fades to yesterday,
Time fuges so.
And over all we hear the plaint,
From rich and poor, from sinner, saint,
"How soon the is becomes the ain't Down here below!"

IT IS RUMORED THAT—

Secretary Daniels is considering a proposition to purchase 10,000 pairs of padded gloves to enable naval officers to box the compass without skinning their knuckles.

THE CRITIC ANSWERED.

"Congratulate me?" said Jinks. "What on?"

A WORLD OF DREAMS IN LEADING NOVELS

An Idyll of Youth in Mrs. Burnett's Latest Story and a New Use of the Reincarnation Idea in Jack London's "The Star Rover"

THE LOST PRINCE. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. Illustrated. The Century Company. $1.35 net.

VERY many years have passed since Ponce de Leon went on his famous search for the Fountain of Youth, and during those years, although the story of the fountain has persisted, it has come to be regarded as a mere myth. Yet every now and then we meet with some person, man or woman, who has quite evidently discovered and drunk of those wonderful waters; among them, Mrs. Burnett surely holds a foremost place. For it is the very essence of youth and romance which so charms us in most of her work, and especially in this latest tale, "The Lost Prince." It is a story for young people of all ages from ten to a hundred, a story fresh and gracious as Spring time, full of those high and clean and simple ideals which, however cynics may jeer, have never lost and probably never will lose their power over the imaginations and sympathies of men.

Although the scene is laid principally in modern London—that London that existed before the war—there is a certain mediaeval flavor to the narrative. And the imaginary land of Samavia, whose rightful King is "The Lost Prince" of the title, has something both of the Middle Ages and of the Orient. Mrs. Burnett's new hero, Marco Loristan, is a 12-year-old boy, living with his father and a devoted old servant, Lazarus. When the story opens they have just arrived at the dingy London lodgings which are to be their abode for a brief period. Marco knows that they will remain there only for a brief period because, so far back as he can remember, they have never resided long in any one place or country. The existence led by the three is a strange and most mysterious one. They are very poor, so poor that they do not always have enough to eat, and yet there is invariably a certain stateliness in their mode of living; people unknown to Marco come to visit his father, usually at dead of night; and the elder Loristan works hard and steadily for some end, of which his son knows only that it is concerned with the welfare of Samavia, that beautiful, unhappy little country which, torn between two rival factions, is given over to disorder, bloodshed, and a general misery, in strong contrast with its ancient, joyous past. But that past is distant now 500 years, and had ended before Ivor, "The Lost Prince," disappeared.

The legend of this Lost Prince who one morning had walked out into the sunshine, "singing softly to himself the old song of Samavia's beauty and happiness," and was never seen again, is the leading motif of the book. Marco learned the tale by heart when he was very young indeed—even before he swore upon his father's sword the picturesque oath of allegiance to Samavia. And it was the fact that the Rat had read and been enthralled by the history of this lost Prince Ivor that first drew the two very dissimilar comrades together. For Marco was straight and strong, well bred, well taught, and of gallant bearing, while the Rat was a hunchback, his legs "small and crooked," a mere waif, it seemed, of the London streets, though his father had been a gentleman and a scholar before drink destroyed him, body and soul. The Rat's first greeting to Marco was the throwing of a stone at him, yet the day was to come when these two, the "Bearers of the Sign," were to travel together over many lands, immune from the perils which would have beset men because they appeared to be only two shabby boys, "blown like grains of dust through Europe." But they accomplished their mission bravely and well, until at last they stood with the old priest in that subterranean cavern where the "Forgers of the Sword," leal descendants of those few shepherds and mountaineers who had reason to believe that their "Lost Prince" had not died, but lived and left a son, held the meetings which later formed the nucleus of the "Secret Party."

It is probable that the reader will not take even so long as did the Rat to discover the very thinly veiled secret of the identity of Stefan Loristan, but that will not in the least mar his enjoyment of the tale or weaken the thrill of its climax. For the fascination of the story lies in the exquisite style, and the romantic, idealistic spirit with which it is instinct. It is said that certain aspects of the ancient history of dauntless little Serbia gave the author her first idea for this romance, the name of the imaginary Samavia being intended to convey a hint of its relation to the real Serbia; in the light of this statement, there is a caustic, though doubtless unintentional irony in one at least of the book's episodes—that which describes its hero's adventures in Vienna. He is a hero whom every child will surely envy; what could be more thoroughly delightful than being the trusted agent of a "Secret Party," plotting the overthrow of wicked and usurping rulers and the restoration of a monarch who is a model of all the kingly virtues and a very perfect gentle knight to boot? While to those older in years but young enough at heart to respond to the bugle call of chivalrous romance, this book should provide a welcome opportunity of escaping for a time from the problems and difficulties, the bloodshed and horror, of the actual world about us. A tale of faerie, touched with mysticism, instinct with romance and courage and the spirit of consecration to an ideal of splendid service—this is Mrs. Burnett's latest volume. And the fitting sign and symbol of it all is the gallant Prince who went singing out into the sunshine, thence vanishing forever from men's eyes, yet remaining in their hearts as a bright and shining figure, quintessence of all that is true and noble, high in aim and of good repute.

THE STAR ROVER

THE STAR ROVER. By Jack London. Frontispiece in colors. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

JACK LONDON has done something original in "The Star Rover," and done it supremely well. He has hit upon a new idea in fiction, and has worked it out with patient, painstaking art, at the same time striking a blow on behalf of prison reform. For once his passion for portraying cruelty and suffering has been enlisted in a cause that almost justifies it; certainly his indictment of abuses in the California State Prison at San Quentin, and of all prisons where the strait-jacket and the solitary cell are still used, will arouse abhorrence of the old barbarous methods wherever the book is read. But the artistic triumph of "The Star Rover" is in its new use of the reincarnation idea. It is upon this that the author has lavished his best work, carrying it through with a skill and plausibility that win the reader.

The story is about a condemned murderer, Darrell Standing, once a professor in a great university, for eight years under life sentence in San Quentin, now awaiting execution in the State Prison at Folsom because he made a guard's nose bleed. The convict himself tells what he endured in those eight years, five of which were spent in solitary darkness, often in the agony of the strait-jacket for ten days at a stretch. A fellow-prisoner, to curry favor with the officials, had invented a lie to the effect that Darrell Standing had smuggled thirty-five pounds of dynamite into the prison, and the savage jacketing was to make him confess its whereabouts.

Having thus roused a harrowing interest in the man, Mr. London gradually lets the reader into the method of his plot. Darrell Standing, like the fakirs of India, learns to escape the pain of the canvas jacket by willing "the lesser death," a state of suspended animation, in which his spirit leaves the unconscious body and goes roving among the stars—or, rather, among the scenes of his own former incarnations. For, though the body dies, he says the spirit lives on in new forms, and he has discovered a way to recall the stored-up memories of his adventures through the ages. The result is a series of short stories made on a new plan, punctuated by tortured awakenings when the warden and doctor bring the prisoner's body back to consciousness, and all woven into the larger theme of the approaching gallows.

Indomitable courage is the supreme trait of Darrell Standing in all his incarnations. Once he was a roystering Count in mediaeval France, and so we have the story of his duels over a lady fair. Once he was a boy in an emigrant train crossing Utah to California, and so we have the story of the Mountain Meadow massacre by one who died there. In another of his experiences he had been an English sailor, shipwrecked in ancient Korea, and had married a Princess of the blood, only to wander with her as an outcast for forty years as the result of a Court intrigue. Again he was a Norse soldier in a Roman legion under Antipas, and a close friend of Pilate. He was in love with a wonderful Jewess, and was forced at last to choose between losing her and doing his duty to Rome by helping to crucify Jesus. This chapter is well done. So, too, is the story of a castaway on a barren island, who lived eight years on seal meat, and went through some things that might have daunted Robinson Crusoe.

"The Star Rover" is essentially a man's book, all virility and no sentiment, with passages of more serious thinking than we are wont to expect from popular novelists. The attack on prison abuses is carried through with evident sincerity of purpose. At the same time it is skillfully made to serve the artistic ends of the story. The book will not suit all tastes, for there are painful things in it; but it has imagination, skill, freshness, and must stand with the best of this author's works.
